To Our Agents.

[illegible] Mineral Waters. The use of [illegible] has been rapidly increasing for the past two years. Those who use them, and those who have visited the springs and learned the advantages of visiting the wells and springs whence they come, can at once understand the immense trade which has grown up in these waters. Messrs. Frotscher & Hart, druggists, 49 Canal street.

Furniture.—We have known [illegible] for years, and have traded with him, and had work done at his establishment during the time of [illegible] guarantee, and are glad to recommend him as an industrious, honorable and reliable dealer. We have never had any cause of complaint. See his advertisement.

Louisiana Cotton Drill.—The cotton planter who has no knowledge of the advantages of the above named cotton drill should send at once to Mr. Richard Frotscher, Nos. 15 and 17 Dumaine street, for a circular. We are glad that this valuable implement has fallen into such hands. See his advertisement in another column.

Choice Family Groceries.—Fresh, choice and cheap groceries may be had at the establishment of Mr. D. Moriarty, Nos. 249, 251, 253 and 255 Poydras street. Mr. Moriarty has a good name among his patrons. See his advertisement in another column.

Levy Bros., 580 Magazine street, pay particular attention to country orders for dry goods.

THE SOAP ENTERPRISE.—We insert a card of the awarding committee of the Southern States Agricultural and Industrial Exhibition, held in this city last week, by which all the premiums are awarded to our enterprising and excellent fellow-citizen, James H. Keller. The mammoth establishment of Mr. Keller, with its varied and ingenious appliances for manufacturing soaps, is a monument of well-directed enterprise, and no small credit to Southern manufacturing.

SLATE roofing composition and building paper are increasing in demand, and the public is very much indebted to our fellow-citizen, Edward Thompson, Esq., for valuable improvements in the roofing, as the result of his own discoveries, and for the introduction of superior qualities of the latter. We call special attention to his advertisements of these useful articles.

FLASH, LEWIS & Co.—The card of the above firm is to be found in our columns this issue. They have heretofore maintained a good reputation in business circles, and their card is entitled to attention. It is but just and reasonable that those who have seen damaging allusions to the firm should defer their opinion till they have an opportunity of being heard.

I HAVE used one of the Infallible Fire Kindlers for twenty-two months, have had it lighted more than twenty-five hundred times for use or to exhibit, and it burns better now than it did the first six months I used it, and I think that within the next five years nine-tenths of the householders in the United States and Territories will use it, and it will cross both oceans, and will be found in the palaces of the rich and the hovels of the poor of every country on the globe. I mean just what I say.—Dr. J. T. Moore, Starkville, Miss.

WE call attention to the new advertisement of Cullet's Pocket Inhaler that appears in another part of our paper. Every one afflicted with nasal, throat or lung diseases is interested to learn of a new remedy, especially when it can be obtained for a small outlay.

WE ALL the attention of our readers to the notice of Burnett's preparations under the head of this class Notices. Burnett's Cocoaine for the Hair and Burnett's Vanilla are highly spoken of by competent judges.

TRIAL.—St. Bernard coal delivered [illegible] Mobile Electric Light Co., Limited, [illegible] Agent for this paper, [illegible] 22 Carondelet street.

The attention of parties wanting [illegible] is called to the advertisement of the Bellefonte Manufacturing Company, in another column.

To Our Friends and the Public.

IT IS a fact that we are charged with a violation of the revenue laws having been circulated to our prejudice, and having received from our correspondents throughout the South and West a large number of letters of kindly interest and sympathy, we desire in this manner to correct any erroneous impressions that may be entertained by our friends or customers, especially those outside of this city, who are not advised of the exact nature of the charges made.

These charges embrace only technical irregularities in the keeping of our books, and are such as might be brought against any business house dealing in goods subject to revenue tax.

We have not been charged with defrauding or attempting to defraud the government of its just dues.

At the proper time we will be able to vindicate ourselves, and establish our entire innocence of the charges against us.

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that wolf-bane of our American people, dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that this above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of your humble servant,
A. E. D'ALHERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.
GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Cramps with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.
E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Grangers of Georgia.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the liver, but of the whole system.

How to Dye Mosses, Grasses, Etc.

It may interest some of our readers to know how the Germans dye grasses, etc., in a great variety of unnatural colors; but we have our hopes that few people will follow them in the use of blue moss and other equally tasteless artificial productions. The following notes are from the Neuste Erfahrungen und Erfindungen:

To Dye Moss.—Green: Boil one-half pound of alum in four quarts of water, and dissolve one-half pound of finely-triturated mineral blue in it, and a dark green dye is the result. Or a very beautiful green dye may be made with indigo carmine and picric acid, adding water to reduce it to the desired hue. As picric acid is rarely to be had of uniform strength, the exact proportions cannot be given. The same dye may be used for grasses.

Black: Two ounces of logwood in one quart of water, one-half ounce of alum, and three ounces of copperas, the whole boiled together, and the moss dipped into it while hot. Or two parts of logwood and one of Fleabane, thoroughly boiled together, and a little green vitriol.

Red: The best way to make this color is to boil as much red aniline in rain water as will produce a pretty red. The dye should be hot when the moss is dipped.

To Bleach and Dye Everlasting Flowers.—Bleaching: Put a number of flowers, which have previously been placed in a warm chamber to cause them to open, in a vessel containing a solution of chloride of lime, one half ounce of soda, and two quarts of water. Cover the vessel, and leave it as it is, in a moderate temperature, for four or five days. During this period the flowers first change to an orange color and afterward to a bluish white. As soon as these changes show themselves take the flowers out and pour off the fluid, and fill it up again, using this time only one ounce of chloride of lime and no soda. Let the flowers remain in this until quite white, subsequently drying them in a warm oven.

Dyeing.—Carmine: One-quarter loth about two drachms of Munich lac, one-quarter quint (about one-half drachm) ultramarine blue, dissolved in twelve loth (about six ounces) of warm water. Rose: One-quarter quint of extract of safflower, dissolved in one quart of cold water. Dark blue: One loth indigo extract in a quart of water. Cornflower blue: One-half loth blue aniline, two loth spirits of wine, in one quart of water. Violet: One-half loth violet aniline, with the same proportions of water and spirit. Light blue: One-half loth Prussian blue, dissolved in a quart of water. Dark blue: One loth of catechu, boiled in a quart of water. Light green: One-quarter loth picric acid, and one-quarter quint of indigo in twenty loth of alcohol. Black: as given above. Orange: Three loth of borax in two quarts of hot water, leaving the flowers to steep for some time.

The dyes for grasses, etc., are made in the same way.

To Preserve Asters.—Place a vessel containing muriatic acid and sulphur in a suitable air-tight box, and hang the asters in it.

To Bronze or Gild Grasses, Etc.—Take a solution of equal parts of oil of turpentine and copal lac, and immerse the grasses, such as Anthoxanthum, Briza, etc., and before they are quite dry strew them over with gold, silver or copper bronze. All other colors for grasses are put on as follows: Dip the grass in a very thin solution of gum arabic, and, when they are partially dry, lay on the color with a soft pencil.

To Dye Asters, Etc.—Take a pint of water and add an eighteenth part of sulphuric acid, and dip the newly-cut flowers into it singly, afterward hanging them up to dry in an airy, shady place, when they will assume a beautiful red color. Zinnias, pansies, pelargoniums, fuchsias, etc., may be dipped in a very thin gum and afterward dried, care being taken that the leaves retain their natural position. Where the leaves happen to stick together they may easily be parted with a penknife.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

POLE BEANS WITHOUT POLES. J. B. Root, of Rockford, Ill., tells, in his Garden Manual, how he succeeded last year in raising Lima beans without poles. One fifth of an acre was planted in hills, six seeds to each, eyes down, and when the runners were three feet high, if straightened up, the tips were flipped off, thus inducing prompt development of all blossoms, and a set of side shoots which clung to each other and formed a sort of cone. No more pinching in was practiced for fear of too late a growth. The result was that the plants seemed content with a less stature, and a large proportion of the settings matured. The crop was fully one half greater than ever before, and more than a half greater than that on poles the same season. Hereafter he will confine himself to this method, with the difference that a fifth set deep will be used for each hill. This will furnish something for the vine to cling to in a wind, and the top of the lath will be a good point at which to nip the vine. It is added that if the crop is raised for ripe beans there should be several pickings, as some of the pods touch the ground, and in a wet time the beans become stained. While others are advised, on the strength of this experience, to try the plan, it is "recommended that with this, as with all new things, to 'hasten slowly,' and never risk an entire crop on an experiment."

SOME HINTS.—A correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph offers the following hints:

It don't pay to rest thin wheel tires. The chief strength of the wheel lies in the rim.

There is great economy in soaking the felloes of business wagon wheels with raw linseed oil; it will preserve the wood and save the necessity of frequent tire setting—an operation to be avoided.

When you buy a new fork or hoe, good farming requires that you oil the handle. It costs but a trifle, and your tool looks better, and will wear longer.

Good harness kept soft with neat's-foot oil is a credit to the owner and a comfort to the animal that wears it. Soft harness is stronger than a dry, hard one. It is slightly elastic and bends without breaking.

Horse stalls are usually made too narrow. A tired horse needs room to turn over and stretch his limbs; fatal injuries come from confining spirited horses in short, narrow stalls. A friend had the best one of a valuable span kicked by a strange horse in a short stall, which broke a leg. A pair of handsome Western horses were brought to take the place of the bays, and one of them in one year knocked down a hip, perhaps by the narrow stall, and is now of trifling value.

HOW LONG WILL BUTTER KEEP?—A series of observations were recently made in the milk-testing establishment of the municipality of Thun, with a view of determining the time during which butter could be kept fresh under varying conditions. The following are certain results obtained, and seem to be worthy of consideration by housekeepers as well as dairymen: When kept in a warm, living-room, at a constant temperature of 59° Fahrenheit, the butter became rancid after one day's exposure; and in a well-ventilated dairy, at a temperature of 54° Fahrenheit, after four days. In this latter apartment, the temperature remaining at 53° Fahrenheit, but the butter being surrounded with water, the change did not occur till a lapse of thirteen days, which was increased to fifteen when the butter was submerged in the cold water. These tests were made with pure, fresh butter, but when the sample was pressed and slightly salted it was found that in the well-ventilated dairy, with the temperature at 53° Fahrenheit, it remained sweet for twenty-nine days.

THE CULTIVATION OF TRUFFLES IN FRANCE.—Large tracts of land in the south of France, not hitherto cultivated, are being planted with the kind of oak-trees beneath which truffles are generally found, and it is expected that each acre of this land, lately sold as low as $25, will yield a crop of truffles worth $100 per year. The experiment has already been tried in the department of the Vaucluse, and in the course of the last twenty years one hundred and fifty thousand acres, which were absolutely unproductive, have been planted; and are yielding a rich return. The cost of plantation, which is borne by the commune, does not exceed twenty francs per acre on hilly ground, and, though rather greater in the lowlands, the crops are proportionately heavier. Acorns only are planted on the hilly ground, but saplings of five or six years' growth, placed in rows about forty feet apart, are found to answer best in the lowlands. The ground between the rows of trees is planted with vines, which, after five or six years, repay the cost of the plantation and its culture.—Journal of Chemistry.

STEP PUDDING.—Take one cup of suet, chopped fine; one cup of raisins, chopped; one-half cup of English currants; one cup of syrup, one cup of sour milk; two even teaspoons of soda. Mix the suet, raisins and currants well into the syrup; then add the sour milk; next the soda, pulverized and well mixed in a handful of dry flour. Stir until it begins to foam, then add enough flour to form a stiff batter. Steam one and one half hours. For a large family double the quantity will be required, and it should be steamed two hours. Serve hot.

Sauce for Pudding.—One half cup of butter, one half cup of sugar; beat those together with one heaping tablespoonful of flour. Pour into it a little at a time, stirring all the while, one pint of boiling water, and let it simmer on the stove a few minutes. Add one teaspoonful of lemon extract, and the juice of one lemon, or a teaspoonful of lemon sugar.

NEW ORLEANS, June 30, 1875.

MR. EDWARD L. HALL, Sir: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metallic surfaces. It contains no poisonous substances by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder, as well angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Very truly,

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP,

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtues and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat is as well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, it is a truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

DR. WM. H. HOLCOMBE,

HOMŒOPATHIC PHYSICIAN,

130 Canal Street, New Orleans, La.

PRESCRIBES by letter for those who would like to try the Homœopathic treatment, but who cannot conveniently consult the physician. A plain statement of cases, with or without symptoms, will be promptly considered, and medicines, with full directions forwarded by mail or express, charges prepaid.

The following diseases especially may be considered, and sometimes even cured, after ordinary school treatment has entirely failed:

Chronic Headaches, Neuralgia, Vertigo, Hysteria, Epilepsy, Nervous Troubles, Catarrh, Stunning Cough, Asthma, Affections of the Throat, Skin Diseases, Dyspepsia, Constipation, Long Complaints, Chronic Dysentery, Disturbances of the Kidneys, Menstrual Irregularities, Obstinate Intermittent Fevers and Scrofula.

TERMS—$5 for the first prescription and diagnosis, and $3 for each subsequent prescriptions and medicines for the same case. Remittances can be made by money, postoffice order or registered letter. Address —Pere Secchi has just published the results of his examination of solar protuberances and spots from April 25 to June 28, 1875. He finds that the daily number of protuberances and spots steadily diminished. The great metallic eruptions ceased when the large spots disappeared—the protuberances diminished in height. The faculæ and spots disappeared from the poles and were confined to the zone of the equator. These observations are in every way confirmatory of the views of Lockyer, Stewart and others, that there is a very close connection between the violence of a solar disturbance and the size of the sun-spots. It may appear, on further study, that the connection is just as close between the solar changes and the peculiar and long-continued rain of the past spring and summer.

—Few bodies are more easily electrified than collodion. With the least friction by the hand the membrane adheres to the fingers. If a collodion sheet be fixed, like a flag, to a glass tube, and waved in dry and hot air, it is electrified. Other uses of collodion sheets, here mentioned, are in experiments on polarization of light, on colors of thin films, on diathermacy, on vibrations in acoustics. M. Gripon prepares these sheets by dissolving 1.5 to 1.7 grains gun cotton in a mixture of 50 grains alcohol and 50 grains ether. The collodion is poured on a glass plate after the latter has been breathed upon so as to receive a coating of moisture. When, after some hours, the collodion is dry, the plate is put in water; and a sheet of paper having been applied and attached to the collodion by the edges, the film is drawn off with the paper.

—The remarkable and unique collection of the Thames valley remains of extinct British quadrupeds, formerly belonging to Sir Antonio Brady of Stratford le Point, has been acquired by the British Museum. This magnificent series of specimens consists of elephants, rhinoceroses, deer, oxen, etc., which have been discovered, during the last thirty years in the Ilford marshes. It is stated to contain remains of no less than one hundred elephants, referable to two species—the mammoth (Elephas primigenius and the E. antiquus—which are represented of every age and size; of eighty-six results of rhinoceroses, of three species—R. megarhinus, R. leptorhinus, and R. tecthorhinus; of some five hundred specimens, constituting fully one-half of the collection, of various ruminants, as the stag, bison or ox, including seven examples of the great Irish elk and fifty of the reindeer. The Thames valley hippopotamus and the British lion are also both represented.

—One of the most beautifully-printed memoirs that has ever appeared in this country, both as regards the illustrations and text, is the elaborate work on fossil butterflies, by Mr. S. H. Scudder, the first of the "memoirs" of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. It will be remembered that it was presented by Mrs. Thompson, of New York, to the association as a publication fund, which has been used in printing this memoir. The plates were engraved in Europe, from exquisite drawings, made in part by the author, now confessedly the leading authority on fossil insects. The work is based on specimens existing in the museums of France, Germany, Switzerland and England. Fossil butterflies and moths are exceedingly rare, as these delicate creatures occur in fine-grained stones, etc. Indeed, while the insects comprise nearly four-fifths of the animal kingdom, few have been preserved as fossils, and these few so fragmentary a state as to present great difficulty to the student.

—At a recent meeting of the Philadelphia Academy of Natural Sciences a walnut was exhibited from Mr. Heidekoper, of Meadville, Pa., which had all the appearances of being a hybrid between the butternut and black walnut. The fruit was of the ovoid form of the butternut, but the smooth surface of the black walnut, being entirely devoid of visibility. The walnut seems to make natural hybrids with some facility, there are instances on record of hybrids between the English walnut and the black or American species. It is perhaps a wonder that when plants hybridize so readily the forms do not multiply, and break down the characters that define the species. But Mr. Naudin's views are correct—that hybrids return in a few generations to the form of their female parents—we find a beautiful provision for guarding against any of permanent effects from these hybrid accidents. At the same meeting a hybrid fruit was exhibited between two species of Pyrus P. sinensis and P. communis the common garden pear.

—A new French method of drying sandy molds is alleged to effect an average saving of some fifty per cent. The old plan of using sheets of iron, which a three coke tro is maintained involves a great loss of calorific, the drying is effected only by radiation, and in a space where the air has generally free access. The new method appears to be very simple. Near the most convenient end of the mold a hole is dug in the ground, and in this is placed a coke stove, communicating with the mold by means of a short horizontal pipe, through which all the gases of the coke pass. On the other end of the mold is mounted a chimney pipe, the upper end of which is carried out through the roof or side of the foundry; and in the chimney is a damper to regulate the draught. The stove being thus partly or entirely sunk in the ground, there is little or no radiation from it, and little loss of heat and fuel, as all of the gases enter and pass through the mold, and are at once carried away by the pipe into the open air. Thus in certain cases requiring, by the ordinary method, but of coke, only one-fifth of that quantity is needed.

He has hard work who has nothing to do.

MONETARY.

We have to report a quiet and easy money market. Borrowers with first-class collaterals find no difficulty in obtaining what they require at from 8 to 10 per cent., while second-class paper is neglected. Money is abundant, but lenders are very cautious.

The report of Mr. I. N. Maynard, superintendent of the New Orleans Clearinghouse, exhibits the condition of our associated banks on Friday last:

VOL. 22. NEW ORLEANS, THURSDAY, MARCH 16, 1876. NO. 11.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, March 7.—The jury in the $6,000,000 suit against Tweed and a verdict for the people for $1,-000,940 principal, and $187,177 Inter-est from September, 1870.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—To-day upon Maj. Richards, chief of police, made a formal arrest of Belknap, and brought him into the police court. Belknap was accompanied by his counsel, ex-Senator Carpenter, who said they waived examination and were prepared to give bail for Bel-knap's appearance before the court. Judge Snell fixed the amount at $25,-000, when the parties returned to ar-range the bail. Mr. Belknap showed by his movements during the short time he was in the court room that he was much depressed in spirits, covering his face with his hand and sighing deeply.

Pinchback is defeated. Edmunds' amendment was adopted by a vote of 38 against 29.

Christiancy, Edmunds, Morrill, of Vermont, Morrill, of Maine, and Sabbock, Republicans, voted with the Democrats.

LOUISVILLE, March 10.—Capt. J. Bent, of Mount Sterling, Ky., arrived in Louisville to-night with specimens of flesh which fell last Friday in Bath county. The flesh covered two acres of ground, resem-bled mutton, and left traces of blood on the trees and fences which were touched by the falling flakes. The skies were clear, the sun shone, and only floating clouds were visible at the time—two P. M., March 3. Samples of the flesh have been pre-served. That brought to Louisville was given to Prof. J. Lawrence Smith, a well-known scientist, who says it is no doubt animal flesh."

LOUISVILLE, March 11.—In regard to the shower of flesh in Bath county, Prof. J. Lawrence Smith, the scien-tist, says in his analysis of speci-mens examined:

"In my mind this matter gives in-dication of being the dried spawn of batrachian reptiles, doubtless that of the frog. They have been trans-ported from ponds and swampy grounds by currents of wind, and have ultimately fallen on the spot where they were found. This is no isolated occurrence of the kind. I have come across several in the course of my reading. The only one I can now fix the date of is recorded by Schoolcraft as occurring in Ire-land in 1865."

CHICAGO, March 11.—A tornado swept from Quincy to north Iowa and Wisconsin. One thousand houses, mostly those of lead miners, were al-most totally destroyed. Forty-one persons were killed outright. Later reports give the names and reduce the number of killed to nine. Many persons are fatally hurt. Twenty-six buildings were totally destroyed.

WASHINGTON, March 11.—Mr. Goodell, chairman of the committee, is quoted that he has information that will form the basis of one of the largest investigations of this session. The War, Postoffice, Justice and Ex-terior Departments are involved. Goodfield had a consultation with the chairman of the Committee of Ex-penditures of these departments, last-ing two hours. The investigation will be a joint one of the four com-mittees.

ST. LOUIS, March 13.—Accounts of the tornado which passed over part of northeastern Missouri on Friday say that the little town of Shrinkey, in Monroe county, was entirely de-molished. Two persons were killed and twenty wounded—some severely. At Kensaler station, on the Mis-souri, Kansas and Texas railroad, two children were carried away by the storm and have not yet been found. The wife and child of Alfon Johnson, residing four miles from Hannibal, were instantly killed. The destruction of houses, barns, out-buildings, fences, stock, grain, etc., has been very great. The tornado was about two hundred yards wide.

QUINCY, ILL., March 13.—The fol-lowing is a summary of the late storm in Missouri: Seven persons killed, seventeen injured, three or four of them dangerously, some thirty houses blown down, and immense damage done to orchards and timber. It is estimated that in Monroe and Ralls counties one thousand miles of fencing was prostrated.

JACKSON, March 13.—The Senate, by a vote of 32 to 4, found Lieut. Gov. Davis guilty as charged in the articles of impeachment, one colored and five white Republican senators voting in the affirmative and four colored in the negative. The finding will be formally announced on Wed-nesday.

FOREIGN.

ROME, March 6.—King Victor Emanuel opened the session of the Parliament. His speech treated of the prosperous condition of the coun-try, perfectly friendly relations with Foreign States, and the recent visits of the Emperors of Germany and Austria; expressed pride at the prog-ress and efficiency of the army and navy.

In connection with the Bosnian insurrection he says: "I have deem-ed it expedient to participate in the negotiations between the great pow-ers with the object of aiding in the re-establishment of tranquillity with the East, and assuring the welfare of the Christian population. The Sul-tan received the proposals favor-ably." The remainder of the speech treats of domestic matters.

PARIS, March 7.—The final returns of the ballots show that five Repub-licans have been elected in addition to those previously reported. The Republicans in the Chamber of Depu-ties will command three hundred and fifty votes. They will find op-posed to them from eighty to ninety ardent Bonapartists. It is expected that this situation will lead at first to warm debates, but will energeti-cally restrain the Bonapartists in the country by administrative vigor.

HAVANA, March 9.—It is reported the late serious engagement disheart-ened the insurgents. Their leader, Betoncourt, and several of his ad-herents were killed at Cartagena on the third.

BOMBAY, March 10.—The Serapis, with the Prince of Wales and suite on board, sailed from this port for England. After calling at Malta, where a series of grand receptions are awaiting his royal highness, and also at Lisbon, the Prince of Wales is ex-pected to reach Portsmouth about the twentieth of April.

ST. PETERSBURG, March 10.—A war broke out between Japan and Corea on Wednesday. Japan de-clared war and has blockaded the Corean ports.

LONDON, March 11.—The Times has a leading article on exposures of official corruption in America. After a review of the facts as far as known here, it concludes: "On the whole, we cannot but feel that even though the investigations or prosecutions now pending should prove futile, the impression on the public mind must be that a nice sense of honor and propriety does not prevail in the official world of the United States."

LONDON, March 13.—A postscript edition of the Daily News, just issued, contains the following:

Alexandria, Egypt, March 12, 9.45 P. M.—On Wednesday night last the Abyssinian army crossed the River Decassa Dekka and attacked an en-trenched camp of the Egyptian army, when severe fighting took place. On Thursday the Abyssinians were re-pulsed and retreated to Adowa. King Kassa, the Grand Vizier, six chiefs and five thousand Abyssinians are reported to have been killed in the trenches. Prince Passen and Gen. Loring escaped unhurt. Rimtal Pa-sha was wounded. The Egyptian losses were heavy, but their victory was complete.

Northeastern Arkansas.

MR. EDITOR: Our country in northeastern Arkansas is rising slowly from its monetary and polit-ical depression. The times are yet very hard, and the people much de-pressed.

Our preachers are at work in good earnest. As spring opens congrega-tions increase in our open houses of worship, and the religious interests of the country revive. One of the great wants of our section of the work is good houses of worship.

The assessments for the preachers this year have been more liberal and better paid than for years past, which makes preacher and people feel better, giving fresh vigor for the work, which gives reasonable hope for success. If things move as they now promise we may hope for a year of success throughout our work.

Our Bible work; to which I was assigned, is not doing so well. Arkansas suffered so much with her political troubles that the Bible work was suspended for a time, and has not been fully reorganized. Efforts are now being made to re-organize and put the work under new rules, which, it is thought, will secure better success than the former course of operation. If we succeed in this new arrangement we may hope for more permanency and a better degree of success. This new arrangement, however, will likely cost a year or two of time and ex-periment. The Bible work in this field is one of much importance. The State is now receiving a heavy immigration, much of it poor and destitute. This gives the Bible work among us a prominence that should not be overlooked, but receive early attention.

J. M. STEEL.

HARRISBURG, ARK., March 4, 1876.

The second session of the Charity Hospital Medical College of New Orleans closed on the seventh in-stant, when the degree of doctor of medicine was conferred on the fol-lowing-named gentlemen: Edwin M. Schlater, Louisiana; Rodger Atkinson, Texas; Benjamin P. Wil-son, Mississippi; Thomas J. Cochran, Mississippi; Jessie M. Ledbetter, Mississippi; D. H. Von Rohren, Louisiana; F. Alex. Klebs, Louisi-ana; William R. McAlpine, Ar-kansas; J. Prestly Fletcher, Ar-kansas; James Troope Hamilton, Arkansas. Those receiving special mention for merit were Messrs. Wil-son, Klebs and Ledbetter.

The same clergyman relates an-other story of still another frightened youth, who in reply to the question in the Episcopal marriage service: "Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" replied with an answer to one of the questions in the order of baptism: "I renounce them all; and, by God's help, will endeavor not to follow or be led by them."

The Bible in the Public Schools.

There is a great diversity of views among evangelical Christians in re-gard to the justice of omitting the reading of the Bible in schools sup-ported by the public taxes, and in-tended alike and equally for the children of Protestants and Roman-ists, Christians and Jews and infi-dels. The newspapers, the indexes of the popular sentiment, are di-vided. Among the Presbyterian pa-pers, the Herald and Presbyter, which claims the largest circulation in the Northern Presbyterian Church, has taken a bold stand for the omis-sion of Bible reading in the public schools. The other journals of that church favor its retention, some more and some less strongly. The New York Methodist, and perhaps other papers in the Methodist Church, favors the omission. We do not see the Northern Baptist papers. The Christian at Work and Christian Weekly defend the reading of it, while the Independent and Christian Union oppose it. Most of the poli-tical papers oppose, but some favor the reading. Another sign of the division of public sentiment is the fact that Gen. Grant, bidding for an-other presidential term, proposes an amendment to the constitution of the United States, that abolishes the reading of the Bible in the public schools; and Speaker Blaine, also bidding for the presidency, offers an amendment which is not intended to forbid the reading of the Bible in the common schools. We do not in-tend to discuss the question, which is not a practical one in many por-tions of our territory, but merely to lay before our readers some of the views which are being continually ex-pressed by our Northern exchanges. The New York Evangelist has best presented the affirmative side:

"Shall we, then, prohibit by law all religious teaching in our public schools? This is accepted by many wise and good men as the easiest solution of the question, and much may plausibly be urged in its favor. But there are likewise grave difficul-ties attending it, to some of which we can only just revert in a few words:

"1. It involves a radical change in our whole theory of education. It makes it in effect to be merely secular training, without any essential moral and religious elements. Such a the-ory cannot be carried out in a family, or even in a college. It is opposed to the whole tradition of education in all civilized countries. It divorces intellect and character.

"2. It is favored by only a small portion of the American people. The Roman Catholics, as a body, are wholly opposed to it. All the de-nominations in the country would prefer, in itself considered, the old way, if it were thought practicable. It is theoretically favored by those who are indifferent or hostile to re-ligion—not by them alone, but by them most urgently.

"3. There is really no great practi-cal difficulty about having some re-ligious services in our schools, with-out the least degree of 'sectarianism,' in any reasonable or historic sense of that word. There are portions of the Scripture the same in all the ver-sions: there is the Lord's Prayer; there are the Ten Commandments, etc.

"4. The reasons urged for exclud-ing all recognition of religion from our schools would lead, by inevitable logic, to the abolition of all Sunday laws; of all chaplaincies; of any re-ligious observances in the army and the navy, and at West Point, etc.; of all public days of thanksgiving; of all oaths in courts of justice; of every act or word which implies a recog-nition, by the State, of God or religion, or a future life. The State must become atheistic.

"5. The same reasons, resting, as they largely do, upon the supremacy of the individual conscience, like-wise carry us into the sphere of mor-als, as well as of religion. A Mormon may be 'conscientious' about his plurality of wives; a free lover about the laws of marriage; a communist about the right to property. What are we going to do about their 'con-sciences?' We must either alter all our laws to suit them, or we must vote down their consciences by our consciences.

"6. And while running these risks we are, so far as the Roman Catholics are concerned, worse off than before. They are, to say the least, as much opposed to 'godless' schools as they are to our present system. They would still insist, as a political measure, more strenuously than ever upon the breaking up of our whole public school system.

"We should still have to meet them and vote them down on that issue. Is it not easier, is it not better, to meet them now fairly and squarely on the question: Shall our present public school system be preserved?

"The issue they present is not Bible or no Bible in schools, nor secular schools or no schools, but the support of Roman Catholic schools by the State, or the breaking up of the whole public school system.

"And it should also be borne in mind that in this matter we are dealing with a new phase of the papacy, with an infallible Pope, with Vaticanism in politics. This ques-tion of the public schools is one of many questions; it is the entering wedge of a system which claims su-premacy over the wide domain of faith and morals. Church property, the rights of the priesthood as against the civil tribunals, the canon law as against the civil law, are all involved. Under the Vatican decrees the Pope can make any dogma about the State and State laws immediately binding on every Roman Catholic 'conscience' all over the world. Are we to yield to the papal conscience on every point it chooses to make? Let us rather honor and obey our own consciences; for only so is our repub-lic safe."

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC SIDE

of the question is presented by the Catholic World:

"If some Catholics in particular localities have supposed that the ex-clusion of the Protestant Bible from the public schools would remove the objection to them as schools for Cath-olic children, they have, in our opin-ion, fallen into a very great mistake. The question lies deeper than read-ing or not reading the Bible in the schools; in one version or another. Of course our church disapproves the Protestant version of the Bible as a faulty translation of a mutilated text; but its exclusion from the pub-lic schools would by no means re-move our objections to them. We object to them not merely because they teach more or less of the Prot-estant religion, but also on the ground that we cannot freely and fully teach our religion and train up our children in them to be true and unwavering Catholics; and we deny the right of the State, the city, the town or the school district to tax us for schools in which we are not free to do so.

"We, of course, deny the com-petency of the State to educate, to say what shall or shall not be taught in the public schools, as we deny its competency to say what shall or shall not be the religious belief and discipline of its citizens. We, of course, utterly repudiate the popular doctrine that so-called secular educa-tion is the function of the State."

THE SECTARIAN VIEW.

The best statement of the argu-ment in favor of the omission of the reading of the Bible is given by Dr. J. G. Holland, in the February num-ber of Scribner's Magazine:

"Much as we desire, for the sake of the moralities which it inculcates, the presence of the Bible in our pub-lic schools, we can easily see that there can be no successful, or even rational, fight with the Catholics in their attempt to get hold of the pub-lic moneys for their own denomina-tional education until we come to the practical conclusion that the State has nothing to do with religi-ous education. To the Catholic, to the Jew, to the atheist—and we have the children of all these in our public schools—the compulsory reading of the Bible is a grievance, a hardship, an oppression. It is one of the things we cannot reason about or reason against. These people cannot be made to see that the authoritative morali-ties of the Bible are all that we are after, and that their children will be the better for them. To the Catholic, the Bible, even in the Catholic ver-sion, is a book only to be presented and interpreted by the priest; to the Jew, the New Testament contains the record of a false Christ; and to the atheist and infidel the whole book is but a bundle of lies and su-perstitions.

"One thing is certain, viz.: that the claim of the Catholics for a por-tion of the school money, to be ex-pended in schools, established and carried on in the interests of their church, involves the existence of public schools. The moment a single claim of this kind is granted the whole public school system—the edu-cation of all the children as a meas-ure of State policy—will go by the board. If the Catholic has this privi-lege, the Protestant will claim it, the Jew will claim it—even the infi-del and pagan will claim it; and they will claim it with just as much right as the Catholic. The claim is utterly and forever inadmis-sible. It is so preposterous that it can hardly have respectful considera-tion. Whether it is crowded, in some quarters, simply for the pur-pose of showing Protestants that their position on the Bible matter is untenable, we cannot tell; but surely the Catholics cannot seriously sup-pose that their claim for a division of public moneys can be granted. They ought to know that, if the question concerning it were put to the American people to-day, it would be decided overwhelmingly against them.

"Practically the great question which the President has presented to the American people concerns the Protestant far more than it does the Catholic. If such an amendment to the constitution as he proposes should be effected in all its details, the Cath-olic will gain all that it was ever in his power to gain for his church from constitutional provision or leg-islative action, viz.: the exclusion of the Bible from the public schools. The scheme for a division of the pub-lic funds was never practicable—was never even possible. It is not likely to be possible.

"And yet it is undoubtedly true that, so long as the Bible is a reading book in the public schools, not only the Catholic, but all unbelievers in the Bible, will have a reason for complaining that the public funds are used to teach their children a reli-gion which they do not believe in. What shall we do about it?—we whose reverence for the Bible was imbibed with the milk of our Christ-ian mothers—women who cherished the book as the sweet, wholesome, veritable word of the great God? It will be hard for us to say that it must go out of the schools. Well, would we be willing to see the Douay Bible put in its place? No? Why not? Are we willing to force our version upon the Catholics when we would not submit to have their ver-sion forced upon us? Would we care to have only so much of the Bible in the schools as the Jew would accept? No? Then what right have we to force upon the Jew that part of our Bible which he will not accept?

"But we are not going to have much of a struggle on these questions if we settle them now. If we do away with the grievance of the Catholic we do away with his claim; and we mark out for Catholic and Protestant alike the path of peace to walk in side by side. It seems to us that the President's recommendations are not only worthy of the uni-versal consideration which they are receiving, but that they are destined, sooner or later, to pass into the con-stitution of the country. The chil-dren will be educated by the State; the churches will look after their re-ligious training; and neither Christianity nor infidelity, in any form, will be inculcated at the expense of the State."—Christian Observer.

In this table we have taken the amounts for 1874 from the annual missionary report—amounts for 1875 are those reported by the secretaries of the several Annual Conferences to the book editor. We have made no corrections except in the case of the Louisiana and Western Confer-ences, the treasurers of which have given us information which has led to a change of figures. A few more pastors' reports have reached our room. After giving time for correc-tions from treasurers of Conference boards we will give such additional reports from charges as belong to either of our tables, together with the corrections suggested. A treas-urer who suggests a correction must, however, give us an itemized state-ment. Notwithstanding the hard-ness of the past year financially, we are permitted to rejoice in the fact that twenty four out of the thirty-six Conferences (the Baltimore has not reported as yet) have made a gain—in most cases a signal gain—on 1874. That this is due to a healthful growth of zeal for missions is further indicated by the annexed list of Con-ferences which have given to foreign missions a larger amount than they have contributed to the destitute regions within their own territory. We know that the world looks upon this stretching out to distant fields as fanatical quixotism; we are equal-ly positive that the spirit of Christ-ianity, the command of the Master, and the inspired commentary on that command to be found in the Acts of the Apostles, alike sustain us in pressing these foreign fields upon the church as the only true missionary work.

CONFERENCES WHICH GAVE TO FOR-EIGN MISSIONS LARGER AMOUNTS THAN TO DOMESTIC.

Conference.	Excess.
North Carolina	$2 26 62
North Alabama	140 50
Louisiana	846 45
North Mississippi	141 55

Arkansas	166 80
White River	160 45
Little Rock	341 55
East Texas	618 40
West Texas	100 67

We should assuredly not do less for the home work, but more for the mission fields. It would be both a curious and profitable supplement to the above figures if we could by any means know the relative com-pleteness of the culture of the terri-tory within the Conference limits composing this list as compared with other Conferences. Without the facts at hand we venture the prediction that preachers who have been faith-ful stewards of the missionaries sent to foreign fields have not neglected to be abundant in labors in the most obscure corners of this home work.

We have found the man who was ever ready to go or send equally ready to do or die.

Assistant Secretary.

Plymouth Church Matters.

On the evening of March 6 Henry C. Bowen, editor of the Independent, appeared before the church in obe-dience to its summons. His exam-ination was begun by the question as to the time when he heard of facts injurious to the moral character of Henry Ward Beecher. Mr. Bowen offered to read a written statement in reply. He was interrupted, but at the request of Mr. Beecher he was allowed to proceed. He concluded by making the following proposition:

"I will to-night, at this moment, meet Mr. William McKay, Mr. E. H. Garbutt and Mr. S. V. White alone, or in the presence of Mr. Beecher, if he desires it, in an adjoining room, and there give to them the facts in my possession which long ago con-vinced me that Mr. Beecher is guilty. I only require that these three gen-tlemen shall preserve the names and identifying circumstances absolutely secret, and I shall make no other re-quest of them or any action in the case, leaving that to their discretion and to yours. The pledge of secrecy is not required of Mr. Beecher. He may state as much as he pleases of what I say."

Mr. Beecher declined the offer unless counsel could be admitted also. Mr. Bowen insisted on his offer, and, as Mr. Beecher would not accede to it in that form, it was dropped. Thus again the bottom facts were prevent-ed from coming out when they were within the reach of the church.

Charges were then preferred against Mr. Bowen, and the church ad-journed.

The following day the statement of Henry C. Bowen was published in the daily papers, giving the reasons for his belief in the guilt of his pastor. The document has produced a pro-founder impression upon the public mind than any statement or event since the trial of Mr. Beecher by the civil court. The circumstances he recites, the gentlemen whom he in-troduces, the letters of Oliver John-son which he quotes, and the decla-rations of Joseph H. Richards, are all susceptible of examination to con-firm or disprove Mr. Bowen's state-ment. By these he or Mr. Beecher may be easily acquitted or convicted, and Mr. Bowen declares his readiness to go before any properly constituted court and submit the testimony. If Mr. Beecher and Plymouth church now desire the bottom facts in the case to be brought to light, to the com-plete elucidation of the mystery, they have only to indict Mr. Bowen for slander, and the whole thing will be revealed.—New York Observer.

MR. EDITOR: We have entered on our work on the Shreveport district with renewed energy, backed by a determination to do the work, God being our helper. Our presiding elder is at his post, and says he needs at least six-horse power to do the work that has been assigned him. We are very much pleased with him, as he comes to us with a smile on his face that makes his visit pleasant. He is doing the work of an evangelist. We propose to bring our quarterly meetings back to their original state or design. Now, Mr. Editor, don't think we are croakers when we talk of going back, instead of forward. Onward is our watch-word. We think if our Quarterly Conference could get more of the life and spirit of Christ in it we would have a large increase in the finances of our church; for in proportion to a man's spirituality is his liberality. The spirit of Christ opens the iron-bound doors of the covetous heart and makes men liberal. Oh! that we may, as Quarterly Conferences, feel the great weight of souls, and may every one result in a revival of religion as well as of finances! Then we may expect the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to be placed in every Methodist family.

We all feel grateful to our beloved Bishop McTyeire for his wisdom and discretion in his appointments.

Yours in Christ,

J. M. FRANKLIN.

NEW IBERIA, LA., March 4, 1876.

The African contribution to the Centennial will be interesting to many. It comprises two boxes with copper ore and specimens of smelted copper, a box with manganese, coal and saltpeter, three boxes of minerals of various kinds, three cases and a bundle with sections of timber, and specimens of wooden articles used in wagon-making, a case of barks used in tanning, a case of everlasting flowers, a box of leaf tobacco, a case with vegetable drugs and household medicinal remedies and snuffs, two bags of wheat in grain, two casks and bags of wheat flour, one case of preserved fruits, one case with pre-served fruit, tomatoes and crawfish, together with aloes, berry, wax, starch and beeswax, three boxes of soap, one box with shells of the pearl oyster, six bundles of skins, one case of leather of various qualities, twelve packages of wool, thirty-three cases of still wines, seven cases of brandy, one case with a collection of antelopes' horns, two rhinoceros horns, a leopard's head, and skins of a lion and leopard, a case with table and work-box of ornamental woods, knasses, Kaffir weapons, implements and articles of dress, melon seed, or-naments and samples of cochineal, and one case of books, photographs, maps, etc. The total commercial value of this unique collection is given at $3,135, the articles being, of course, admitted free of duty.

Consciousness of unbelief is a sign of actual faith. Infidels are never troubled with unbelief. Dead men never feel cold. Frozen feet never ache. And a soul given up to ungod-liness, and bound hand and foot in sin, has no trouble with unbelief.

WAITING.

LINES DEDICATED TO MRS. E. M. KEITHEN, BY HER FRIEND AND SISTER IN CHRIST, MRS. M. A. DAY.

I am waiting, only waiting
For the silver cord to break,
That my ransom'd, blood-wash'd spirit
May of endless life partake.
Life that knows no pain or sorrow,
One not troubled with the dread
Of what is to be to-morrow
Love eternal loves the theme.

I am waiting, only waiting
For angelic hands to come
And throw their loving arms around
And bear me to my heavenly home—
To the house of many mansions
He prepar'd for me, for all:
Sinner, you may come to Jesus;
Will you not accept the call?

I am waiting, only waiting
Lov'd ones gone before to meet:
With our harps we'll praise the Savior,
And his glorious love repeat:
Yes, repeat the wondrous story
Of the cross—the bleeding Lamb—
His ascension into glory,
That we may glorify his name.

I am waiting, only waiting
For the Shepherd's welcome voice
"Come, ye blessed of my Father,"
Enter heaven, with all its joys;
Joys of heaven—who can conceive them
While they tabernacle here?
Christian, you and I believe them—
Their foretastes cast out every fear.

I am waiting, only waiting
For this dust to turn to dust,
That my soul in full fruition
May be number'd with the just:
Fit companions—"just made perfect,"
Pure in heart; the sanctified—
They are those who, once imperfect,
Wash'd their robes in Calv'ry's tide.

I am waiting, only waiting
For a glimpse of Jesus' face;
Blessed Jesus, loving Savior!
Take me into thine embrace:
Give me but the humblest posture
Near thy side—thy feet in heaven?
Then from the weakest of thy children
Eternal praises will be given.

Women Preachers.

MR. EDITOR: Your kindness in permitting Mrs. Sadler's third paper to appear in the ADVOCATE secures me the privilege of being heard once more. Besides, I am entitled to another hearing, as she introduces new matter in her last (of February 24.) The new matter I refer to especially is that concerning the woman of Samaria whom Jesus met at the well of Sychar. Mrs. Sadler alleges that she was "commissioned to preach the gospel."

Where is the record of the fact? Is it found in the "infallible standard?" No. What does the record say about this supposed commission? "Jesus saith unto her, Go, call thy husband, and come hither. The woman answered and said, I have no husband. Jesus said unto her, Thou hast well said, I have no husband; for thou hast had five husbands; and he whom thou now hast is not thy husband; in that thou saidst truly. The woman saith unto him, Sir, I perceive that thou art a prophet." Were these words of Jesus designed as a commission to preach the gospel, or were they not designed to convict her of her many sins? The latter seems to have been the design from the effect produced, for she said: "I perceive that thou art a prophet." "The woman then left her water pot"—for she was convicted, not pardoned even as yet—"and went her way into the city, and saith to the men, Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did; is not this the Christ?" Was this announcement of hers preaching the gospel? Her talk to the people of her city was mainly about the fact that Jesus knew and could tell her of all her sins. She was profoundly astonished, and greatly confused in what she had to say to the men of the city. This is clearly implied in what "many" said unto her: "Now we believe, not because of thy saying" alalian, from laleo, to make a sound, utter words; to speak, talk, address, converse, to prate, babble, divulge, blab, talk idly or inconsiderately, etc.—Groves;) "for we have heard him ourselves, and know that this is indeed the Christ, the Savior of the world." And yet this woman is claimed as a commissioned preacher of the gospel. Besides, she is claimed as an apostle! Then Christ had thirteen apostles before Judas fell away—twelve men and one woman; and thirteen after, counting Paul. Where was this woman-apostle when Christ ascended to heaven? The names of eleven are given in the first chapter of the Acts—Judas having died—but not a word is said about this woman-apostle! Where was she on the day of Pentecost, when Peter stood up "with the eleven?" In what part of the foundations of the church or temple is she mentioned? John says there are twelve foundations, and these are the twelve apostles, including Paul. But where is the thirteenth or woman-apostle foundation?

Another new thing Mrs. Sadler introduces in order to make out a case of a woman preacher is that of deaconess. The Apostle Paul instructs the church at Rome to "receive" and "assist" "Phebe, our sister, which is a servant (deaconess) of the church which is at Cenchrea." The deacons and deaconesses of the primitive church were first set apart to the service of tables, and not to the ministry of the word. To relieve the apostles of table service, "seven men" were set apart to this ministry or deaconship, that "the apostles might give themselves "continually to prayer, and the ministry (diakonia) of the word." This shows that there were in the early church deacons of the table—caring for widows, orphans, the poor and sick—and "deacons of the word." Phebe was of the table deaconship, and therefore not of the word, and hence not a preacher.

As Mrs. Sadler still lingers about the meaning of prophetess or prophesy, a few remarks may not be amiss. In the eleventh chapter of First Corinthians the Apostle Paul uses the word prophesy as synonymous with pray. He says: "But every woman that prayeth or propheseth with her head uncovered dishonoreth her head." As he advances with his theme he drops the word prophesy and uses only the word pray. "Judge in yourselves: Is it comely that a woman pray unto God uncovered?" "In the fourteenth chapter the apostle settles this matter by not allowing a woman to preach, although she might pray, having her head covered. Hear him: "Let your women keep silence in the churches; for it is not permitted unto them to speak" (lalein,)

Mrs. Sadler has thus far failed to give an instance, clear and satisfactory, of a woman preacher. All she mentions are constructed cases. Now, sir, I boldly affirm that the word "preach," in the English or its equivalent in the Greek, cannot be shown in the Bible as used to express the ministry of a woman. Christ said: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel." He did not say: "Go ye into all the world and prophesy the gospel."

Most cordially do I accept the apology of Mrs. Sadler, and trust and pray that, although strangers to each other, our Scripture rambles and discussions may be profitable to us and others, and that she may live a happy life and die a triumphant death, and that we, and all, may meet in our Father's home on high.

ANGUS DOWLING.

LAWRENCEVILLE, A. A., March 3, 1876.

Grandmother.

The grandmother! A soft smile and vague grief linger as we think of grandmother—the soft, gray hair banded from the brow; the dear eyes which are ever so lovely, for we have never seen anger in their depths; the patient resignation of the mouth, with its lines of sorrow and age. Well we remember the fireside corner which she occupied, and where we have often unburdened our hearts, and found her sympathy and love a soothing balm, for her heart is full of all that is purest and best of life—God's love; and there is no fire or passion now to mar the flow of her sympathy and love. In her eyes there are gleams of heaven's own beauty; in her saintliness she seems so near heaven that she brings it nearer to us sin-tossed ones of the earth. For awhile we enter the twilight of her influence, and hearken to the teachings of lips which have learned their wisdom from experience. Many were the beautiful flowers scattered along her pathway, and she has preserved the sweetness of each in the chalice of her heart, and their fragrance extends over her life and ours. The grandmother who occupies the quiet corners of homes, with helpful hands often assisting to unravel some of the tangles in the skein of life, with never a word of her own sorrow—of the graves in the dim recesses of her heart. At times we seem to forget that grandmother ever loved or suffered, that her life was not always thus so even and unselfish in its flow. She stands upon the shores of the river of Time, watching the surging mass of humanity—not participating, for the fire and love of action has gone with the years which are past; watching and waiting for the boatman who will carry them across the river to her home. We knew not of that fresh and glowing brightness of her young spirit; but we have the last best essence of her spirit in the dear grandmother whose presence is so peaceful, whose influence ever tended to lead us upward. Not with idle hands or empty hearts do the grandmothers thus stand upon the shores of Time, but ever helping and shedding their love upon those whose path lies up the steep and weary ascent of life. Often we hear grandmother say: "There is home, 'where the weary are at rest;'" and it comes to us in the noontide heat, when the spirit is bathed in anguish—grandmother's words: 'a "home, 'where the weary are at rest;'" It is for the younger generation to hear the stern battle cry of the world, to act thrilling dramas upon the world's stage; but grandmothers are the connecting links of the past. The years have left their shadows upon them, and the deepening twilight of the valley of the shadow of death is around them, albeit they generally shed more brightness and happiness about them than many who are in the full glory of life. Grandmother! Her pure and holy influence, the tears that her kind words have checked, and with the softening touch of age upon the heart of youth—she grows more beautiful with each year, which tells that she is fast leaving us, for her spirit increases in beauty and power, and her prayers are ever winging upward for those she loves. Memory goes to a hall in the past, and there is a dear, sweet grandmother, whose influence yet lingers over a wild and wayward life—the sweetest old face, with something of the sunset's glory emanating from the spirit within—a noble spirit, true and pure in every word and deed. In looking at her face it brought a remembrance of the nobility of the old Roman mothers, though unequaled by that of our Christian mothers. Her home was surrounded by flowers, which she loved and planted; honeysuckles embowered the gallery; violets, heliotropes and thousands of others made the place a thing of beauty. She was naturally an artist in her love of the beautiful; the verbena boxes, with the ivy clambering up and around them. In one end of the gallery were her geraniums and flowers that she loved best. This home was always redolent with the perfume of flowers, and that other fragrance of love for all human kind, which fills the heart and life with beauty; for grandmother soothed all quarrels, and was "Peace, be still," to all discordant elements. Hers had been a life of much sorrow and trial; but after the cloud had passed away, she was as cheerful, as helpful as ever. Her strength was in the Lord, and he never forsook her. Her nature drew fortitude and patience from his love, which had shielded, although it had not spared her many bitter trials. As her long life of trial and much sorrow is thought of, through all the scattered reminiscences and broken links, there comes a thought which is beautiful, which is all we can wish: "He giveth his beloved sleep." He has given her sleep and rest, and forever with the sacred and lovely things of life will dwell the memory of grandmother.

RENA.

Was Saul Converted?

MR. EDITOR: The life of Saul, taken as a whole, is a wonderful medley of contradictions. If he was arrogant, rash and cruel, he was also modest, prudent and generous. If he pursued his best friend with the fury of a demon, he also wept with the tenderness of a child. If he skulked away under cover of darkness, to inquire of the hag at Endor, he had banished from his realm all who had familiar spirits.

But the events of his life, taken in their order of time, show him to have been a good and worthy monarch at first; but, having cast off the fear of God, he gradually became the slave of jealousy, duplicity and the most malignant tempers.

Saul did not aspire to the throne of Israel; for when he was chosen by lot, Samuel brought him forth from "among the stuff," and, presenting him as king, said: "See ye him whom the Lord hath chosen." "The Lord chose him, and converted him too; for Samuel said to Saul: "The Spirit of the Lord will come upon thee, and thou shalt prophesy with them, and shalt be turned into another man."—First Samuel x, 6. "Being turned into another man" is conversion of some kind, and, as the Spirit of the Lord did it, we conclude it was the right kind.

In the next verse it is said: "God is with thee." God is not with, but against a man whose mind is yet carnal and enmity against God." In the ninth verse inspiration declares that "God gave him another heart." The Lord chose him, was with him, gave him another heart, and covenanted with him that if he would keep the commandments of the Lord he would establish his kingdom upon Israel forever.—First Samuel xiii, 13.

What more could divine grace do than was done for God's first anointed king? But he did despite to the Spirit of grace, lost his kingdom, and his soul too. He became impatient, offered a burnt offering contrary to God's command, and was told that "his kingdom should not continue." Thenceforward his character is that of a wicked man; "waxing worse and worse." But God is long-suffering, and remonstrates with even the worst men. Saul disobeyed God in not smiting Agag, and God said: "It repenteth me that I have set up Saul to be king." Why? "For he is turned back from following me."—First Samuel xv, 11.

Inspiration sets forth his conversion and apostasy in language so plain that the wayfaring man cannot misinterpret it. Did he die an apostate? Let the Bible answer. The darkest night of his life was the night before his death. On the morrow he must meet the Philistines in battle. He needed counsel of God, and asked it; but he had so often rejected it when given that God now withheld it. He gave up his faith in God, and God gave him up to believe a lie. "He turned back from following God," laid aside his royal robes, went to a low, miserable sorceress, a confederate of the prince of darkness, to consult about the interests of God's people. Samuel says in the interview: "The Lord is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy."—First Samuel xxviii, 16.

The enemy of God, and God the enemy of him, he went forth from the dark cave of Endor, trusting in lying vanities, to lead the chosen people against the Philistines, and in disgrace and despair fell by his own hand. He may have received a final stroke (having mortally wounded himself) from the Amalekite who claimed to have slain him, or the Amalekite may have lied to David. In either case Saul committed suicide. "So Saul died for his transgression which he committed against the Lord, even against the word of the Lord, which he kept not, and also for asking counsel of one that had a familiar spirit, to inquire of it."—First Chronicles x, 13.

H. M. MOSS.

William Barksdale.

We take the following extract from the address of Rev. C. B. Galloway, delivered at the funeral of Mr. Barksdale, in Jackson, Miss., March 1:

I would not indulge in fulsome praise; but, that this sad occasion may be improved to the good of the living, I offer a few words of comment and exhortation. Our young friend and brother, whose untimely death we mourn, had many excellencies of heart and life. He had a high sense of chivalrous honor that gave him a gentlemanly dignity far beyond his years. His friendships were warm and generous. His attachments were strong and sincere. But of all his virtues there was one which shone with a heavenly beauty. He was a most thoughtful and dutiful son. His father, the late Gen. William Barksdale, having died a soldier's death upon the field of battle when he was yet a child, all the responsibility and care of his training devolved upon his widowed mother. Upon her he lavished all the wealth of his heart. She was his ideal of all spiritual excellence and charming beauty of character. For her his veneration became pathetic. Her pleasure was his highest joy. And when, some months ago, she was called away by the cruel hand of death, earth's greatest sorrow cast its dark shadow over his young, manly heart. But her peaceful memory was a perpetual balm to his bruised spirit, and he never ceased, even in his last moments of painful disease, to recount and exalt her many virtues. In these times of youthful recklessness and impatience of parental authority I would commend his worthy example. There is hope for that young man who delights to honor his parents and emulate their virtues. The first step to moral waywardness is filial disobedience. Here satan makes his first effectual attack and wins away the soul. Youthful disregard of parental restraint grows naturally into gross and wicked violations of God's law. But when a young man honors his parents, and seeks to promote their happiness, he has the foundation principle of obedience on which to build a Christian character of colossal strength and heavenly mold. Would that this jeweled virtue of our young brother were emulated and imitated by the youth of our country!

Willie Barksdale died a Christian. He found peace with God, and passed away in the blessed hope of immortal life. At his own request I received him into the church but a few hours before he died. He expressed a readiness to go, and said repeatedly that he had no fears. Let this soften the blow, and comfort the sorrowing hearts, of the large family bereaved by this sad affliction. After all, life is but a preparation for death. By faith in Christ may we all die the death of the righteous.

"The age of a cultivated mind," says an eloquent and wise and thoughtful author, "is often more complacent and even more luxurious than the youth." It is the result of the due use of the endowments bestowed by nature; while they who in youth have made no provision for age are left like an unsheltered tree, stripped of its leaves and its branches, shaking and withering before the cold blasts of winter.—Southey.

A little boy in W. came in to his mother one day, saying: "Mother, the boys out there are swearing, and I would not play with them, but came right into the house!"

"Swearing!" said the mother, who thought her child was perhaps too young to know what profaneness was. "What is swearing, my child?"

"Why, it is saying 'God' outside of their prayers," was the ready and original as well as just answer.

A rather parsimonious old lady called one day upon David Dreghorn, a well-known Glasgow fishmonger, saying: "Weel, Maister Dreghorn, how are ye selling your half salmon the noo?" David, being rather in a cross humor, replied: "When we catch ony half salmon, mem, we'll let ye ken."

They have a Rev. Mr. Hammer in Georgia, and when he preaches he hits the nail on the head every time.

OBITUARIES.

THE Rev. A. R. A. PURIFOY was born on the seventeenth of June, 1840. His father's name was McCarrel Purifoy, who was once a traveling preacher of the South Carolina Conference. His father located, several years before his death, for no other reason than that the church failed to give him support. Hope, as he was generally called, embraced religion at the age of about twelve or fifteen years, and was licensed to preach when young, and ordained a deacon, I think, in Greenville, Ala., in the year 1869, by Bishop McTyeire, and departed this life on the second of October, 1875.

When the war cloud spread over this land, and it was a time of trouble and uncertainty, and men's hearts were failing them for fear, it affords me great pleasure to state that he went in defense of his section, maintained his Christian integrity through the campaign, and returned home a faithful, true-hearted Christian.

Soon after the war he married a Christian lady—a noble woman; and, although she was of a different persuasion, she was never in his way of preaching the gospel which he so much loved, but would go with him cheerfully to his appointments whenever she was able to travel.

Bro. Purifoy was a good, safe and prudent minister. His piety was deep, solid and scriptural. He never made any compromise with the world, the flesh or the devil. His character as a Christian was well defined. He was one of our most laborious and useful ministers—never contented unless sinners were brought to Christ and saved by his ministry. He delighted in a genuine revival, and there he might be seen preaching, praying, talking, shouting and praising God. It will be seen in the great day, when the Master comes to make up his jewels, that many souls were brought to Christ and saved through his ministry. He was a great advocate of class and prayer meetings. He inquired for the old landmarks of Wesley, and desired to imitate him. He was a firm believer in all the doctrines of the Methodist Episcopal Church. He had a warm heart for all of God's people, and especially his brethren in the ministry. I was always edified and strengthened in hearing him preach. His Bible was his delight, and it bears the marks of service in it. The writer was at a camp meeting at the time of Bro. Purifoy's death. We were expecting him at the camp meeting, and were looking for him when the news came to us that he died suddenly the night before. While we were looking for him his spirit took its flight to the great camp meeting above. Bro. Purifoy preached on the Sunday before, and came home and worked all the week, and was in his usual health until Saturday at noon. That night, just before supper, he said to his wife: "Mag., I feel very bad. I will lay down awhile." When supper was ready she asked him to get up to supper, but he said he did not want any. His wife retired earlier than usual, and about eight o'clock she asked him if he had wound up the watch. He said: "No." When she returned she found that his breathing was not right, and she called him; but he did not answer. She took his arm and turned him over, and he died in a few minutes, without a struggle.

"Servant of God, well done;
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy.

"The voice at midnight came;
He started up to hear;
A mortal arrow pierced his frame
He felt, but felt no fear."

MOSES PADGETT.

ALLENTON, ALA., Feb. 17, 1876.

ELIZABETH, wife of John J. McKelthen, fell asleep in Jesus, at her home in Caldwell parish, La., February 23, 1876. She was born in Richland district, S. C., in October, 1825. Having been left an orphan at an early age, she was trained by a devotedly pious grandmother, who raised her in the fear of God, from which way she never departed.

She was married to Bro. McKelthen, in Neshoba county, Miss., July 7, 1846, united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South the same year, and the year following embraced religion, under the ministry of Rev. Andrew Day. She spoke of Bro. Day as one of those faithful men of God who not only preached the doctrine of holiness from the pulpit, but realized the blessed experience of it in his own heart, and taught it, wherever he went, by a holy life—the most successful preaching. Elizabeth, with other young converts, was exhorted "to go on unto perfection," and in three months after her conversion was sanctified wholly, spirit and soul and body, and from every appearance was "preserved blameless" till the Master called her home.

Her conversion was bright and satisfactory; but when entirely sanctified she had such a vivid view of Jesus by faith that in an experience of twenty-eight years, although opposed by the world and worldly minded professors, she never doubted the efficacy of the cleansing blood and his power and willingness to save from all sin.

The last seventeen years of her life were spent in what is now Caldwell circuit; and until last year she, with one or two others, stood alone as witnesses of the sanctifying grace of God. How her heart rejoiced that her prayers were answered, and that she lived to see more than a score of witnesses testify to the same blessing which she long enjoyed.

She had consumption for about eighteen years, but was not confined to her room till July, 1875. The writer visited her often during her confinement, and remained by her bed a good portion of the last night she spent on earth.

Holiness was her theme to the last, and while we had knelt with her in prayer for the last time (an hour or two before her death) her soul exulted in God, and when almost gone she tried to clasp her hands, and about her last, faint whisper was: "I'm happy."

Soon after this she went sweetly to sleep. Thus our sister lived, and thus she passed away. Not until the great day will we fully know the influence of the holy life of Sister Elizabeth McKelthen.

J. F. WYNN.

MRS. CARRIE F. WILKINSON, daughter of Amos and Martha Moore, died at the residence of Mrs. M. S. Thornton, at Lake, Miss., February 26, 1876. Sister Carrie was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the year 1857, during a meeting held at Noxubee, Ala., by Bro. James Glenn. Though tried in the "fiery furnace" of affliction, it only served to develop that meek, submissive spirit which characterized her Lord. She suffered for more than nine years with paralysis and heart affection. For five years she was unable to walk without the aid of her staff and the assistance of some one; but even that privilege was denied her during the last six months of her life, as she grew more and more helpless every day. She was never heard to murmur, but bore it all submissively for his sake. The church has lost a bright and shining light, and the fireside robbed of her genial smile and conservative influence. She was taken from the church militant to the church triumphant, where she sings the songs of the redeemed with our sainted mother, around the throne of God. Gentle, pure and good, patient and faithful to the end, she passed instantly into the realms of bliss, without a pang or a struggle.

"A smile still lingered on the lovely face.
The broken heart had passed from pain to heaven."

HER SISTER.

JOHN WILSON was born in Abbeville district, S. C., and died in Rankin county, Miss. (near Jackson,) January 18, 1876, at seventy-four years of age. He came to Mississippi in 1836, and from that time to his death lived in the vicinity of Jackson. Bro. Wilson had only been a member of the church about three years when death called him away from this life of probation. He was one of the few instances given to teach us hope of men in advanced years coming to Christ. For several years he was the victim of consumption, and, after a long and painful sickness, died at peace with God and all mankind. His testimony was clear and satisfactory. He trusted implicitly in Jesus. To his family and friends he spoke confidently of his heavenly hopes. The hymns of hope and faith sung around his bed gave him comfort, and to the sentiment he joined his heart's approval. May his bereaved family be comforted with the manner of his death and the faith which gave him victory.

DIED, in Jackson, La., December 29, 1875, WILLIE YOUNG, infant son of Benjamin Z. and Annie E. Swayze, aged one year, three months and fifteen days. Little Willie was truly a child of affliction during several months of the latter part of his earthly mission; but he is now gone to rest with him who said: "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God."

T. F. B.

JACOB L. AMACER, son of Joseph P. and Lizzie J. Amacer, was born near Amite City, La., November 3, 1873, and came to his death February 4, 1876, by the fall of a tree near his father's yard, while playing with his little brother and sister. How strange are the dispensations of Providence! Truly "in the midst of life we are in death." May the Lord bless his much-afflicted parents and relatives.

SHOW ME THY FACE.

Show me thy face—
A cheering beam
Of loveliness divine—
And I shall never think or dream
Of other love save thine.
All lesser light will darken quite,
All lower glories wane—
The beautiful of earth will scarce
Seem beautiful again!

Show me thy face—
The heaviest cross
Will then seem light to bear;
There will be gain in every loss,
And peace with every care.
With such light lent the years will fleet,
Life seem as brief as blest,
Till I have laid my burden down
And entered into rest.

Show me thy face—
And I shall be
In heart and mind renewed,
With wisdom, grace and energy
To work thy work endued.
Shine through the veil, Immanuel,
Until the veil removed,
In perfect glory I behold
The face that I have loved!

Bible Study.

From some cause or other it comes pass that those within and approaching adult years very generally ilt their attendance upon the Sunday school, and if they continue iptural study at all, continue it in ly a private, desultory way. I can agine, indeed, that many excuses ll arise in individual minds, and I n readily believe that a portion of em are in some wise valid. The k of absolutely perfect teachers, e lack of abundant leisure, the abnce of superabundant strength, the gret at taking so much time from e home—these and a thousand her reasons might be assigned, and cannot stay, even if it were my vince, to affirm of how much ight each ought to be. I, instead, ll back upon this profound convicn: that if the value and charm of ble study were appreciated, the ndernces would, for the most part, edily disappear. The gathering uld so be for joyful, mutual contation that the prerequisite of a rfect teacher would not be insisted. The attraction of the study itself ld be sufficient to command the e, and eke out the strength; and valuable results secured would deemed manifold compensation the domestic joys surrendered.

f course I might not, though I uld—and certainly I would not, ough I might—assign the foremost ce to aught save the simple idea the Scriptures as the way of perl salvation and the means of rsonal growth in grace. My heart uld belie my words if I were to sign either the most essential value the most essential charm to mying save that redemptive plan ich in the Old Testament and the w is the burden of discourse. It to us as to those who, without it, lost in the power and guilt of that the Bible comes; and its ry is that it offers to such the way release.

Therein, accordingly, I rest my an plea for the universal study of e Bible. To the Bible as the revelion of God and Christ—the disclosure of the soul's one way of salvation and spiritual blessedness—I would point all who hear me. In ese supreme relations it is unique, comparable, the very gift of God! here it reveals its sovereignty, and ere it rests forever as on a throne glory. How befitting, then, the ght of the whole congregation assembling on the Sabbath day, and the Sabbath school, to study the ok of life!

But while I pay such tribute to sacred oracles, and adoringly adre the apples of gold, I am reminded that even the picture also is silver, and deserves our reverent aise. It is evident that God has ght to make his word attractive in ys that appeal to every true sentient of our nature. He has adorned d enriched it with all which even e world counts rare.

or example, take note of the ainity which belongs to the biblical ion. Is it not the conclusion of nild and scholarly critics that these iptures contain the most ancient ms of truth known to men? Certly of the world before the flood, only consecutive and authentic tory is in these Scriptures; so that never would learn aught of the diluvian times must of necessity taught by the sacred volume. It a literal fact that the lyric poetry the Hebrews was in its golden age rly a thousand years before the e of Horace! The author of Mosastes discussed the problem of six hundred years before Socrates the dialogues of Plato, and the e song of Solomon is a thousand rs older than Ovid. The Book of ob, was a fragment of biography least fifteen hundred years old at date of the romantic literature Europe. The Book of Proverbs is re ancient by nine hundred years n the Treatises of Seneca. The re bulk of the prophetic literature the Hebrews was anterior to the gustan age of Rome, and even writers of the New Testament all of them, of more venerable iquity than Tacitus and Plutarch, Pliny the younger! And what, y, shall be said of the Book of ? If what to many seems probe is true, it is the oldest writing existing—at least a thousand rs older than Homer. It was already old when Cecrops founded ens. As long ago as when the rmans invaded Britain it was more e-worn than the name of Dolius, ar is to us to-day!

s it not presumably worth while as all to study a volume which nes down to us freighted with the tory and literature of such ancient es? Does it not appeal to our inctive reverence for the venerable, long-lived?

ut perhaps it would be felt that appeal was still stronger if it ld be known that this ancient d were altogether trustworthy in history, truthful in its biography national allusions. But come to earnest study, and you will find it is true to the letter. You will d that when its real statement is cerned, the facts as learned from other source lend corroboration. You know, for instance, that within the last fifty years there have been, in every direction, research most sifting, and inquiry most unscrupulous, and discovery most unprecedented. You know that much of what once passed for history is now no more than historic fable. Yet every clearing away of rubbish has been but a new revealing of the Bible's truth, and every fresh discovery has been a new gem in its matchless crown.

But if the book of books appeals to our love of the historical and ancient, so does it also to the universal sense of grace and beauty. Had I the time, I should delight to speak at length of the Bible in its literary lineness and its poetic splendor. I should like to show, in extended detail, how it is like God's revelation in nature—great foundations of granite, and then, above, the trees and flowers and gorgeous sky. Surely he is right who deems that, had God intended the Bible as a mere lesson-book of duty, he would have made it a volume far less various and enticing. "Unquestionably a few plain sentences would have sufficed to tell us what God is, and what he would have us do. A chapter of theology, and another of morals, a brief account of the incarnation and atonement, and a score of directions for the Christian life, might have supplied us with a Bible of simplest meaning and smallest size. But, instead, the Author of Scripture has made it attractive as well as instructive. Knowing what is in man, whom he would save, he has given a book which, in the supreme desire to reach the heart, does not disdain to captivate the taste. He has filled it with picture and poem and parable and proverb, and clothed it all over with superbest beauty."

But I would also call attention to the Bible as the book which has in it exhaustless practical power, and which to-day is influencing the vast preponderance of human thought and life! And this I say, not forgetting that the Bible has never included among its believers more than a comparatively small fraction of the race. Yet have you not observed what a singular faculty the Bible has of attracting to itself, either in friendship or opposition, the thinkers of the world? It is a fact that the books which have been written on the Bible alone are many fold more numerous than those of the Greek and Roman literatures combined. Sixty thousand existing commentaries upon the sacred Scriptures, or upon some portion of them! Certainly it must be admitted that the Bible has contrived to set all Christendom thinking, and has kept it thinking, for nearly two thousand years! It is perfectly safe to say that the Bible is read to-day by a vastly larger number of educated minds than any other book in the world. It is the verdict of history that in English form the Bible stands at the head of the streams of English conquest and of English and American colonization and commerce. Yes, it is the verdict of thoughtful observation that the Bible in its domination of the Western—that is, of the Occidental—civilization and progress is really dominating the whole globe. The dignity of manhood, the sacredness of individual being, the assured immortality of the soul, the brotherhood of the race, the fatherhood of God, the right of free inquiry, the despicableness of cant, the great ideas of social and political and moral reform—these all are emanations, in fact, from the sacred word. Aye, even infidelity gets its life-blood, the very breath of its nostrils, from the scriptural source. It could not live a day did it not borrow from the very book it assails enough to serve it for respectability and support. There is no positivism, nor baldest atheism, which does not draw from the Bible the secret of whatever real power it possesses. Out of the Bible our civilization grows, by it our laws and institutions are upheld; and the signs of both prophecy and Providence assure us that to it is some day to be given the civil and intellectual, as well as spiritual, dominion of the whole earth. May not such a book rightfully command the attention and the study of every mind? Can any one afford to treat it with neglect?

Book of ancient and historical lore? Book of absolute literary pre-eminence! Book of intellectual, practical sovereignty! And first and last and always, the book of salvation through Jesus Christ!—From a sermon by Rev. L. T. Chamberlain.

All regulation is limitation; and regulation is only another name for reasoned existence. And, as the regulations to which men must submit are not always or generally those which they have willingly laid down for themselves, but rather for the most part those which have been laid down by others for the general good of society, it follows that whosoever will be a good member of any social system must learn, in the first place, to obey. The law, the army, the church, the State service, every field of life and every sphere of action, are only the embodied illustrations of this principle. Freedom, of course, is left to the individual in his own individual sphere. To leave him no freedom were to make him a mere machine, and to annihilate his humanity; but, so far as he acts in a social capacity, he cannot be free from the limitations that bind the whole into a definite and consistent unity.—Prof. Blackie.

The living law of the gospel within us is as if the soul of music should incorporate itself with the instrument and live in the strings, and move them of their own accord, without any touch or impulse from without. Let us express this sweet, harmonious affection in these jarring times, that so, if it be possible, the world may be tuned into better music.

Fixed principles in criticism are useful in helping us to form a judgment of works already produced, but it is questionable whether they are not rather a hinderance than a help to living production. Criticism can at best teach writers without genius what is to be avoided or imitated.—Lowell.

Before and After Death.

It not seldom happens that we see with indifference things said in the papers of a public man while he is yet living, which, said on the morrow of his death, would seem to everybody a sort of sacrilege. The epithets, for instance, which might have been called about the late Vice President, within a fortnight of his decease, would have produced a general shock if uttered while his remains were being borne to his native earth. Before, there were unjust rancor and partisan taunts; after, extravagant panegyric. As one reads the glowing tributes of praise lavished over the grave of an eminent man gone, the forgetfulness of antagonism, the impulsive testimony of rivals and opponents to his worth one cannot but regret that he could not have enjoyed these sweets of praise while living. Death throws a retrospective halo over his career; how often does it occur to us that he was just as good when we thought ill of him, or failed to appreciate him, as he seems to us now that we glance back at him across the mysterious chasm! Yet, as we listen to the funeral orator or the lamenting poet, we have in most cases an uneasy feeling that the indiscriminating panegyric sounds somewhat hollow, constrained and insincere. We cannot wholly believe, as they would have us, that the dead were better than are the living—that the only nearly perfect men were they who died. Seldom is it, indeed, that we can enjoy to the full the sad luxury of unqualified eulogy—when our hearts may freely thrill at the glowing words of praise, and echo: "All this is true, at least, of this man." So it has come to pass that eulogy has become cheap and formal, and thereby loses its chief value as spurring to emulation and teaching by example.

The sadly-ludicrous contrast between what is said of a man the day before, and what after death, is a double lesson. We are too much in the habit of depreciating the characters, impugning the motives, exaggerating the weakness of our opponents. The hostile politician is too prone to charge dishonest ambition; the hostile critic to impute plagiarism and to magnify slips of the pen; the rival artist to suggest charlatanry. Is it not a sort of remorse which impels us, as soon as a man dies, to rush to the other extreme, and burden his memory with "every virtue under heaven?" Yet, for the dead themselves, the reparation comes just too late. They cannot enjoy the sweetness of praises from an enemy. It does them no good—does it the world? Might not the dead be really more appreciated, and their memory held more dear, if it were gently and tenderly hinted that they were mortal, that their virtues outshone faults? Meanwhile, might we not, with justice and right feeling, carry some what of our praise and kind expression to the balance kept this side of the grave? There is no nobler emotion than that which prompts a man to utter honest praises of an antagonist; and there are few, we hope, who do not read with pleasure, in a party paper or a sectarian review, a generous tribute to one with whose opinions or aspirations they are at war. Lord Brougham's feigning of death, that he might enjoy the eulogies of his contemporaries, was really a sharp satire alike on the excess of abuse heaped upon the famous living, and the indiscriminating flattery lavished upon the famous dead.—Appleton's Journal.

There is a proverb in Scotland that "Mony ane will gang a mile tae hear a sang that winna gaug a foot tae hear a sermon." A certain United Presbyterian church in the north of England was the scene of two evening meetings in one week, viz: an evangelistic meeting and a concert, or service of song. A Scripture reader in connection with the congregation, while on her diurnal rounds, came in contact with a dence old Scotchman, a member of the church. "Now, David," queried the good woman, "are ye comin' up tae the meeting this week?" "O, ay," exclaimed the canny Scot, "I mann come the meeting; for I ken some o' the folk that's gann tae sing." "Tuts!" exclaimed his interrogator; "it's no the concert, it's the ither meeting I mean." "O!" sighed the devout Scot, "I dinna think that I can come; for ye see I am sae tired at nicht that I can hardly stir aff my chair."

A Bengal missionary hired a boat for a water journey, and found that the Mohammedan boatmen spent much of their leisure time in singing the current filthy songs of the country. He gave them a new Bengali hymn book, prepared by a native pastor, having most of its hymns in Bengali meter. After some time another missionary took a journey, and chanced to hire the same boat. He found, to his surprise, that the boatmen were now, in the intervals of their labor, singing Christian hymns.

A clergyman was endeavoring to instruct one of his Sunday school scholars, a plow-boy, on the nature of a miracle. "Now, my boy," said he, "suppose you should see the sun rising in the middle of the night, what should you call that?" "The inn, please, sir." "No; but," said the clergyman, "suppose you knew it was not the moon, but the sun, and that you saw it actually rise in the middle of the night, what should you think?" "Please, sir, I should think it was time to get up."

A French antiquary has found the most ancient bronze statue known, in the collection of Egyptian antiquities recently gathered by M. Gustave Posno. It is almost identical in feature and workmanship with the famous sycamore wood statue in the Museum of Baulac, the port of Cairo, and which is cotemporary with the fourth Egyptian dynasty—a period some two thousand years before the Christian era.

We spend half our lives in making mistakes, and waste the poor remainder in reflecting how easily we might have avoided them.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Church Missionary Intelligencer deplores the mysterious absence of conversions at most of the North India stations.

—A telegram from Rome says that the Marquis of Ripon, the English nobleman who recently embraced the Catholic faith, has presented the Pope with £10,000.

—Rev. E. C. Colman has been holding a "mission" at St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, Boston, and has attracted much attention by his sermons against popery. Bishop Paddock has ordered him to cease his labors in that church, and Mr. Colman now talks of organizing a Reformed Episcopal Church.

THE GREEK CHURCH.—Twenty-four parishes, twenty-six priests and fifty thousand of the laity have voluntarily re-entered the Greek Church. This is stated, by a leading article in the Russian Imperial Gazette, to be the only result which has followed the hostile attitude adopted toward the Greek Church by the Pope and his priests.

—Bishop Williams, the missionary bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Japan, is devoting two-thirds of his own small income to carry on the mission work, and he lives in a poor little Japanese house, hardly better than a hut, which is the best he could buy, and this insignificant dwelling is church and school-house.

—The Theological Hall Missionary Society, composed of the United Presbyterian students in Scotland, is lending very valuable assistance to foreign missions. Last year the society contributed $7,980 to the Jamaica jubilee fund, for the training of native ministers. This year a fund is being raised for the establishment of a church and school in Cesarea.

—The Methodists have gathered a little congregation of twenty-six persons in several villages of Shantung, China, near the chief temple in the empire dedicated to Confucius, and in the very stronghold of his system. The convert through whom this work was mainly done, a man of intellectual strength and great earnestness, recently died in the peace of the gospel.

—A missionary from Persia, who last summer visited Tiflis, a city of that portion of Russia south of the Caucasian mountains, and bordering upon Asiatic Turkey and Persia, reported that he had nowhere seen such a thirst for reading, and such a willingness to purchase the Scriptures. An agent of the British and Foreign Bible Society, who is stationed there, sells the Bible at the rate of 6,000 copies per year. While on a tour, not long before, he sold 700 copies in three weeks.

—Among the converts recently made in Narayan Sheshadri's mission at Ialna, India, is a young religious mendicant. He had been wandering all over India, visiting the sacred shrines of Hindooism, from Ganges to Ceylon. Among the Romanists of Cochin he had learned to repeat a large number of Malyalim prayers, although he understood not a word of that language. Leaving them in disgust, he found his way at last to Ialna, where he was taught the word of God and was eventually led to embrace Christianity. He is now studying the English and Gujarati languages, with a view to usefulness in the cause of Christ.

MISSIONARY SOCIETIES.—When Organized.—The foreign societies were organized as follows: The Baptist Missionary Society in 1792; the London Missionary Society in 1795, the Scottish Missionary Society in 1796 the Glasgow Missionary Society in 1796, the Church Missionary Society in 1800, the General Baptist Society in 1816, the Wesleyan Missionary Society in 1817. The foreign missionary societies in the United States were organized as follows: The American Board in 1810; the Baptist Missionary Union in 1814, the Methodist Missionary Society in 1819, the Free-will Baptist Foreign Missionary Society in 1833, the Board of Missions of the Protestant Episcopal Church in 1835, the Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church in 1837.

—Romanists believe in religious liberty for countries like the United States, in which they are in the minority. In other countries, however, like Austria, where they have ruled for ages, they will not concede an inch of freedom unless they are compelled. The Missionary Herald states the position of the missionaries of the American Board in Austria thus: "They can enter no pulpit; they can hold no public service to preach the gospel; they cannot even occupy a room for a Bible reading or lecture unless official leave is given by the authorities; they cannot sell or give away, or even loan a tract without risking the penalties of the law." We may add, however, that the very fact of their presence in Austria is a signal victory over Romanism, and contains in it the germ of all these other privileges to be granted by and by, but without the leave of Rome.

—A correspondent who writes from Egypt, giving an interesting account of mission work in that country, says: "We greatly need the prayers of our friends, and I might suggest to some of the many to whom the cause of slavery is deeply interesting, to think of and pray for the white slaves—the multitude who, with an appearance and organization so like our own that they often seem like our own kindred, and yet so utterly without education and without hope for the future! These lonely ones, who hardly can recollect their parents, sisters or brothers—have they not a peculiar claim on our pity and our prayers? Do, dear Christian girls, happy in your family circle, pray for the fair Georgian and Circassian, who never had a mother's loving hand, and who knows not if she has brother or sister, or even what her own name was in infancy; and far, far more, who knows not the blessed Name. Pray that she may be able to say: 'If my father and mother forsake me, the Lord shall take me up.'"—Golden Rule.

Our Young People.

SUPPOSE.

BY ALICE CARY.

How dreary would the meadows be
In the pleasant summer light,
Suppose there wasn't a bird to sing,
And suppose the grass was white!

And dreary would the garden be,
With all its flowery dress,
Suppose there were no butterflies,
And suppose there were no bees,

And what would all the beauty be
And what the song that cheers,
Suppose we hadn't any eyes,
And suppose we hadn't ears?

For though the grass were gay and green,
And song birds filled the glen,
And the air were purple with butterflies,
What good would they do us then?

Ah, think of it, my little friends;
And when some pleasure flies,
Why, let it go, and still be glad
That you have your ears and eyes.

FOR THE ADVOCATE.

Grandpa Goodale Stories.—No. 20.

HOW BARNEY MILKED THE BAYS' NEST.

MY DEAR CHILDREN: Margie and Bessie, who are company, you know, say that they think that No. 20 of Grandpa Goodale's stories ought to be about "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." What do you all think about it?

"Yes, yes, grandpa, tell us the bays' nest story."

All yes, I see, but Tom. What are your objections, Master Tom?

"Why, grandpa," says Tom, "you know you promised to tell us about the bee hunt you had in South America, among the Meliponas, or stingless bees, and you actually commenced the story as far back as No. II, and I think you might tell us that one first."

"Yes, but, grandpa," says Harry, "the bays' nest story has been on hand longer than that; and, besides, Margie and Bessie are company, you know."

Well, children, I expect your motives are very disinterested. I have no idea that Tom wants to air his learning about Meliponas, as he calls them, nor that Harry cares about anything but gratifying his little cousins, or if I have I won't say so; but, as I think the "bee hunt" will keep, I will tell you to-night the story

You remember, I presume, the stories I have told you already about Barney and the "Orellies," and the "pet jog," and the "rabbits," and you have perhaps come to the conclusion that Barney was a funny fellow, and green as the Emerald Isle itself; and you have, no doubt, made up your minds that "how he milked the bays' nest" is a very funny story; but I must now tell you that the story is in only just two words.

"Two words, grandpa! Why how in the world can you tell a story in two words?"

Wait a bit and you will see. Barney milked the bays' nest by proxy.

"By what, grandpa?"

By proxy, my dears; and the worst part of all is that it was not a bays' nest he milked at all, but a wasps' nest.

"Grandpa," says Tom, "was it a nest of the Vespa Vulgaris, or one of the Vespa Norvegica?"

Never mind about that now, Tom; it was a wasps' nest—I am sure of that.

"But, grandpa, are you quite sure it wasn't a hornets' nest—one of the Vespa Crabra?"

Tom, if you would look a little closer into your books you would learn that all hornets are wasps, though all wasps are not hornets.

"Well, then, grandpa," says Harry, "didn't Barney milk the bays' nest at all?"

He milked the wasps' nest, Harry, but by proxy, as I just said.

"Grandpa," says Tom, "I think you ought to explain to us about wasps and hornets before you tell us the story."

Why, Tom, I have already told the story in two words—"By proxy."

"Now, grandpa," says Margie, "you know there is more than that to the story, and you are only teasing us. Twould be real mean to have kept all the children wondering and writing for all these months about just two words."

But, my dear, what do the words mean?

"Ah, I see," says Harry; "he got some one else to milk it for him, grandpa."

Yes, that was it. One morning Barney came to me holding his finger up before his mouth, and said he:

"Whist, darlint; don't yer be afther a tellin' a sowl what I've found."

"What have you found, Barney?" said I.

"A bays' nist, in shure," said he; "a rale bays' nist under the duce; and I watched 'em agoin' and comin', and they all wint away intirely from the nist at night. An' shure I'll wait till the night is afther comin' agin, whin I'll git me a dish, in shure, and I'll hould it under the nist and milk that same; and be gurra a nice dhrop of honey will I get, in shure." And Barney made a motion of his hand as though he were milking a cow.

I couldn't help laughing at him, but I went with him to look at the nest, and there, sure enough, was a large wasps' nest under the top rail of the picket fence, and the nest was as large as my head.

"It must have been one of the Vespa Vulgaris," says Tom in an undertone.

My first thought was to let Barney have his way and get some fun out of him, for I was rather a mischievous boy at that time; but when I came to think it over I concluded that it would be too cruel, so I explained to Barney that there was no honey in the nest, and that the wasps, instead of going away at night, went into the nest, and that if he carried out his plan he would get badly stung.

"An' do ye till me so, durlint?" said he. "Wait till I git Michael to do that same."

I saw the fun twinkling in Barney's eyes, and knew in a minute that it would be of no use to try to dissuade him, though, I did suggest to him that it was too serious a matter to trifle with.

"Niver you mind, durlint," said he. "You jist hoide under yonder lnee at noight, and it's grand fun you will have."

So I thought, you see. Well, children, perhaps I had better make a clean breast of it. I know I shouldn't have done it, but Michael was a stupid fellow who worked for an uncle of mine, and I didn't care much about him; but never mind excuses—it was wrong any way you can fix it. But when night came I was in my hiding-place, and I didn't have long to wait before I saw Barney and Michael coming down the road, Michael with a pan in his hand, and in close conference with Barney. It was just after sundown, and I could see them very distinctly, and Barney was gesturing with his finger on his open hand, and dancing all around his unsuspecting victim as only an Irishman can, or ever could.

"You see," says Barney, "it's a rale bay's nist, Michael, the loiks of which niver was in the ould country at all, at all; an' the bays all lave the nist intirely at night, an' only come back agin in the mornin', an' all ye has to do is jist to hould the pan in your one hand dirlethy under the nist, an' milk that same with your ither hand, an' the honey will jist till the dish, in shure."

"An' do ye till me so, Barney?"

"Yes, Michael," said he, "an' shure an' well go snacks on that same honey, we will."

"All right," said Michael. "You jist come along and hould this same dish, and I'll be afther milkin' the nist."

"Now, Michael," said Barney, "by the sowle of mi mither, if I didn't think yer had bitter sinse than that same! An' don't ye suppose that the bays are a watchin' around to see if any one's afther disturbin' their nist, an' that I must stay here and keep thim off? Would ye be ruined intirely?"

This logic was too much for Mike, and he started bravely on, with his pan in his hand. I watched him closely from my hiding-place as he held the pan carefully under the nest with his left hand, and grasped it firmly with the right.

It seemed but a second when he dropped the pan and ran up the road, whooping and yelling like a wild Indian—or a wild Irishman rather, as he was—switching his head with both arms, and cutting up the most ridiculous antics, while Barney stood in a safe place, holding both sides with his hands, and laughing fit to kill himself.

It wasn't exactly the best thing he could have done, for Mike soon saw where the joke came in, and started for him, and such a race over the fields as they two had I never saw in my life before, or since. The wasps got tired of following them, I suppose, or wanted to look after their ruined nest; at any rate, they outran them in time. But I don't think the two Irishmen were on the best of terms for some time after.

And this is the story, "How Barney Milked the Bays' Nest." Good-night. GRANDPA GOODALE.

BETTER NEVER LATE.—"You are rather late this morning, William," said good Mr. Rise-with-the-sun to a laggard apprentice who came at a late hour.

"Yes, sir; but 'better late than never' is an old saying," replied William.

"'Better never late,' said his master, "is of far more worth, though it may not be so old."

A north country minister, Rev. James Mather, of Langbank, has been giving a lecture in England, in which he describes his "ascent of Mount Blanc without guide and without brandy." Though he is a Scottish divine, it would appear that Mr. Mather actually abstained from both these aids when he went up the monarch of mountains.

The investigations of crime now going on serve to impress us with the difficulty of exposing and convicting criminals in this world. We cannot help feeling that, notwithstanding the villainies which are laid bare, there are many more that altogether escape detection. Like a deeply-laden ship which carries the most of her cargo below the water-line, vice ordinarily betrays but a small part of its dark proportions to the most careful observer. The huge iceberg buries seven-eighths of its imposing bulk beneath the sea in which it drifts, and thus it is with the gigantic schemes of fraud which lift their heads in the light of the day. The half is not told, and never will be, until the secrets of men are judged by Jesus Christ.

By various artifices public men are acquitted, while nearly all are convinced of their guilt. Here and there a conspicuous example is made of high functionaries, and influential citizens who have grown rich by bribery and swindling; but these are only samples of the corruption that has not been unearthed. But for the opportune change in the political character of the national House of Representatives probably very few if any of the recent revelations of crimes would have been made, and these investigating committees may work this culmen of horrors for two years without doing more than penetrating the upper stratum of political rottenness. In the interest of party, and to hide the shame of its adherents and leaders, the course of justice will be obstructed, and partisan prejudice and greed of power will come in to baffle and thwart thorough and honest investigation.

That notorious Brooklyn affair is still in an unsettled state. After all the church proceedings, and the trial before a court and jury, nobody is satisfied, and probably nine-tenths of the people believe there is a dark and covered sin which has hitherto defied judicial conviction. The least that a fair-minded man can say is: that while innocence is possible, the probabilities are almost overwhelmingly strong to the contrary. Winslow is likely to get justice, but he was known by some to be a hypocrite fifteen years ago, and there are those who were partakers in his iniquities who will probably escape the clutches of the law.

The old saying that "murder will out" must be considerably revised and amended. Killing is fearfully common, but in many cases the manslayer is not detected, and in many more the homicide, on frivolous grounds, is justified, and the murderer is cleared. Human life is cheap, the sacred guards thrown around it by divine authority are thrown aside, and, while the voice of the blood of foully-murdered men cries unto God from the ground, it is seldom that justice is meted out to the guilty by human law.

When we pass from these aspects of crime to those which are comparatively small, and then to those of the heart and the inward life, how manifold are the secret sins of men! The inward sins of motive, temper and passion, those that find utterance in word and expression in act are comparatively few. The most are locked in our own bosoms, and, in respect to many of them, they are hid from ourselves by a perverted conscience, or by the lack of self-examination.

With so much of undiscovered and of unpunished crime in the world, and with so much of secret sin in the heart, we can better appreciate the final disclosure. God is to "judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ," and "we must all appear, or be made manifest, before the judgment seat of Christ." And this manifestation is in order "that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." That criminals escape in this world only argues the certainty of their doom in the world to come, and the defects and imperfections in our administration of justice are only so many reasons why there must be a final and righteous retribution. In the light of that judgment seat all men will stand revealed. Their outward conduct, their deeds of darkness and infamy, will be clearly exhibited, and all the vile imaginations, filthy dreams and base thoughts will appear. The inward writings on the tablets of the soul, hitherto invisible, will come out letter by letter, word by word, and line by line, when exposed to the fires of the last judgment. Now sin and sinners are in masses, and the consciousness of individual guilt and personal accountability is largely lost or modified by intimate association with others. The judgment will be like turning the telescope upon the nebulæ. The cloud of humanity will be resolved into its individual parts, and each soul will be as distinct and as plainly defined as the stars that are mirrored in the most powerful reflector. Every character will be brought near and completely exhibited.

The process of the judgment will be manifestation—bringing the hidden things of dishonesty to light. "Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it, because it shall be revealed by fire; and the fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is." Until that day we shall never know all, not even an infinitessimal part of the corruptions and wickedness which have been at work about us. In comparison with that ordeal, our courts, juries and investigating committees are as the merest shadows. Too often they have themselves been tainted with the corruption they have pretended to investigate, and when intent on justice and truth the end has been frustrated. Here at last is a tribunal before which "no guilty man" shall escape. And its disclosures will be more surprising and startling, and more shocking, than anything within the range of our earthly experience. Our estimate of men as we knew them on earth, in many cases, will be reversed, and the honored and exalted will be abased and condemned. Happy will he be who shall not be deceived in himself, and who, counting on being saved, shall not find himself among the lost.

The Woman Whom Thou Gavest.

Adam threw the blame of the first transgression upon his wife. Instead of a help meet for him, she had proved, as he would insinuate, a tempter and a snare. There was a measure of truth in the charge, for it was through the woman that the devil reached the man, although if man had been alone, and satan had thought it worth his while, he would, probably have found some other means of leading our first father astray. However much of truth there was in the reply, it has generally been regarded as a mean thing in Adam to lay the blame of eating the forbidden fruit on his wife. He was the head of the woman, master in his own garden and bower, and, however drawn by the silken cords of connubial influence and conjugal sympathy, he should have rebuked the sin of his fascinating bride, and maintained his integrity in spite of her charming wiles or the devil's more covert seductions. Although the pressure of modern society, and the temptation to extravagance in silks, laces, jewelry, turnouts and receptions were as yet unknown, still Eve wanted to shine, to be as a god, and "the tree was pleasant to the eyes." Her daughters have had stronger enticements to meet, and do by no means suffer in the comparison. Still she and they are very much alike in the transgression, and not much can be said in their defense.

It was, nevertheless, a cowardly and ungallant thing in Adam to attempt to exculpate himself in the way he did, and the same is true of the modern man who endeavors to shield himself by exposing the venality and worldly idolatry of his wife and daughters. Their extravagance and love of style may have led to all the trouble, and induced the reception of presents and bribes, that they might move in the first circles, and shine with the brightest in imported costumes and brilliant diamonds. But were these gallant men not their own masters, and shall we not hold them responsible for the order of their own households? There is doubtless a great deal of Mother Eve in our fashionable women, and often through them the tempter pulls down the strongest and best of men, fills society with the bane of dishonesty, and brings contempt and disgrace upon the country. This is lamentable truth. The share which female vanity and ambition have in stimulating whisky frauds, and promoting bribery and all kinds of unrighteousness in getting money, must not be lightly estimated. She who was given to man as a help meet for him does sometimes entice to partake of the prohibited fruit.

But the old Adam is manifested in the men, and somehow they let it get out that the women are chiefly at fault in most of these recent revelations of corruption in high places. Mr. Schenck took hold of the Emma Mine because his wife and daughters must have court dresses, such as his salary was inadequate to procure. The confession of Belknap, as to the agency of a deceased and of a living wife, in his disgraceful affair, is no doubt true, but humiliating to our common manhood. The women made the bargain, handled the money, and spent it in fashionable extravagance, and the husband winked at the proceedings. Gen. Sherman tells an interviewer that the Belknap demoralization is due to the vicious organization of Washington society. Here is an extract from what the general of the army is reported to have said:

"Now Belknap got $8,000 a year, and had no outside resources. He had a fashionable wife, ambitious to lead in society. She must have money, and there was no other mode of getting it except by resorting to unlawful practices. In my mind this is the key to the disgraceful conduct of the Secretary of War."

"Do you know Mrs. Belknap?"

"Very well. She was regarded as a most estimable woman, intelligent, brilliant and pretty. She came of a good Kentucky family, and was ambitious to lead in society. She wore a profusion of jewelry, and her dresses were imported. Her receptions were among the most agreeable and showy entertainments at the national capital. It was impossible that she could keep her expenditures within her husband's official income."

It is the woman in society, ambitious to shine, showy entertainments, imported dresses, profusion of jewelry, and only a salary of $8,000 a year.

From these instances of woman perverted we gladly turn to the thousands of noble wives and daughters who adorn virtuous homes, and who, by their piety, frugality and industry, sustain their husbands and brothers in maintaining their honor and integrity. The court life at Washington, and fashionable circles elsewhere, do not include all the womanhood of the country, and these instances of weakness and wickedness must not be permitted to reflect upon womankind in general. In the fall and sin of man has been the greater sinner—so we are willing to believe—while at the same time the facts we have noted, in connection with current events, have their lessons for the fairer and better part of the human family.

Coming to Christ.

The Bible instruction is old and plain, and yet men are anxiously inquiring: "How shall we come to Christ?" We can only answer as the Scriptures answer—we have no other guide: "Repentance toward God, and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ." But, says the anxious inquirer, what does this mean? How much does it imply? We reply: It implies that you must see and fully admit that you are a sinner. This may be seen and felt with less or greater degrees of feeling, but it must be felt to the extent that we despair of all self-righteousness, that we need forgiveness, and must perish without it. It supposes also that we are sorry for our sins, because they are sins, a wrong to God and a wrong to ourselves, and, to the extent of our influence, a wrong to others. It supposes, too, that we forsake our sins—forsake anything, everything we know in our conscience to be wrong, no matter how respectable, how profitable or how pleasant. It supposes that we confess our sins to God, and do so as publicly, by some mode, as we have sinned against him. We cannot be sinners, "known and read of all," and then be secret saints, and go to heaven along some hidden and clandestine path. Such a course would be as dishonorable as it would be cowardly. We must some way be willing to acknowledge Christ. Repentance also supposes restitution and amends for injuries to person, character or fortune which we may have willfully caused to others; and if, as may often be the case, we cannot make these amends, we must sincerely desire to do so.

But we must remember that there is no merit in all this. Repentance is not an extenuation, not an excuse for sin, but it is a sorrowful confession of our guilt and unworthiness. If the gospel only granted grace to see and feel the guilt of sin, it would sink us to despair. But when our eyes are filled with tears, and our hearts are failing us, the blessed gospel lifts up its blessed voice, and points its shining hand, and cries: "Behold the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world!" What, says the inquiring penitent, is implied in beholding the Lamb of God, or, in other words, trusting to the merit of Christ for salvation? We reply: You trust him for all the purposes of salvation. Faith takes Christ as our only Savior. We do not rely upon any other being or any other merit. We shall not say we are not good enough, for we rely only on his saving righteousness. We shall not say we do not understand how God pardons and renews. We will walk by faith, not by sight. We shall not say we do not feel enough, for we will look for salvation in nothing that we can be or do, but to Christ alone.

"Only Jesus will I know,
And Jesus crucified."

Faith not only takes Christ as the only Savior, but as the all-sufficient Savior also. He can save the "chief of sinners," he can save to the "uttermost," he can save "all" who come unto him; for his meritorious death satisfies every claim of justice, and makes it just, in the sight of all intelligences, for God to pardon the guilty who, through Christ, ask his forgiving grace.

And faith takes Christ as a present Savior—a Savior now. And why not? Is not "now" the "accepted time," the "day of salvation?" Will Christ's gracious death for us ever have more merit? Will he ever be more able, more willing than now to save us? Never. Then let our faith say: He does love me. He is willing to save me now. I can, I will, I do believe. Let your heart exclaim:

"'Tis mercy all, immense and free,
For, oh, my God, it found out me.
No condemnation now I dread:
Jesus, and all in him, is mine."

It is the blessed Spirit's office to grant assurance of pardon. Only believe, and thou shalt be saved.

Anti-Christ.

For a long time the Protestant exposition of the Scripture teaching concerning anti-Christ has pointed toward the Roman Catholic hierarchy as that to which the sacred writers refer. It has been spoken of as "the beast" of the apocalypse, having seven heads and ten horns. All the symbolism of the Scripture account has been explained again and again as applying to Romanism, and the last act of an "infallible" council in declaring the head of the church infallible, and therefore possessed of a divine attribute, has been regarded as the fulfillment of the prophecy that the man of sin shall exalt himself above all that is called God, so "that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God."

Now we have a new interpretation. The leading article in the Catholic World for November last is written to show that Free Masonry is anti-Christ. Jesuitism, that controls the papacy, the power behind the throne, the most wonderful secret society the world has ever seen, is terrified by the proportions which another secret society has attained, and is making a strenuous attack upon it. Recent events in Europe, and particularly in Brazil, show how determined the struggle is to be.

The article in the World begins by referring to the trial of faith which is to come on the saints before the coming of Christ. After speaking of the prophecies concerning the great apostasy, and quoting them at some length, it declares that "it is sufficiently obvious that the great apostasy inaugurated by Luther was the first outbreak of anti-Christian victory." Then it says, with its peculiar reading of history, that "the first marked sequel of the apostasy, the first outbreak of success of anti-Christ in the political order, was the first French revolution," and that "that saturnalia of lawlessness was the work of the 'craft' of Free Masonry." Free Masonry is the "mystery of iniquity." Then follow quotations supposed to show that Free Masons have been responsible for the civil commotions of Europe for many years. After these come descriptions of their recent plans, and of the habit the society has of adapting itself to its surroundings, concealing its deadly purpose till the time be ripe for its execution—an account which reads very much like the best descriptions of Jesuit plans and procedure. Finally the article takes up the methods of work which Free Masonry adopts, and finds the "note-mark or sign of anti-Christ" there. It is seen in the darkness that surrounds it, in sparing authority, and so on in every count of the indictment St. Paul gives against anti-Christ in Second Thessalonians.

As we have read this arraignment of Free Masonry we have had recalled to our minds the tremendous indictment against the Jesuits which Dr. Dollinger published five years ago in his "Lectures on the Reunion of the Churches." We have to-day no word either for or against Free Masonry. Its merits are not before us. But we feel that if this Ultramontane charge against it be true, another and quite a different society is condemned as well. Dr. Dollinger shows how the work of the secret "Society of Jesus" has brought disaster on every land where it has had power. For instance:

"The Society of Jesus devoted its best services to its native home of Spain. * * * The result was the bankruptcy and depopulation of that once powerful kingdom. * * * They co-operated with the Inquisition for two hundred years in impressing their spirit on the life of the people, with this result: that the higher education has been crushed, the scientific spirit strangled, and the country ruined in every department of life. * * * Well might a Spanish diplomatist in Rome say, at the time of the suppression of the order: 'The Jesuits are the wormwood that gnaws on our bowels.' They it was who brought on the German nation the Thirty Years' War and its results, and to them Catholic Germany owes the decline of its schools, and its consequent backwardness in cultivation and long intellectual sterility."

And so throughout Germany and Austria, Bohemia, England in its Catholic days, Sweden, Russia, Poland, Portugal, France, he shows that the Jesuits have been as an evil genius, and that their methods of work and their selfish ends are so much like those which the Catholic World charges against the Free Masons that there is nothing left but to say: If the secular society be dangerous, so also must the ecclesiastical, for every count of the indictment brought against the former can be exactly matched by well-grounded charges against the latter.—Christian Intelligencer.

Notes of Nashville.

The editor of the Western Methodist has lately visited the capital of Southern Methodism. We quote a paragraph or two:

Bishop McTyeire, who, as president of the board of trust, closely watches every interest, we know is well pleased with the progress and prospects of the Vanderbilt in all its departments; and to him Southern Methodism, in its relations to the cause of education, owes a debt of gratitude for wise and faithful service in behalf of the university. We shall never cease to be grateful to Mr. Vanderbilt for his munificence; but the best way that our friends and brethren can show their gratitude is by following his example and adding to the endowment fund of the university.

We have but little room for remarks on the Publishing House and other general interests at Nashville. The most positive assurances were given us by our energetic and tireless book agent, Dr. Redford, that he has successfully passed the financial crisis—the pressure now is only about one-sixth as heavy as it was last year; and if the preachers and people of the church will but extend the patronage that is justly and reasonably anticipated the Publishing House will be able to pay all its debts, and will stand upon a solid basis of success. Dr. Summers spends much time at his editorial table, and is indefatigable in his labors. Dr. Cunnyngham, as Sunday school editor, is well settled at his work, wise, careful, diligent, sympathetic and enthusiastic. His plans for the future he unfolded to us, and gave us a glance at the Sunday school periodicals for April, which, when they appear, we are free to say, will show a remarkable improvement. Dr. McFerrin, the missionary secretary, was absent, attending the Baltimore Conference; but his associate, Dr. Kelley, we found at work on "The Gospel of Numbers." Let no reader fail to study the statistics and comments thereon, under this heading, furnished us by Dr. Kelley from week to week.

Baltimore Conference.

The Episcopal Methodist gives the proceedings to the end of the seventh day (March 7.) Dr. Poisal says:

It will be gratifying to our readers to learn that the increase in our membership has more than doubled in the last ten years. There was an increase the last year of nearly two thousand. So that the actual membership will not fall much below twenty-six thousand. All the collections are in advance of those of last year. The long roll of our superannuated preachers has been nobly responded to. The Conference will pay one hundred cents on the dollar to every claimant! And our worn-out preachers are more liberally provided for than those of any other Conference in the connection.

The cause of missions and education received much attention, and both interests have essentially improved.

A special meeting of the board of trustees of Randolph Macon College was held on Monday. The venerable Thomas Branch, president of the board, presided. Jesse B. Wilson, Esq., proposed to be one of thirty to raise $30,000 in subscriptions of $1,000 for the purpose of creating a fund, to be called the "Centennial Fund of the Baltimore Conference." Mr. Branch and others promptly sustained this noble proposition. It was also unanimously voted that Drs. Duncan and Poisal be requested to carry out the plan projected, and that they together visit the Conference and other parts of the country where the best results are likely to follow.

The following items will be of interest to our readers:

Norval Wilson, Thomas B. Sargent, Samuel Kepler, Henry Hoffman, P. S. E. Sixeas, Elias Welty, W. H. Wheelright, John W. Tongue, W. H. D. Harper, William Hedges, A. A. Eskridge, E. L. Kregloe, Thomas Hildebrand, W. S. Perry and John Hank were continued on the superannuated list.

"Who remain on trial?"—The following were announced as members of this class: William B. Dorsey, J. Kyle, G. R. A. McElhenny, J. H. Boyd, J. W. Shoaff, H. C. Calwell, H. S. Coe, W. W. Hedrick, A. E. Bradenhaugh, Henry T. Watts, L. R. Markwood, A. M. Coakley and C. M. Brown.

The deacons of one year are Lewis L. Lloyd, Alfred H. Way, V. W. Wheeler, W. M. Hiner and Washington Varner.

Admitted on Trial.—Edward G. Vandiver, William E. Woolf, L. R. Green, W. H. Sanders, J. L. Kibler, G. T. D. Colling, David L. Bush, George S. Lightner, J. H. Davidson, Alfred O. Armstrong, W. A. Bryan, Charles M. Haddaway and H. A. Wilson.

A collection was lifted on Saturday, amounting to $1,000, to pay in full the superannuated fund of the Conference.

Charles Shipley, treasurer of the Conference Missionary Board, made his report to the Conference. The total amount collected for missions foreign and domestic, the past year, is $7,618.

An exhibit of the joint board of finance was made. The total amount assessed and paid for superannuated preachers was $8,765.13; Bishops' fund, $1,350; paid Bible Society, $245.13.

MR. MOODY IN NEW YORK.—The revival meetings, says the Independent, have grown in power during the week. Mr. Moody has been unusually direct and forcible. On Tuesday night he preached against idle and indifferent church members. He has frequently spoken of Christians who are members of churches, but who are not active in their devotion to religious work, in terms often severe and always direct and full of suggestions. He referred to the cleansing of the ten lepers by Christ, and the coming of one of the nine to him afterward, when he said: "Were there not ten cleansed? But where are the nine?" This question Mr. Moody applied to young converts whose zeal is soon diminished, and who make no efforts for Christians after they have themselves become possessors of it; and he repeated the question several times, finally giving his own answer: "I don't know. Guess they went and joined some church." Again he said: "I fear these young converts haven't gone into some church and fallen asleep. We've got enough of such church members already." Mr. Moody said that Christians are the only people in the world who are ashamed of their religion. Infidels are proud of their belief, and freely proclaim their opinions to the world. "Men," he said, "who serve the devil openly boast of their allegiance to him. Christians are afraid to let their light shine."

We believe, says the Richmond Christian Advocate of March 9, "the committee of our General Assembly charged with the duty of reporting a tax bill, have discharged that duty and reported a bill in which church buildings above $5,000 are taxed. If the Assembly will put it down heavy on whisky and let the churches, we think they will act wisely. In this connection we publish the following from the New York Observer:

"Tax-payers know that the true interests of society are identified with their pecuniary interests, and what promotes the prosperity of the people as a whole, makes them richer and better able to pay their taxes. As the general government permits books to be imported free of duty for public libraries, so the State government permits its citizens to have houses, untaxed, in which to meet for moral instruction, and divine worship. It pays to do so. The State is richer, stronger and better. The man who bit his own nose off to spite his face was just as wise as the State would be that taxes churches out of existence, or puts the burden upon the back of one of them. There is such a thing as being penny wise and pound foolish, but there is no example of it equal to that of taxing the property that is used for the moral improvement of the people."

On Tuesday night, the seventh instant, Jefferson Davis delivered an address at the Exposition Hall in this city, on the Mexican War. The large hall was filled, and the speaker was received and applauded with great enthusiasm. Mr. Davis has aged very fast of late years, and he appeared to be in feeble health. He is a man of fine presence, courtly bearing, and speaks with elegance and propriety. He handled his theme briefly but comprehensively, and gave a very clear analysis of the conduct and results of the conflict. We heard Mr. Davis in Lafayette square one night in the fall of 1847. He was then suffering from a wound recently received at the battle of Buena Vista. We remember that a fellow-bystander and hearer on that occasion made this comment: "Pat can speak as well as fight." Time and years has made its impress upon the honored citizen, statesman and soldier. May his declining years be blessed with sunshine.

Messrs. Hall, Cree and Hardie are conducting a series of meetings in New Orleans. They began the work here on Friday, March 10. Considerable interest has been manifested. At the services on Monday night, March 13, a large number asked to be prayed for. The order of services for the present week is: Noonday meeting, Bible reading at four P. M., and services at half past seven at night. These services are all held at the Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church South. We trust that much good may be done, and that all the Protestant churches in our city may be visited with the outpouring of the Holy Spirit. These meetings are designed for all as a union effort, and all denominations are earnestly invited to co-operate.

Prayer is a humble appeal from our impotency to God's omnipotence.

The Conversion of India.

A very interesting meeting of missionaries and their wives, from different parts of the world, was recently held at the Baptist Mission House in London. Among those present was Rev. J. Allen, of India, whose remarks made a deep impression upon all who heard them. He said he had now passed through the three stages which every thorough-going missionary must experience: First, that of ardent zeal and confident expectation of success following upon work; secondly, that of despondency, caused by the feeling that you have made a grand mistake, and that India is not prepared to accept the gospel; and thirdly, a hopeful revulsion, arising from a clearer perception of the difficulties of the case, and of the work that was really being done. Ten years had elapsed since he entered the third stage, and the revulsion has since deepened in his mind and heart year by year. "I can say now," continued Mr. Allen, "that I have more hope to-day of the speedy success of missions in India than I had when I entered upon the work; and this hope is founded not merely upon my own experience, but upon the testimonies of the natives themselves." Among other illustrations of the native feeling he told of a meeting of educated natives, none of whom were Christians, who for five Sundays in succession met to discuss the question: "Is it likely that Christianity will become the religion of India?" At the close a vote was taken, and it was unanimously in the affirmative. They seemed thunderstruck with the result of their own deliberations. One of the gentlemen, the head-master of a government school, got up and said: "Then what are we here for?" This question was echoed by all present. The result was that they broke up and never met any more. The strong current of Western life and thought is silently at work under the surface of Indian society, every fiber of it replete with antagonism to Hindooism and Mohammedanism; and some day, perhaps not distant, the crashing will come with a rush. Then there will not be men enough to show inquirers the way. It will be far more difficult for the Christian church to direct that movement than it is at present to direct the work in Madagascar.

Books and Periodicals.

LIVING WATERS is the title of a new collection of sacred songs by D. F. Hodges. Oliver Ditson & Co., publishers, Boston.

The book is a 12mo. of 126 pages, much the same size and style of Winnowed Hymns. The collection is for the family circle, prayer and camp meetings, and revivals. Mr. Hodges furnishes about half the pieces. The rest of the work is recruited from the copyrights of the publishers. While many of the songs are new, we recognize a number of the old and popular hymns. The book is one of merit, and will commend itself to popular appreciation.

—The Aldine for March contains the following superb illustrations: Washington at Valley Forge, The Little Haymaker, The Torre de la Madonna, Lake Como, A Foggy Morning in New York Bay, Ivory Cup, Petroleum Lamp, Ivory Jewel-Casket, Ivory Paper-Weight, Leather and Bronze Casket, Castle Luegg, Trimola.

—Ware's Valley Monthly for March is a good number of this enterprising and excellent magazine. It is truly a journal of Western thought and progress, ably edited by Dr. William M. Leftwich, and filled with articles from the pens of the most gifted writers.

—The Aldine, part 6, contains the following engravings: Scenery in Montenegro, Ely Cathedral, The Maiden and the Lark, From Him, Chicken-Hearted, Three Knights of the Road, The Brunswick Onyx Case, Shooting the Big Horn.

—The Watch Tower in the Wilderness is the title of an interesting volume by Anna Shipton. A profitable work for serious and devout readers. T. Y. Crowell, publisher, New York.

—The American Agriculturist, also the Southern Cultivator, for March have been received.

—Morton's Monthly Home and School for February has been received.

Maj. R. W. Jones, late president of Martha Washington College, Virginia, has accepted, says the Western Methodist, the chair of chemistry in the University of Mississippi, and entered upon his duties at that seat of learning—a very valuable acquisition to its corps of educators. We hear that Prof. Buchanan, of Emory and Henry College, has been elected to the presidency of Martha Washington College; but his acceptance of the position is doubted—he cannot well be spared from the institution which has heretofore enjoyed the benefits of his rare gifts.

MARRIED.

PORTER—HOPKINS.—On the tenth of February, 1876, at the residence of the bride's brothers, Red River parish, La., by the Rev. J. M. Frank, Mr. Thomas J. Porter to Miss Alabama Hopkins, both of Red River parish.

VERBOIS—LOZIER.—By Rev. J. S. Davis, at Pine church, Caldwell parish, La., February 21st, Mr. Thomas B. Verbois to Mrs. Eugenia B. Lozier.

FRAZIER—WILLIAMS.—In Tuskegee, Ala., February 17, 1876, by Rev. Lewis Bowdell, Mr. Daniel Frazier, of Montgomery, Ala., to Miss Arrie Williams, of Tuskegee, Ala.

REED—HARRISON.—At the residence of Mr. L. Carlton, in Richland parish, La., by Rev. D. Alexander, on the tenth of February, 1876, Mr. James A. Reed to Miss Sallie M. Harrison.

TO OUR AGENTS.

When subscriptions pay, let us know at once. We are sending bills to subscribers, and if their payments to agents are not promptly reported bills must reach them for amounts already paid, but not reported to this office.

INTERNATIONAL CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—This institution will commend itself to every one interested in the permanent welfare of the Mississippi valley. The names of the officers and board of directors are well known throughout our Southern country. Hon. Jefferson Davis, president, S. H. Kennedy, Esq., treasurer, and Col. W. V. Crouch, secretary. We quote from article 8 of the constitution:

"The objects are to promote direct trade between the States and Territories of the valley of the Mississippi, and the use of Europe and of Central and South America, to induce and facilitate immigration, to collect and transmit information in regard to the Mississippi valley, so as to lead to safe and profitable investments of European capital and labor in aid of the development of the varied sources of wealth and happiness with which this country is so bountifully endowed by nature, and to accomplish these purposes by co-operation with the International Chamber of Commerce and Mississippi Valley Society of London, England, or by such other means as may seem proper and advisable."

BOOTS AND SHOES.—A. A. Lacroix, Esq., corner of Frenchmen and Villere streets, has always kept a large and well assorted stock of boots and shoes and stock in his line, but we have never gone into his establishment without feeling a sense of surprise at the extent and variety of his stock, and we advise purchasers, especially in that part of the city, to read his advertisement, to be found in our columns."

ELSEWHERE in the paper will be seen the advertisement of the Ocean Saw Mills, under the management of Mr. W. C. Tupper. Mr. Tupper has abundant experience in the lumber trade, and those wishing to purchase will find it to their interest to communicate with him. For particulars we refer our readers to his advertisement.

We call attention to the advertisement of the Beckwith Sewing Machine, advertised in this issue. The price of this machine places it in the reach of any one. Mr. Edward Thompson, the general agent, we have known for a long time, and in many business transactions with him we have always been perfectly satisfied.

CLOTHING.—Messrs. Pierson & Hews.—Under Business Notices will be found the card of Messrs. Pierson & Hews. We buy all our clothing from this firm, and have done so for many years. We take their word as to the quality of the goods, and find it safer to do so than to risk our own judgment.

SADDLES, HARNESS AND HOSE.—If our readers need any of the above articles we advise them to go to the establishment of Martin Weydig, 170 Poydras street. We do not think they can do better. We invite attention to the advertisement of Mr. Weydig elsewhere.

TIMBER, LUMBER AND WOOD.—We call attention to the Mississippi ship timber, lumber and wood yard of L. Carbo, Sr., agent. Let all who are interested in the purchase of lumber pay special attention to his card.

BUGGIES, CARRIAGES AND HARNESS.—We have never found a better place to buy buggies, carriages and harness than the house of J. A. Lum & Co., 102 Gravier and 13 Union street. This firm has large experience in the manufacturing of the goods in their line, and their ample means and unquestioned credit give them facilities for purchasing and manufacturing on terms more advantageous than any house we know of, and we think we risk nothing in saying that they are reliable. We have had orders from customers filled by this firm for a number of years past, and if at any time they have failed to give satisfaction it has not come to our knowledge.

SOAPS.—One of the largest manufactories in the city is the soap manufactory of J. H. Keller, Esq., advertised in another column. Mr. Keller imports directly all the foreign materials which he uses, and selects with great care the domestic ingredients; and it is our opinion that his soaps are more free from injurious ingredients and better than the soaps brought here from the East. Patronize home industry.

TO THOSE of our friends who have purchases to make or produce to ship, we refer to the advertisement of Messrs. Odell & Wright, 35 Decatur street. These gentlemen do a general commission business, and propose to make it the interest of strangers throughout this section to deal with them. They are the sole agents for the Grangers' brands of flour.

VISITORS to the city would do well to inspect Navra & Offner's really fine stock of China and glassware. See advertisement.

LEVY BROS., 580 Magazine street, make a specialty of black alpacas.

COUGHS.—A medicinal preparation in the form of a syrup is the most convenient. Bringle's Bronchial Troches allay irritation, which induces coughing, giving relief in Bronchitis, Hoarseness, Influenza, Consumptive and Asthmatic complaints.

A LIVER DISORDERED FOR FIFTEEN YEARS.—For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from a disordered liver, during which time I tried many of the best physicians in the country, and almost all the patent nostrums recommended, all to no effect, until I used Simmons' Liver Regulator, and from the time I used it to this day, which is now several years, I have been comparatively a sound man, having suffered very little, if any at any time from the effects of my old disease. I conscientiously recommend its use to the afflicted of Liver Disease.

MAJ. A. P. WORLEY,

WILBOR'S COD LIVER OIL AND LIME.—The great popularity of this sale and old excellent preparation is of one attributable to its intrinsic worth. In the cure of Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Scrofulous Humors, and all Consumptive symptoms, it has no superior if equal. Let no one neglect the early symptoms of disease when an agent is at hand which will alleviate all complaints of the chest, lungs or throat. Manufactured only by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston. Sold by all druggists.

FROM Prof. A. Jackson, Laval University, Quebec: "I have used a good deal of Isebell's Liquid Extract of Beef in my private practice, and can recommend it as extremely useful in cases of debility and weak digestion, restoring strengthening nourishment." Sold by all druggists.

MEDICAL.

I MUST OWN that your Simmons' Liver Regulator fully deserves the popularity it has attained. As a family medicine it has no equal. It cured my wife of a malady I had counted incurable—that well-nigh curse of our American people, Dyspepsia. She desires that all nations and people might know the virtues of this God-given remedy. Hoping that the above will appear in your Almanac of 1876, and be of some use in extolling the virtues of your excellent medicine, is the wish of your humble servant.

A. E. P. ALBERT,
Professor in Nicholas Public School,
Parish of Terrebonne, La.

I have used Simmons' Liver Regulator for two years, and recommend it as a very superior medicine for Dyspepsia and Liver Disease.

GEORGE W. SMITH,
Kentucky Conference,
Methodist Episcopal Church South.

Your valuable medicine (Simmons' Regulator) has saved me doctors' bills often. I use it for everything that it is recommended for, and never knew it to fail. I have used it in Colic and Cramps with my mules and horses, giving them about half a bottle at a time. I have not lost one that I gave it to. You can recommend it to every one that has stock as being the best medicine known for all complaints that horse flesh is heir to.

E. T. TAYLOR,
Agent for Graingers of Georgia.

By Complex (Ala.) Banner.

Simmons' Liver Regulator doubtless is one of the best medicines ever compounded from the great botanic garden of nature, and contains no life-destroying component hidden under some technical name, but is a purifier, rejuvenator and regulator not only of the Liver, but of the whole system.

Raising Artichokes.

If we take into account the ease of culture, freedom from the ravages of insects, and its surprising yield, I think the artichoke will take the front rank among root crops. Doubtless many are deterred from raising them from a mistaken idea of their spreading in the ground. When I first planted them, five years ago, my neighbors told me that they were worse than the Canada thistle to spread, and they evidently thought that if I introduced the artichoke in our neighborhood it would ruin our farms; but after I have cultivated them five years, and my neighbors have seen that they did not spread, several have been induced to plant them. I raised last season fifty-six bushels on one-thirteenth of an acre, which is at the rate of seven hundred and twenty-eight bushels per acre. As it was very dry last season, I expect to do much better this fall. I have this year the same piece of land in artichokes that I had last, and will report when I dig them.

One advantage they have over any other root crop, except perhaps the parsnep, is that they require no protection through the winter. I prefer digging in the fall; as they come out of the ground clean and ready for feeding without washing. The plan that I have adopted in raising them is to plant as early in the spring as the land is dry enough to work, preparing the land and planting as I would potatoes. I cultivate and keep the ground clean and mellow until they are three or four feet high; then hill up with large hills, and they will fill them. They do not set until about the time they blossom, which is in September, but they will grow them more in one week than the potato will in four. I feed them to cows and hogs. I think that I could fatten hogs on them without any other feed. When fed to cows they have largely increased the yield of milk, being in that respect equal to the cabbage, but making much richer milk. I think I shall plant a few this fall for my hogs to late next season turn in the hogs, and let them help themselves through the winter, when the ground is not frozen; then early in the spring turn off the hogs and plow and drag, and they are ready to grow another crop without planting, as the hogs will leave enough in the ground for seed.

If more come up than are wanted, cut them off, and they are killed as easily as potatoes would be. Those of my brother farmers who would like to grow a valuable, easily-raised, heavily-yielding root, I would advise to try the artichoke.—William Wade in Country Gentleman.

A Way to Prevent Coughing in Horses.—The organization of many colts and horses is so delicate that when they eat dusty hay they will cough to an alarming extent. When such is the case we have often obviated the difficulty by sprinkling the hay with water a few hours prior to feeding it. The dust on hay will do the horses no harm if taken into the stomach without irritating the throats of the animals. Clover hay, which is usually dusty, should be passed through a fodder cutter, and be wetted and mingled with meal before it is fed. J. C. R. writes on this subject:

"It is well known that feeding horses on clover hay often makes them cough, but the why and wherefore may not be so generally known. From observation I have become fully satisfied that the manner of feeding hay to horses is the cause. The usual custom is to let them draw it through a rack, thus stripping off the fine dust which adheres to the stalk, which, being drawn into the lungs in respiration, produces the cough. The cure consists in removing the cause—that is, the racks—and allowing the animals to take their fold in the natural way. I have removed all of my racks, and now feed my horses on the barn floor, having a breastwork sufficiently high for them to eat over. In this way they can be fed hay without raising a dust. They get none under their feet, and the labor of cleaning out mangers is saved. Whatever is left is easily pushed out with a rake into the yard for the cattle. Since making the improvement above mentioned in my feeding apparatus I am not troubled with coughing horses."—Practical Farmer.

I have in days past been a very successful cucumber producer. In 1837 or 1838 I had a near neighbor, and as good and true was Dr. "Tom" as the next one; a mere picket fence separated our gardens. Mrs. "Tom," a young Virginia matron, did the garden work, for "Tom" was not much at anything but a fine horse and his profession—an only child and ninety workers. Well, Mrs. Tom took me to task on cucumber culture. I laughed at the so young-cody one boy; and so pretty too to be telling me how to grow cucumbers. But I tried, and never changed. Make low ridges, two feet apart—rich, deep preparation—drop the seed six or eight inches apart and cover. Sow soon when dew is on; keep the earth clean, and when the fruit is one inch long begin and pick every morning, all you can find. It is incredible how many ten feet square will produce. I suggest that some one make an acre rich, use one hundred pounds of oil meal, begin this winter to use meal, and plow in deep, and every dry spell, for two or three times, with plow and subsoil, put in oil meal; stir and plow until the whole thousand pounds is in, and just leave it rough, so that the surplus water will merely run off. As soon as the season is fit make flat ridges three feet apart, and put in seed each one foot. Have barrels of strong brine to put daily pickings in, and send off for sale.—P., in Southern Farmer.

Diseased Pork.—Conversing with an editor of a leading agricultural paper of one of the Western States lately, he informed me that the hog cholera is becoming a great evil among the farmers of the West. He said the destruction of hogs some seasons is so fearful that they are hurried to market early, and at a great sacrifice, for fear of worse loss.

Do you not think, we remarked, that many of these hogs, more or less diseased, are killed and converted into bacon or lard, or packed and salted, and sent down to feed Mississippians and Louisianians on? He replied that he had no doubt this is often the case.

Think of it, farmers and planters, who can secure good, healthy meat at home by a little extra care and attention. How do you like the idea of paying from fifteen to twenty cents per pound for pork, bacon and lard from hogs that may have been affected with hog cholera or trichina, and that might have died in a few days? Will you continue to buy diseased ment and eat it, and feed your families on it, rather than feed them on good, sweet, healthy and cheap home-made meat?

A Test for Eggs.—Among the minor troubles of city life is the difficulty of procuring a regular supply of fresh eggs. When we cannot remove our woes, the next best thing is to try to understand them. So we devote this paragraph to what will interest all out of hearing of the cheerful sounds of the barn-yard. An egg is generally called fresh when it has been laid only one or two days in summer, and two to six days in winter. The shell being porous, the water in the interior evaporates, and leaves a cavity of greater or less extent. The yolk of the egg sinks too, as may be easily seen by holding it toward a candle or the sun; and when shaken a slight shock is felt if the egg is not fresh. To determine the precise age of eggs, dissolve about four ounces of common salt in a quart of pure water, and then immerse the egg. If it is only one day old it will descend to the bottom of the vessel; but if three days it will float in the liquid. If more than five days old it will come to the surface, and project above it in proportion to its increased age.

Primula Parryi.—One of the most charming native plants we ever saw was a species of primrose, called Primula Parryi, in honor of its discoverer, Dr. C. C. Parry, who has done so much to introduce into notice many of the rare Rocky Mountain gems. Our first acquaintance with this species was during a visit to Gray's Peak. After ascending the mountain beyond the tree-line we noticed among the brilliant alpine flowers one whose tints appeared to surpass all its lovely companions, if such could be possible. It was growing near the banks of a stream of clear water of icy coldness, and this circumstance may account for the difficulty so far experienced by cultivators in attempting to grow it in the Eastern States. A late number of the Botanical Magazine contains illustrations and descriptions of this plant, which it characterizes as "the handsomest primrose introduced, except P. Japonica."—New York Tribune.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 30, 1875.

MR. EDWARD L. HALL—Sir: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be certain to free from corrosive action when applied to paint or metal surfaces. It contains no poison in its substances by which any accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and so many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER!

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint!

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair is necessary before using.

We are free from all Deleterious Ingredients, containing Neither Sulphur or Nitrate of Silver, which is the Basis of the Poisonous Dyes by Absorption.

And its use saves both time and labor, as a few drops applied with a comb once a month or so, to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose, the natural color being so perfectly assimilated in daily detection. The great recommendation is in its production of color, producing any desired shade, from light brown to the deepest black, and not the absence of that dry and burnt appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery can be applied to a single lock or spot that have changed, and restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary when using other Hair Dyes.

Sample to be sent free by mail to any address, in the United States, on receipt of price, one dollar, by the inventor and proprietor,

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhea or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, its truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more sirup than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

A. CARROUCHE,
Agent for New Orleans, 39 Chartres st.

Scientific.

—A curious point in connection with the deviation of the compass on iron ships has attracted much attention on the part of scientific men. It is now believed that some of the sudden and hitherto unaccountable changes in the deviation of the compasses of such ships—which are often unsuspected until alleged as the only conceivable cause of the vessel's running ashore—are the effects of an unequal and varying distribution of heat over the iron hull. Sudden slight changes of compass deviation, not exceeding five degrees, have been noticed on board iron ships on our American coast, and these are now attributed to changes in the hull, occasioned by the vessel's passing from warm to cold water, and the reverse. The warm temperature of the Gulf Stream, taken in connection with the cold counter-current, may account for many of the suspected compass errors in iron ships, and the devising of a remedy for this would be an excellent subject for study on the part of some enterprising inventor.

—In an article upon the best mode of constructing sewers, in the Atlantic Monthly, Col. G. E. Waring, Jr., has describes the most common defects in their construction: "Sewers choke and overflow during heavy storms mainly because they are too large for the work they are ordinarily called on to perform. If a sewer is so small that its usual flow is concentrated to a sufficient depth to carry before it any ordinary obstruction, it will keep itself clean. But as is almost always the case where the engineer lacks experience or where he defers to the ignorance of the local authorities, it is so large that its ordinary flow is hardly more than a film, with no power even to remove sand, we may be quite sure that its refuse solid matters will gradually accumulate until they leave, near the crown of the arch, only the space needed for the smallest constant stream. And, in order to make room for a rain-fall flow, the whole sewer will have to be cleared by the costly and offensive process of removal by manual labor."

—Bowels.—Cobwebs have been applied to various uses. The delicate cross-hairs in the telescopes of surveying instruments are fine webs taken from spiders of species that are specially selected for their production of an excellent quality of material. The spider, when caught, is made to spin his thread by drawing him from hand to hand, but if he is indisposed to furnish the article. The end is attached to a piece of wire, which is doubled into two parallel lengths, the distance apart exceeding a little the diameter of the instrument. As the spider creeps and descends from this, the thread is wound upon it by turning the wire around. The coils are then gummed to the wire and kept for use as required. About a century ago Bon of Languedoc succeeded in making a pair of gloves and a pair of stockings from the thread of the spider. They were very strong, and of a beautiful gray color. Other attempts of the same kind have been made; but Reaumur, who was appointed by the Royal Academy to report on the subject, stated that the thread of the spider was not equal to that of the silk worm, either in strength or luster. The cocoons of the latter weigh from three to four grains, so that two thousand three hundred and four worms produce a pound of silk; but the bags of the spider, when cleaned, do not weigh more the third part of a grain, so that a single silk worm can accomplish the work of twelve spiders.

"How had you the audacity, sir," said a Scottish laird to his servant, "to go and tell some people that I was a mean fellow, and no gentleman?" "Na, na, sir," was the blunt answer, "you'll no catch me the like o' that. I aye keep my words to myself."

MISCELLANEOUS.

A CARD.

Our Friends and the Public.

The fact that we are charged with a violation of the revenue laws having been circulated to our prejudice, and having received from our customers throughout the South and West a number of letters of kindly interest and inquiry, we desire in this manner to correct any false impressions that may be entertained by friends or customers, especially those outside of the city, who are not advised of the exact nature of the charges made.

The charges embrace only technical irregularities in the keeping of our books, and are such as might be brought against any business house whose goods subject to revenue tax.

We have not been charged with defrauding or attempting to defraud the government of its just dues.

At the proper time we will be able to vindicate ourselves, and establish our entire innocence of the charges against us.

ADVOCATE OFFICE
Three o'clock P. M., Tuesday, March 14, 1876.

The river is 4 feet 10 inches below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending March 14:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales...	6,145
Red river		3,571
Ouachita river		4,510
Railroads		851
Mobile		25
Florida		1,181
Texas		20
Lake
Total		16,253

The movement of our staple this week has been generally satisfactory to our factors, while buyers have found it difficult to procure lists of even-running styles. The market on Wednesday declined ⅛c., causing factors to accept offers previously refused. Sales foot up 7,300 bales. Amount of stock unsold, 167,000 bales.

Thursday.—We notice a good demand and sales of 9,000 bales. New York, quiet but firm for spot cotton. Liverpool, easier, without change in quotations.

Friday.—The movement to-day disclosed great firmness on the part of sellers, and sales foot up 10,000 bales. Receipts, 4,042 bales. New York reports spots steady and firm; futures same. Liverpool, steady, unchanged.

Saturday.—Market active and strong. Low grades advanced ⅛c.; high grades ¼c. Sales, 14,191 bales. Receipts, 3,269 bales. New York, quiet. Liverpool, active and firm. Our quotations are as follows:

Low ordinary	9¾
Ordinary	10
Good ordinary	10¼
Low middling	11¾
Middling	12⅜
Good middling	13⅜

Monday.—Sales, 6,000 bales. Receipts, 9,528 bales, against 5,865 bales to same date last year. Market strong. New York, spots dull and easier, but futures steadier. Liverpool, buoyant; advance of ⅛c.

Tuesday.—Sales, 5,000 bales. Receipts, 5,281 bales. Visible world's supply, 3,082,310 bales. Market firm at prices of yesterday. New York, spots quiet and steady. Liverpool, steady and hardening.

The sales for the week add up 54,400 bales.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,201,530 bales, against 894,433 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 458,591 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 458,716, viz.: 3,011,573 against 3,002,920. In Liverpool from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 135,950 bales to Great Britain, of 82,787 to France, and of 24,792 to other foreign ports.

FOLEY'S

Celebrated Gold Pens

AND PENCILS,

THE FINEST AND BEST.

CIRCULAR.—To those engaged in mercantile pursuits, any invention that will facilitate their labor is highly worthy of notice, as well as of extensive patronage. One of the most important inventions of the present age is that of a pen that possesses the necessary qualities of fluidness in mark and durability in use. Pre-eminently such are those of JOHN FOLEY, manufacturer of FINE GOLD PENS AND PENCILS, No. 2 Astor House. Their superiority is tested by the long time he has been engaged in our city in their manufacture. We, the subscribers, who know the value of FOLEY'S PENS from constant use of them, for a number of years, cheerfully recommend them to those who wish for the best and most perfect gold Pen ever made.

GOD'S LILIES.

God's lilies droop about the world,
In sweetness everywhere;
How are the maiden souls who bear
Them comfort and to bear,
And in smile upon the heavy cross
That every one must wear.

Lilies, beautiful and meek!
They know God's will is right,
And so they raise their patient heads
In dark and stormy night,
And far above the eastern hills
They see the dawn of light.

They know that when their day is done,
And deep the shadow lies,
The cross will weary them no more;
So lightly they arise
To meet the angels when they call "Lilies of Paradise!"

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, March 14.—The Bank of the State of New York, and not the Bank of New York, has closed its doors. The following are the particulars: On Saturday last the bank examiner reported to a member of the clearinghouse committee that the affairs of this bank were in such condition as to require the attention of the clearinghouse. The committee were called together late on Saturday, and after a discussion decided to call in the conference committee.

A meeting of the joint committees was held this morning, and they called before them Duer, president, and Pattick, vice president of the Bank of the State of New York. Not receiving from them a satisfactory explanation, they unanimously decided to suspend the bank from the privileges of the clearinghouse until a full meeting of that body could be obtained. The examination shows a large number of unsettled over-drafts by which the capital has been impaired about one-half.

The Post says the Bank of the State of New York failure is of no commercial or financial importance, the entire effect will not be one-fourth as great as the failure of Dunn, Sherman & Co.

GALVESTON, March 14.—A News Brownsville special says: Parratt reached Matamoras last night with his command, and with his horses completely tired out. He had no encounter with Petra, who is said to be at Charco and Candido, on the Monterey road, about seventy-five miles west-west from Matamoras and forty miles from the river, where he awaits further bodies of insurgents from the interior.

To-day two Mexican officers from Matamoras, in full uniform, called on Col. Potter, with a formal note from Gen. Delabarra, announcing that he had this day taken command of the district of the Rio Grande, in accordance with orders from President Lerdo.

MEMPHIS, March 15.—The residence of Gen. Gid. Pillow was sold at bankrupt sale yesterday. There was no competition in bidding, and the residence worth probably $8,000 was bought by a gentleman for $26, and a valuable library by another for $11, and both were presented to Mrs. Pillow.

CONCORD, N. H., March 16.—Returns from 234 towns give Cheney, Republican, 41,240, Marey, Democrat, 37,474, Kendall and scattering 347, which makes Cheney's majority 1,419.

Ten towns are yet to hear from, the vote of which last year gave Cheney, Republican, 514; Roberts, Democrat, 592, and White, Temperance, 1. The latest count shows the house stands: Republicans, 207; Democrats, 178.

NASHVILLE, March 16.—Wooks, Heatman & Co., owners of the Cumberland Iron Works, of Stewart county, Tenn., have suspended. Liabilities about $250,000. Supposed the assets will probably cover the liabilities.

MEMPHIS, March 17.—An Avalanche Jackson (Miss.) special says: The Court of Impeachment Gov. Ames appeared by counsel, Thomas J. Durant, and five days were granted for him to answer. Lieut. Gov. Davis has resigned, and Gov. Ames will appoint a successor. Ex-Auditor Musgrove is a popular candidate of the Republicans. Warner, of Pearl river notoriety, is also an aspirant. Sheridan, superintendent of public education, will also resign.

MEMPHIS, March 18.—Ice formed last night a quarter of an inch thick, and is believed to have finished the fruit crop. Weather clear and cool to-day.

MEMPHIS, March 20.—From seven o'clock last evening to ten o'clock this morning ten inches of snow have fallen, and it is still snowing. The railroads stopped running and trains on all the roads were delayed. The streets were full of improvised sleighs. Such a snow storm was never witnessed before, the one of last March, which was unprecedented, only measuring about eight inches. Telegraphs south are prostrated, and it is not known how far south the storm has extended.

OKTIBBEHA, Miss., March 20.—A terrific gale prevailed here last night. Bath-houses, wharves, etc., were washed away. Two or three schooners were driven ashore. Much damage to shipping; estimated at $5,000. One man lost overboard from the schooner Indianola.

PASS CHRISTIAN, Miss., March 20.—A heavy storm raged here yesterday evening. More than half the wharves and bath-houses at this place were washed away, and those that remain are more or less damaged. No other damage nor any loss of life reported.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, March 15.—Don Calderon Collantand the foreign minister, speaking in Congress on religious questions, said the government trusted to the wisdom of the Pope and his affection for Spain. They hope Providence will prevent the nation from being divorced from the common head of the faithful. Sagosta's address defended religious toleration, which he declared the Vatican would never consent to grant, though it would accept accomplished facts.

LONDON, March 15.—Right Rev. Robert Milman, Bishop of Calcutta, is dead.

LONDON, March 16.—The weather has moderated. From all parts of the country come details of the destruction by the gale. In London roofs, skylights and chimneys were blown about. Telegraphs were prostrated. At Twickenham a house was crushed by falling trees, and at Chatham the military school was partly destroyed. The Rivers Cheerwell, Tone and others overflowed the country for miles.

Paris advices say Bercy, Courtz, Voie, Asnieres, Point du Jour, Auteuil, Sevres, St. Cloud and Suresnes are all more or less inundated, and the suffering is very great. Marshal and Madame McMahon have each visited separate quarters and distributed relief personally. Madame McMahon sent the prefect of the Seine five thousand francs. All the large streams between Paris and the eastern frontier of France are out of their banks.

The country for miles around is flooded. In Normandy the gale caused great damage. In Belgium the hurricane was terrific. The barometer at Liege fell below the lowest point on record. In all the towns parks were ravaged, roofs torn off and factory chimneys felled. At Aix-la-Chapelle the St. Nicholas church was unroofed. In Germany the storm was terrific, and generally on the Continent telegraph lines were damaged to an extent hitherto unparalleled.

MADRID, March 20.—King Alfonso and his victorious troops entered the city this morning, amid the enthusiastic cheering of the immense crowds and shouts of "Long live the Pacificator King!" Cheers were given for Gens. Quesada, Campos, Rivera, and the army generally.

Quesada and Campos were especially greeted with cries of "Long life to the Defenders of Liberty!" and "Down with the Egeros!" Crowns were thrown from the balconies, and the people crowned the soldiers, as they passed, with wreaths.

ROME, March 20.—Vesuvius is emptying. The lava flows toward Pompeii. A column of vapor from the summit reflects flames beneath. Vast quantities of lava are discharged. The scene is magnificent.

From the Work.

POLLARD CIRCUIT, PINEGROVE CHURCH.—Mr. Editor: I again pen you a few lines to let you know that we are still pressing forward with our Sabbath school and church, and I am thankful to say that we have a flourishing Sabbath school. We have a good and earnest superintendent—Bro. J. W. Williams. He is an old war horse—one who has been in the Methodist church for the past thirty years—and takes great pride in working for the Master. Our teachers, too, take great pains with their classes. The young ladies also have put their shoulders to the wheel, and are helping us along; and we are truly thankful to see that some of the parents of the scholars have taken an interest in our school. We have taken up two collections, and they went far above our expectations. Bro. Jennings, of Powelton, delivered a splendid address to our school yesterday, which we think will do great good. We take the periodicals, and have sent to Nashville for tune books.

Our little church is still growing and prospering. We have a preacher sent us this year who is calculated to build up any church—Bro. Walter P. Dickinson. He is a good man, and is loved by every one. There is something remarkable about our church—the Master seems to be present with us every time we meet.

Remain your brother in Christ,

THEODORE E. KELLY.

MARCH 13, 1876.

AMITE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: As this circuit is quite large there were two preachers appointed by the Conference to labor here, viz.: Bro. John Ritchey and myself. Our first quarterly meeting was held in this place on the eleventh and twelfth instant. Bro. Godfrey, our presiding elder, was present and preached very earnestly.

We have five hundred and forty-three members on this circuit; and I must say that I never have been treated with more kindness than since I arrived at this place.

There are a great many on this work, or circuit, who are walking in the "broad road that leads to eternal destruction," but if we can get the members of our church to arouse and give us their aid, and the aid of the Master to strengthen; we will get some; and I hope a great many of those who are going astray to turn unto the Lord, who will have mercy upon them, and unto our God, who will abundantly pardon.

D. W. MCLEAN,
Junior Pastor of Amite Ct.

LUCKEY, Miss., March 11, 1876.

PINEGROVE CHAPEL, FLA.—Mr. Editor: I am living five miles from Pensacola, six from the navy-yard, and three from Millview, near Pinegrove church. Bro. Dickinson is our preacher—a young man of fine talents, noted for his zeal in advancing the cause which he has espoused, and especially for his deep piety. We have a Sabbath school at Pinegrove church, and the motto of the children and the members of the school is to attend always on our stated meetings, and we may say it is growing in interest. I enjoy communion with my Savior, and I must say my heart is fixed, being stayed upon God.

MARCH 11, 1876.

University of Louisiana.

The commencement exercises of the Medical Department of the University of Louisiana took place at noon, March 17, at Grunewald Hall, Baronne street.

There was, as usual, a full attendance, a large number of the lady friends of the students and graduating class being present.

The salutatory was delivered by Prof. Ernest S. Lewis, M. D., on behalf of the faculty, and the valedictory, on behalf of the class, by Samuel D. Robbins, M. D.

The addresses of both gentlemen were impressive and graceful in diction, and characterized by the emotions natural to the occasion. The following is a list of the graduates:

The following are the gentlemen composing the faculty of this famous institution:

President—Randell Hunt, LL. D.

Faculty—T. G. Richardson, M. D., dean; Samuel M. Bemiss, M. D.; Stanford E. Chaille, M. D.; Samuel Logan, M. D.; Frank Hawthorn, M. D.; Joseph Jones, M. D.; Ernest S. Lewis, M. D.

Demonstrators of Anatomy—Edmond Souchon, M. D.; Albert B. Miles, M. D.—New Orleans Picayune.

The late Rev. John Angell James, of Birmingham, England, in preaching an ordination sermon, happened to say that he had seen three instances in which promising young men, beginning well, had been induced to marry young ladies of fortune, and in each case some affection of the chest or throat was soon discovered, and their wives persuaded their husbands to give up preaching. When Mr. James left the pulpit a young man followed him into the vestry and wished to offer some explanation. "What for?" said Mr. James; "have you married a lady of fortune, and have you given up your ministry?" "Yes," said the young man; "but I want to explain." "Oh, never mind," said Mr. James; "I can assure you that I was not alluding to you. You make the fourth, then, that I have known in the same circumstances."

A female lecturer says: "There is an immense field before every thoughtful, earnest woman." This must be in the country. While she is peering through the cracks of the fence in town, to see what is going on at her neighbor's, the thoughtful, earnest woman has a much more limited landscape before her.

Methodist Numerical Returns for 1875.

The Methodist Almanac for 1876 furnishes a large number of interesting tables, giving the latest Methodist statistics up to the close of 1875. We transfer to our columns the following summaries:

An Appeal for Morgan City.

I have already $700 subscribed. One lot of land, $100, and two-thirds of the lumber requisite. I want about $400 more, and then I think we can build a good, serviceable church. Morgan City has but five or six members—only a few Protestant families—but its prospective circumstances are favorable. We have some forty-five or fifty regular Sunday school scholars, out of which we hope to build up Methodism; and it being a growing place, likely to be a second New Orleans, I feel interested for the future of Methodism. Will you call the Louisiana Conference to our assistance? It is a little Mexico, made up of Catholics and Jews; hence we need assistance. State that Capt. J. M. Hamilton or Capt. J. N. Pharr will gladly receive anything for that purpose, at Morgan City. Capt. J. N. Pharr is our treasurer. I have had my Pattersonville church painted, reseated, carpeted, etc.—completely renovated—and religiously it is in a very prosperous condition. Hoping you will say a word for me in this respect, I am yours in the Lord,

A. E. TLAY.

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 17, 1876.

(NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—The above call for help, we hope, will receive many responses. Morgan City prospectively is an important point, and now is the time to provide for the future of Methodism there.

CORRECTION.—Mr. Editor: I wish to correct a typographic error in the minutes of the Conference, as due the Elmore circuit, as to the preacher's salary last year. It is published $150, and it should have been $190. Very respectfully,

BASCOM C. GLENN.

GROVE HILL, CLARKE CO., ALA., March 13, 1876.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States will meet in the First Presbyterian church of Savannah, Ga., on the third Thursday (eighteenth day) of May, 1876, at eleven o'clock A. M. The opening sermon will be preached by the Rev. Moses D. Hoge, D. D., moderator of the last Assembly.

It costs more to avenge than to forgive.

Christian Beneficence.—The Tenth.

BY REV. H. L. SUMMERLIN, D. D.

What is the interpretation of "as God has prospered him?" If a merchant has cashed his net profits, and then says, Now I will first pay the salaries of my clerks and porters and cartmen and then a dozen other expenses, and what remains I will call God's prosperings, and from that amount only I will give my proportion to the Lord, would that be the right interpretation? If a man, receiving his salary, would say, Now I must first deduct my household expenses, and from the rest, as God's prosperings, I will give my proportions, would that be the right interpretation? If a mechanic or a workman receives his earnings on Saturday, and says, Now I will first pay off, as far as it will reach, my last year's debts; and from the rest, if any, I feel bound to make my offering as from God's prosperings, would that be the right interpretation?

And here we find a fitting place to mention a certain phrase which sounds very honorable and dignified and praiseworthy and virtuous, and to a certain extent is so, but which, abused, becomes a snare of the devil—namely, the phrase: "First, just before generous." I must pay my honest debts; I must first do justice to myself and my creditors; I must first be just before I can be generous; and with this the claims of the poor, the church, the gospel and the missions are often dismissed. And have we no debts to pay to our Preserver and Protector and Provider and King? And are these heavy debts to our God not honest debts? And does such a one justice to himself in defrauding his chief creditor? We make a difference between our creditors and deliberate and decide who is to be paid first and who last. And must the great Jehovah in heaven, who has the strongest and longest of all claims on our estate, body and soul, be placed behind the last creditor on earth? and this perhaps only because he is for a time the most lenient? Is that the boasted honesty of being first just before generous? Ah, the man who is airing his probity and integrity in this way is deceiving himself when he thinks he is a just man.

But again, if a proprietor gets in his rents and says, I will first make such and such improvements on houses, barns, stables or lands; I will invest so much in new property; I will buy me a new suit of clothing; I will give to my wife so much, to my children so much, and from the rest I will make out my proportion for the Lord's cause, would that be the right interpretation of "as God has prospered him?" Or if a farmer would leave out of account the rent of his land and of all his buildings, the whole year's good and fat living of his family, his servants and his cattle, and if asked to make his estimate of the prosperings of God for one year would say, I have actually sold and received cash for produce from my farm so much, and that is the only amount from which I will tax myself for the church, would that be the right interpretation? Again, if the lightning has struck a tree only a few rods from our dwelling, if the hail has cut down the crops just beyond our farm, and our houses and lands were left unmanured, may not that be called, God has prospered us? Or if we are traveling and are not blown up by the steamboat, not scalded by the bursting boiler, not burnised and broken by the telescoping railroad cars, or if we are working daily with edged tools or in dangerous places, and come home to our comfortable dwelling and smiling family well and sound, week after week, may that not be called, God has prospered us? If we have all around us of scarlet fever and smallpox and cholera and pneumonia and distemper, and all the hundred aches of the hundred parts of the body, but almost never feel these sicknesses; or if we lay us down to refreshing rest with strong memory and unimpaired intellect, and awake in the morning from undisturbed sleep with all our faculties bright, and not as lunatics, may we not call that, God has prospered us?

After throwing out these hints we ask again: What is the precise interpretation of "laying by as much as God has prospered us?" We are not going to tell, because it is a question between each Christian's conscience and God, because it is God's touchstone for each Christian's "gold of the gospel," because it is every Christian's own business to find out how much he or she loves the Lord. But thus far we have opened only half the question. After everybody for himself has found out how large shall be the personal amount to be taxed for church purposes, the next grave question arises: How large shall be the proportion of this amount, how large the percentage; for only when the whole church of God agrees in the percentage, and pays it, will the smallest as well as the largest gift be of like value before God. And here we will tell: more than the tenth part of our income; more than ten cents from every dollar received: God has demanded the seventh part of our time, and we readily give him the Sabbath, for which obedience we receive abundant blessings. God has demanded more than the tenth part of our income, and we are far from yielding it readily, for which disobedience abundant blessings are withheld from us. Now about the tenth we hear immediately the old, comfortable objection: "Ah, that was in the Old Testament dispensation; under gospel times this is abrogated." Who has abrogated it? When was it abrogated? Where in the whole gospel or even in the whole Bible stands it written that it was abrogated? Does our text abrogate it because it demands more? Christ, the only competent person, has abrogated the ceremonial law and all the types of him. Is spreading the church of God by our contributions a ceremony or a type? To those who in one sweeping assertion affirm that the law of Moses is abrogated, we make answer that, if it were so, which it is not, this law of the tenth is, like the Sabbath law, of much older date. Jacob promised the tenth in Bethel. "Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Of all thou shalt give me. That means as long as I live thou wilt give me, and as long as I live I will give thee the tenth of all of it. He does not say, "after defraying sundry expenses," but of all received I will give the tenth unto thee. And he gave it regularly, and got rich by giving. And this at a time when there was no church to sustain, and when the high priest of the tribe was his own father. And was this thank-offering invented by Jacob? No, it was as a law received from his ancestor Abraham. Abraham, after a successful battle acknowledging God's preservation, gave the tenth to Melchisedek, the priest of the most high God. And does it seem as if Abraham invented this custom, or does it not rather appear that he already recognized it as a law come down from the first offerings of Cain and Abel? The Sabbath is often mentioned in the New Testament, but not in one of all the places is it a direct command to us to give this time to the Lord. Yet we receive and keep this law from the Old Testament, because it is a moral law. Why do we not receive and keep the law about the tenth on the same ground? for it is also a moral law. Yea, those who speak about abrogation in gospel time have more reason to neglect the Sabbath law than the law about the tenth, for the Sabbath is not directly commanded in the New Testament, and the tenth is. Where? I hear eagerly asked, Where? In the gospel according to Matthew, chapter 23, verse 23: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye pay tithe of mint and anise and cummin, and have omitted the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy and faith; these ought ye to have done, and not leave the other undone." These, judgment, mercy and faith, ought ye to have done, and not leave the other—the tithes—undone. Here you have the direct command from the lips of God, the Son himself: Ye ought to do judgment, mercy and faith, and ye ought not to leave undone the tithes. And how fearfully strengthened is this command by Jesus calling "hypocrites" and pronouncing his "Woe!" over those who leave either of these duties undone.

So much about the law binding us to contribute as our just debt to God not less than the tenth of all our income. Now a few reflections about the "more" than the tenth. The law in the Old Testament did demand besides the tenth of all the income, which was for the priests, the first fruits, or the sixtieth part of the whole harvest. The corners and edges of the fields as well as the sheaf-binders were for the poor. Every seventh year there was no harvest. Every seventh year all debts were canceled, and all slaves who wanted it set free. Then a ransom was to be paid for the first son; half shekels had to be offered for the sanctuary; other rates were laid on for the poor, until a true Israelite had to contribute far more than the tenth, some say the fifth, some even the third of his income. Now comes the great question: Dare we as true Christians do less? It seems to our penurious idea of sustaining the gospel bewildering! nevertheless, here is the plain question: Dare we do less? The Israelites had only one temple to build and keep in Jerusalem; we have thousands of churches everywhere, and multiplying. Dare we do less? The Israelites had to keep up the religion of the true God only in their own borders, while we have to spread it and keep it up in the whole earth. Dare we do less? Think of the two inscriptions on the two different medals of reward. The one of steel: "Woe, ye hypocrites!" the other of refined gold: "God loveth a cheerful giver!"—Christian Intelligencer.

George Ticknor describes the way in which the news of Washington's death was received: "There never was a more striking or spontaneous tribute paid to a man than here in Boston when the news came of Washington's death (1799.) It was a little before noon; and I often heard persons say at the time that one could know how far the news had spread by the closing of the shops. Each man, when he heard that Washington was dead, shut his store as a matter of course, without consultation, and in two hours all business was stopped. My father came home and could not speak, he was so overcome; my mother was alarmed to see him in such a state, till he recovered enough to tell her the sad news. For some time every one, even the children, wore crape on the arm; no boy could go into the street without it. I wore it, though only eight years old."

The Rev. E. M. Bounds, we are sorry to state, says the Nashville Christian Advocate of March 16, has had to take a furlough for his health. He gave us a call on his way from St. Louis to Eufaula.

WHAT IS THAT TO THEE?

BY THOMAS D. JAMES.

I would not vainly choose
[illegible]
Was put, confined in the crystal fountain
[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

When I at earth's call
[illegible]
I fain would not weep
My treasures which all on [illegible]
Whose [illegible]

It [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
Bright as the one to fall
[illegible]
With fairest glory on the [illegible]

How grateful should I be!
If I might still behold my loved ones longer,
My children, till my hand in theirs should wander,
Might linger to reveal
The hopes that beyond life the near unveil—
Heaven's evening only exhale.

It sudden be the stroke,
If all unready [illegible]
Unheralded, fast followed by the thunder's crashing,
That scathes the skyward oak,
We'll pale with fear behold our hated mouth,
Aware of the swift messenger of death.

How blest the favored lot
Of the new departed spirits given,
Fearless to pass from earth and sin to heaven,
Who nothing were not
Departing were about [illegible]
On [illegible] pinions to the open sky.

So I repose my trust
In Him who thus speeds messenger divine,
Content my patient way my Lord's delaying,
To summon me to rest.
Meanwhile no willing trust would dwell
[illegible] Who doeth all things well.

Centenary College.

Your committee would direct special attention to Centenary College. The trustees and faculty deserve special commendation for their unfaltering efforts and special zeal in behalf of the institution committed to their charge.

In the present aspects of the educational interests of our country we are more profoundly impressed than ever that it is necessary not only to co-operate with the officers in enlarging its power for good, but that extraordinary efforts should be put forth to constitute Centenary the great Protestant educational center in Louisiana.

Resolved, That we rejoice to learn of the present prosperity of Centenary College, and the hopefulness of its future.

Resolved, That we earnestly recommend our ministers to labor to the utmost of their ability to sustain and enlarge this great educational enterprise of our Conference.—Minutes of the Louisiana Annual Conference for 1875, pages 23 and 24.

So far, so good. Here is the duty recognized; there remains now but its performance. Here is the pledge; there remains its fulfillment.

Centenary College is at once the pride and the reproach of all lovers of thorough training in the Southwest. The pride not merely for the memories that cluster around it, and the hoary crown of honor that speaks of that experience which is the only safe promise of future success, not merely for the illustrious list of names that answer to the roll-call of its sons, and of those whose deeds speak for them now the voices are still; not merely for what it has been and done in the past, is Centenary College our pride; but for what it is now, and is doing in the great battle with ignorance and consequent vice.

Some ten years have passed since this college seemed not only dead and buried beneath the ruins of its own fallen buildings, needing, it is true, no other monument but its past glorious record, yet without money enough to buy one if it had needed it. Yet within this decade we have seen it rise from its ruins, and it stands now with the mantle of all its former glory wrapped about it in the ranks with the colleges of the country, not merely ready to do, but actually doing good, honest, faithful work.

And surely Centenary could do no other kind of work. There are too many memories lingering about those halls, too many ghosts would be walking uneasy after nightfall to admit of any shirking. The records and traditions of the past are of very great value to the college—a value the peculiar character of which only an educator can fully appreciate. These are its jewels, but they are jewels merely; and this brings us to the second proposition, viz.: that Centenary College is our reproach as well as our pride.

No one will dispute the statement, who is familiar with the history of this college during the past ten years, that it owes its present degree of prosperity, its very existence in fact, to the efforts of one man—the president of its board of trustees. That he has been seconded in his efforts to redeem this interest, very much as the mountain streams are seconded by the dewdrops in their effort to form a river, is not denied; but all will agree that up to this point the burden has mainly rested upon one man's shoulders. It is probable that no one but Bishop Keener could have done this work. It was a one-man work, though that man needed to be a giant. But the work before the college now no one man can do, were he a thousand times a giant.

Centenary College now needs but one thing, it is true; but that is Briareus, and only the many can supply—patronage. Money if you have it, but young men if you have to borrow them—this is what Centenary needs, and her need is our reproach.

Public attention just now is directed toward Vanderbilt University somewhat to the detriment of our colleges. The relation which these institutions sustain to each other will be treated of in a future article, in which will be made to appear more fully the necessity for sustaining just such a college as Centenary promises to become.

Christianity in Earnest.

MR. EDITOR: It was Chalmers, I believe, who once said: "Methodism is Christianity in earnest;" but that was a long time ago, when Methodism was method, when men and women lived and acted methodically, consistently, and in accordance with the word of God, and when they were willing to deny themselves of such worldly pleasures, as were in their nature calculated to destroy a praying spirit, a calm, and heavenly mind, and a growth in grace.

No one can be said to possess the virtues, the holy tempers, and the meek and lowly mind that was in Christ Jesus, who is intermitting in the practice of Christian duties, or who exposes himself to the malarial influence of worldly pleasures. "Christianity in earnest" cannot flourish or become aggressive, or mighty as an army with banners, where the members of the church live in the common ways of unregenerate men and women, conforming to the customs of the world, and taking a part in such amusements as the worldly-minded delight in—amusements gotten up by those who do not claim lot nor parcel in Christianity, and styled by them harmless amusements.

If our common life is not a continual course of humility, self-denial, renunciation of the amusements of the world, poverty of spirit, and heavenly affections, it is impossible for us to be Christians in earnest. It is an undeniable fact that an open, uniform, and visible practice of all these virtues is essential to a full development of scriptural holiness, and a growth in all the graces of the spirit; yet but little of this is to be found in many, and may I not say a majority of church members? True, we often see them at places of worship, and much pleased with popular preachers preachers who never meddle with the common customs of the world, nor stir up the conscience of the lukewarm. But look into their lives, and we find them not only lukewarm, but like others who make no pretensions to Christianity. They have the same taste for the common amusements of the world; the same worldly cares and fears and joys, and are often found at circuses, laughing at the vulgar jests of the clown; at the theater, taking delight at obscene representations and language; in the ball room, and, if not engaged in the giddy dance, giving encouragement to others who can exercise their feet better than their brains. We see in them the same pride and vanity, the same self-love and indulgence, the same levity of mind and unprofitable conversation. Such church members are always glad to find an apology for the indulgences of which they are fond, and are ever ready to listen to the voice of those who suggest to them that strict notions of religion, order, self-denial and cross-bearing are old-fashioned and illiberal. Such professors have very little use for "Christianity in earnest;" and one thing is certain: that without such Christianity we need not look for conversions at our ordinary appointments, at prayer meetings or class meetings. Of late years it is a rare thing to hear of a conversion except at a protracted or camp meeting. But why is this so? One reason may be inferred from what has already been said; but another reason is the love of excitement, and this innate principle is cultivated by the wisdom of the world. The managers of circuses, theaters, and the getters-up of balls, all understand how to create an excitement in a community, and draw off the minds of people from other objects and pursuits.

People in general, and especially the young, have been of late years so accustomed to such excitement that they now take but little interest in the fixed principles of Christianity, or what might be considered a normal state of Christianity—a state in which, without a high excitement, faith is shown by works. Hence ministers of the gospel find, in their regular pulpit and pastoral work, that it is as much as they can possibly do to keep their flocks from straying off into jungles infested with devouring wolves.

This love of excitement has become so fixed and universal that it is almost impossible, however faithfully the pastor may discharge his duties, to keep up a sufficient interest in religion, with a majority of his members, to make Christianity earnest enough to render it impressible on the unregenerate and carnally-minded. In order, then, to accomplish this he has in some measure to follow the wisdom of the world—create an excitement by sending off for some popular preacher or preachers, so as to get up an excitement that will overbalance other excitements; and this will account for the great work accomplished by Moody and Sankey; not that they have undue excitement in their meetings, but that great preparations are made for them, a large amount of money expended in procuring and fitting up extensive buildings for them to hold their meetings in, while the newspapers, both religious and political, herald their coming, and the penny-a-liners make daily reports of what they say and sing, and if the judges, generals and senators who are honored with seats on the platform; and thus the entire community is kept in a high state of excitement—an excitement that overcomes worldly excitements.

The Christianity that we want is a Christianity of such deep earnestness as to make us contented with that excitement produced by peace of mind, peace of conscience, and a well-grounded assurance that our peace is made with God—a Christianity that will enable the Christian in the darkest hours to sing:

"Vain, delusive world, adieu,
With all of creature good!
Only Jesus I pursue,
Who bought me with his blood!
All thy pleasures I forego,
I trample on thy wealth and pride,
Only Jesus will I know,
And Jesus crucified."

Errors or Heresy in Methodism.

MR. EDITOR: In the ADVOCATE of August 12, 1875, is an article headed "The Providences of God," which may appear very plausible to those who behold the providence of God only from one point of view of which human reason is capable, leaving out the mystery of God's providence, which no human or finite mind can comprehend, and proceeds to a criticism which cannot possibly do any good, as it gives nothing better than that which is condemned, or at least nothing clearer, and carries with the entire article an unjust criticism of language used by good people, and "even Methodist ministers occupying a high position in the church;" thus unnecessarily involving their reputation and depreciating their usefulness in preaching with unbelieving and skeptical people. In all the expressions save one—viz.: "Well, I suppose it had to be so"—an Antinomian view—I see no occasion for criticism, as they do not necessarily convey an erroneous idea of God's providence any more than Job's language when he speaks of events with which all Bible readers are acquainted: "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord" (Job i, 21,) and many other like expressions to be found all through the Bible. And as to God's will concerning evil as well as good, we refer to Job's language to his wife, chapter ii: "Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. What! shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips." And so I think, all things being considered, it may be said of the "Methodist ministers occupying a high position in the church"—in all this they have not sinned with their lips. Infidels, deists, etc., resist the whole Bible to their destruction; yet we have no authority to cease holding it up to the world as the word of God. Those who will take the pains to investigate the truth of the Bible will accept and believe it; so those who will inform themselves concerning the providence of God will accept the language in which it is taught, and believe it, notwithstanding the mystery involved in it.

Surely none but would-be smart and uncommonly original men will quibble about language for which nothing better can be substituted, and concerning which no criticism can do any good, as is the case of infidels, deists, etc., who quibble about the Bible, and thereby do much evil. As to the article itself, I think it would require no great deal of knowledge of logic to detect its fallacies. I shall attempt no discussion of the providence of God. I think it is very clearly taught in the Bible. If any are very curious about it, I refer them to Mr. Watson, Ralston and many other divines who have fully exhausted the subject. I think it is right to correct errors and faults, but the virtue of reproof is lost when done publicly and with an unjust criticism. In this way very frequently a greater evil is brought into existence than the one already existing.

Now, Mr. Editor, while I am not particularly concerned about retaining the phrases condemned, yet since they are often used by our best and most pious men, who never held nor taught predestination, I dislike to hear such a grave charge published to the world against the Methodist ministry, which has done, is doing and will do a great deal of good in building up the Master's kingdom. "O that Methodists, and especially Methodist ministers, would cease to teach the doctrine of predestination!" How does this sound as coming from a Methodist, and in a Methodist paper? Do not the world and the devil laugh in their sleeves at such as this? If heresy prevails to such an extent that a public cry becomes necessary, who will accept Methodist preaching any more?

If private reproof fails to do any good it would be better to arraign the guilty before the proper tribunal, and correct such in a more private way. Undoubtedly less evil would result. I do hope that, when a fault or error is thought to be discovered in any of our ministers, private reproof, and not public, will be given. The writer of the article may, and I hope will, disclaim any intention of issuing a public reproof, or of doing any harm, yet every one can see the evil done.

Warning to Protestant Parents.

DEAR FRIENDS: For a long while I have hoped that some one more able than I am would speak in a voice of warning to the parents of our American children, or to Protestants everywhere. When I look over the land and see the many schools of the Church of Rome, and know that our children are there learning their first lessons, it makes my heart sick, and I pray for God to open the eyes of parents before it is too late. Many think there is no harm done to their young children by the association. They will not believe that the abbess who acts the part of mother to all around her, and the sisters who are kind and affectionate, and appear as perfect saints, will try to convert their young minds to their own faith. We are told by inspiration to "train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it." And every-day experience has taught us the truthfulness of this proverb. There is no religion, or, I should say, form of religion, more fascinating to the minds of the young and the ignorant than Catholicism, with its solemnities and imposing pretenses, its grand choirs, organs, noble edifices, and inimitable pictures and statues. These all make an impression hard to be forgotten, and often it never is. But, you will say, they take so much more care of our children, they learn so much more, and it is not so expensive. Let us examine this a little. I have had opportunity of knowing many young ladies educated within the convent of C., and others. The catalogues of study are the same; the faculties of our colleges, we know, are able to do all they promise, while of those of the convent we know nothing. The difference in charges is a mere figment; and oh! how much better to trust your loved ones to persons who, you think, are possessed of well-balanced minds, and will teach their young hearts to worship God, and love and keep his commands, than to trust them to the care of "semi-lunatics," who go along with long faces, worshiping images, praying to the saints, and counting their beads. I have known but few who have come from their convents whose minds were not in some way biased in their favor. And see how poorly they are taught! They are well qualified, many of them, in the ornamental branches, while their minds are like an uncultivated garden filled with weeds and brambles. Now is a time for us to watch and pray. What good have they ever done? Watch them closely. You say: "Look at the hospitals and places of danger. There you will see the saint-like face of some sister who has given up the world, and devotes her life to good deeds." Then why does she seek the most public places to do her good deeds? "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." Do they practice this? I tell you that you will seldom if ever see them around the abode of poverty, with their good deeds, unless they know the world will see and take note of it. I cannot say all that I want to say to you, my friends. My language is too poor to express the danger we are in by exposing our young children to their forms and ceremonies. May God in his mercy open your eyes to this great danger. Look how much the Catholics are doing to get a foothold in every city or town of any note. Let us as mothers look well to the ways of our children, and teach them to shun the evil ways, and God will give us help. I wish I could tell of many things that I know of that have been done within the convent walls of our own land. But enough. That God may bless and keep us from harm is my prayer.

OBITUARIES.

JOHN FELDER.

During the changes in the manners, customs and times in a life of above fourscore years, there was almost every kind of influence brought to bear upon him, but he was steadfast in the midst of all opposition. He was inclined to shun the company of ministers before his conversion, but when converted he desired to be with them, and spent the night among them. From that time he delighted in the company of the preachers, and his home was always open to share with them its comforts. Having tasted the good word of God, and believing in the power of godliness, he was willing, according to his ability, to minister the grace he had received to others. For many years he labored efficiently in prayer meetings, and in the offices of class-leader and exhorter. There was a spirit of humility, accompanied with earnest importunity, in his prayers that caused the tears to flow from his eyes, and those who heard him were melted to tears.

In the class meetings his words of comfort, support and reproof were judiciously given, as occasion required, and his sympathy for the erring was manifest in his patient endeavors to reclaim them. As an exhorter he was clear and earnest. Without any show of studied rhetoric, there was an eloquence in his exhortations that touched the hearts more than it pleased the ears of those who heard. His manner, the tone of his voice and the expression of his countenance all indicated the strong solicitude he felt for the salvation of sinners. He wept over the sins of his fallen fellow-man, and he rejoiced in the hope of redemption through the precious blood of Jesus. His labor is not lost. Children and children's children rise up to bless him while he receives his final reward.

John Felder was married three times. His first marriage was to Elizabeth Sandell, with whom he had seven children. His second wife was Mrs. Simmons, who gave him one child before her death. His third marriage was to Mrs. Shaddix, who is still living. These marriages take no child in a manner to detract from the propriety and marriages of other children. Among the brothers and nephews of John Felder there have been six preachers, and his people are in Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas, and perhaps some other States. More than sixty years a layman in the church, his religion passed through fiercest contests, wars, fire-arenals, court-conventions, prosperity and adversity, and carried with him to the grave the conviction that a good man is gone. He had friends, and he showed himself friendly.

A philanthropist, a patriot, and a Christian, he was a friend and promoter of every good work according to his ability. As a neighbor he was so constant in his attention to the sick and suffering that he attained a considerable degree of success in the treatment of diseases. Availing himself of the aid of a few medical works, he gained a knowledge of medicine which he applied, for the relief of those who desired his services. As a husband, father and a citizen he was true to his trust, and has left behind him a worthy example to those who come after him. He was very much attached to the doctrines and usages of the Methodist Church, and, although educated in the principles of Methodism in this country, and trained in the style of those times, he heartily approved some of the changes that have been made in the discipline of the church, which he doubted about others. The duties of religion were not burdensome to him. He delighted in the worship and service of God. As long as he was able to be at the public worship his place was occupied, and he gave evidence that it was his greatest enjoyment. His person was inspiring to the preacher, for he was an attentive hearer, and the glow of joy upon his countenance indicated that his mind was in harmony with the truth. On occasions of revival in the church he would rejoice, weep, and many such passed with him during his sojourn here in expectation of a crown of rejoicing.

J. W. SHARP.

IN MEMORIAM.

DIED, February 15, 1876, at her residence in Amite county, Miss., MRS. LUCY McNEIL, relict of Daniel McNeil, Sr., in the 72d year of her age.

The maiden name of our deceased friend was Cochran Sworth. She was born in the State of Georgia, March 26, 1804. Her parents, during her infancy, moved from her native State to Amite county, Miss.; and here where the exhalations of those regions served to invigorate and develop the germinating traits, and foster the sterling virtues which were the admirable attributes of her amiable character, were spent in usefulness and honor her allotted days; and here too, toward the evening of declining life, surrounded by weeping friends, she sank peacefully into that slumber which knows no awakening save on the morning of everlasting life.

The subject of this tribute was married to Daniel McNeil, Sr., in February, 1824, and became the fond mother of a devoted and affectionate son, who lives to mourn the loss of such a mother, and a lovely and idolized daughter, who, having gone before, it may be, with her father, still lingers on the golden sands of the farther shore to await the coming of the loved one that they may be the first to greet her when she gets home to the better land, where those reunited part no more, where sorrow cannot come, and where pleasures perpetually reign.

For upward of forty years she was an exemplary and consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was never disconnected with it. Her piety, though never ostentatious or demonstrative, was fervently sincere, and characterized by gentleness, simplicity and charitable benevolence.

Endowed with a mind of masculine energy, disciplined by the teachings of religious precepts, and guided by the purest instincts and noblest sentiments of woman's gentle heart, in all the varied relations of wife, mother and friend her social intercourse beautifully illustrated the Christianity which she professed, and the profound sympathy of all who knew her, with her bereaved relatives, is an involuntary, homage which our hearts yield as tribute to the exalted worth of the deceased, and a reward which virtue alone can exact.

The death of her only daughter, who, as child, friend and companion, had so entwined around and grown to her mother's heart that the sundering of the tender ties that bound them so wounded that mother's heart that her great sorrow seemed completely to overwhelm her; nor could time's healing balm, or the loving ministrations of relatives and friends, ever afterward dissipate the settled melancholy with which the "grim sorrow" shadowed her subsequent life. It seemed beyond aid, or hope of relief.

Pining for the loved and lost, impaired health, and, in despite of medical skill, and the offices of loving devotion which would have detained her here, she lingered but awhile, feeble but without suffering, and then passed away as gently as infancy sleeps. Apparently conscious of its approach, she was prepared for death, expressed her willingness to die, and said that she knew that she was at peace with God.

BRO. RUSSELL H. COONER died at his residence in Lowndesboro, Ala., on Sunday morning, February 6, 1876. He was born in South Carolina, December 16, 1827, on the ninth of January, 1854, he was married to Miss Sarah M. Lasage. In 1857 or 1858 joined the Methodist Protestant Church, of which he was an acceptable member until 1865, when, together with many others, transferred his membership to the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Bro. Cooner was a man whose feelings lay very far beneath the surface, and consequently made little demonstration of religious emotion, and had but little to say concerning his religious experience; but those who knew him well recognized the fact that his life was controlled by Christian principles, and that he was accustomed to respond promptly and cheerfully to the call of duty.

During the last few years of his life health was quite feeble. He had several partial strokes of paralysis, and was debarred from taking a very active part either in secular or religious matters. For a time he continued to attend the public ordinances of religion, but for several years before his death was too feeble to enjoy this privilege. He was conscious of the precarious condition of his health, and he expected and prepared for death. In the privacy of his own family, and also before his pastor, he expressed himself as resigned. He expressed abiding faith in Christ and conversed freely of the approaching event.

On February 5 the fatal stroke came. He had been unusually well and cheerful during the day, but while sitting by the fire just as night came on, his wife discovered that his tongue was paralyzed. He was quickly placed in bed and a physician summoned; but gradually the paralysis extended to every member of his body, defying every remedial agency, and at five o'clock the next morning he breathed his last.

Bro. Cooner will be missed by his community and the church, for in all the relations of life he was a safe, reliable man. In such times as these such men will be spared. His pastor,

J. M. MAY.

BRO. WALTER T. C. ANDERSON was much beloved and highly respected by the brethren and people generally. He was a man of influence and position, and at the time of his death master of Masonic and Grange lodges at [illegible], member of the board of stewards and [illegible]—a man who looked well into his business, everything free from tangle, as temporal matters were concerned, he literally "set his house in order." He was prosperous in business, leaving a competency of earthly goods for his family. He became a member of the church when a boy but subsequently withdrew. He became a member the second time in 1871, and at that time on remained a regular church member at her altar. His religious profession was not of that demonstrative and ecstatic type that you sometimes meet. This was doubtless owing to the fact that he was naturally reserved in matters pertaining to religion. He sometimes doubted his conversion; again would take courage and go on. He was gentle, kind, affectionate, courteous, liberal. He was born in Lowndes county, Miss., October 7, 1825, and came to this parish (Carroll) in 1847 and engaged in planting. On the twenty-ninth of June, 1852, he was wedded to Mrs. P. J. Jackson, a lady every way worthy, with whom he lived happily until the seventh of February, 1876, when his earthly toil and suffering were brought to an end. The spirit, being burdened of its load, sped its way to its Creator's arms. His death spread a gloom over all. As wave after wave chases each other, so we are pressing hard after those our friends gone before, and soon we will rest in our Father's house above, where family is complete in Him.

CHINA.—The Chinese are commonly said to number 400,000,000, but in fact exact data are wanting. There are probably about 320,000,000 of people in China. The most important fact is that this is an enormously burdensome population. Is it by any means the most dense one that is known. Great Britain had in 1831 212 persons to each square mile, and Ireland had 270. France in 1846 had an average of 224. Belgium in 1836 had 321 to the square mile. Provinces of Italy have at various times gone quite beyond these figures; a notable case in Lucca which in 1839 had 400 persons to the square mile. Now in China the average population to the square mile is 268. If we consider the means of supporting a large population the case is much more favorable. No other people get so much of their food out of the water as Chinese. And yet it appears that for every person there are two acres of cultivated land. In Ireland there are two persons to each arable acre. Each person has an average in France of one and two thirds acres; in Holland, one and three-fourths acres; in England, two acres. Remember, now, that the Chinese use the soil to produce rice and other vegetables, pork, ducks, geese and fish furnishing them flesh, and you may safely assume that China could support a very large increase of her population.

THE YEAR.

We weave but blindly at the loom,
Nor see the picture, save in parts;
Not ours to mark the gleam or gloom,
But rather on with patient hearts.

When the bright angel overhead
The soul-wrought tapestry unfurls,
Perhaps the tears we slowly shed
May gleam amid the gold like pearls.

The sorrow which has crushed the life,
A lily blooms, in azure bell;
And daily care and toil and strife
In bud and flower may stand revealed.

One thing is left us undisturbed—
We still can work and love and give.
No matter how the life's perturbed,
In living, we learn how to live.

Biblical Research.

—Some gleanings from Mr. George Smith's new book, "The Chaldean Account of Genesis," will probably be not unacceptable to our readers. He really seems to have succeeded in identifying the biblical Nimrod with the hero of the great Babylonian Epic, in twelve books, who is provisionally called Izdubar. Izdubar was the Hercules of Chaldea, and his broad and muscular limbs and contests with the wild beasts are frequently depicted upon engraved seals and cylinders. The four cities over which Nimrod ruled are regarded by Mr. Smith as the same as those which owned the sovereignty of Izdubar. We hope hereafter when further fragments of the Epic have been examined, to give some account of this "mighty" conqueror and hunter of the ancient world. His chief counselor is said to have been Hea-bani—"He is my creator"—who is represented with a goat's legs, tail and horns. This Hea-bani had lived a hermit's life in a desolate cave, tended by a tiger, until the two handmaids of the goddess Istar induced him to visit Erech and take up his abode in the court of Izdubar. One of the books of the Epic introduces Hea-bani as holding a conversation with the trees of the forest, praising one and sneering at another, while the trees have the power of hearing and answering him. This reminds us of Jotham's parable in Judges ix, where the olive and other trees are endowed with the faculty of speech. Another illustration of Judges is furnished by Mr. Smith's book. One of the Assyrian tablets translated by him describes a riddle put by a certain wise man to the gods. He asks what it is "that is in the secret place, that is in the foundation of the house, that stands on the floor of the house; that is in the vicinity of the house, which by the sides of the house goes down, which lies down in the ditch of the house when open, which roars like a bull, which brays like an ass, which flutters like a sail, which bleats like a sheep, which barks like a dog, which growls like a bear, which into the breast of a man enters, which into the breast of a man enters?" It is evident that the answer is the wind. The riddle of the same nature as that proposed by Samson to the Philistines in Judges xiv, 14. One of the most curious documents given by Mr. Smith is the legend of the exploits of Lubara, the god of the plague. The seven great gods resorted to Anu that the wickedness of mankind had become excessive; and Anu thereupon ordered Lubara to punish the sinners. First of all, the people of the black race[?] of Adam, the inhabitants of Babylonia, felt the avenging stroke of the god. Then the pestilence swept over Assyria, Elam and Arabia, and made its way to Palestine. The whole legend expressed the conviction that murders must not go unpunished, and that a national calamity like a plague is sent by Heaven on account of human wickedness. We need not quote parallels from the Old Testament. They will occur to the mind of every reader. Even the description of Lubara drawing out his sword," "filling his bow," and "flying like a bird," "crouching at the gate, over the corpses of chiefs and slaves placing his feet," recalls the account of the angel of pestilence whom David saw "stretching out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it," in Second Samuel xxiv. The seven great gods, too, who report the doings of mankind to Anu, may be compared with the sons of God, who, we are told in Job ii, "present themselves before God after walking up and down the earth."

An examination has lately been made of the great Lycian obelisk from Xanthus, now in the British Museum. It is covered with writing, of the most part in Lycian, though there is a short inscription in Greek, which is now found that the Greek is a transcript of a portion of the Lycian; and an important addition has thus been made to the few bilingual Lycian inscriptions at present known. It appears that the obelisk was erected in the time of Cyrus and in commemoration of Harpagus, the Persian general to whom the conquest of Asia Minor was mainly due. Some Persian titles have been detected in the inscription.—Independent.

Alcoholic Drinks in England.

The capital which is invested in the production of alcohol in the British Isles is not less than £170,000,000, the enormous addition which would have to be made to this vast sum, if the value were given of the capital employed in the production of wine in the wide stretch of the wine-yielding countries, it is quite impossible to conceive. In the financial year ending in 1871, the duties collected within the British Isles for the various forms of fermented drink were: For foreign spirits, £5,320,[illegible]; for foreign wine, £1,080,855; home-made spirits, £11,633,963; and for malt to be converted into beer, £7,-[illegible]5,657. If to these various sums there be added the further amount which represents the brewers' license, including the place of the hop duty, and the duty on sugar consumed in brewing, it at once appears that at the present time the public revenue derives yearly a clear £40,000,000 from direct taxes levied on alcoholic drink; and it will be further observed that of this great sum very nearly two-thirds relate to the concentrated form in which the powerful agent is procured by the employment of the still—that is, by the application of science and art to strengthen the spirit beyond the point to which it can possibly be raised by natural fermentation; and very nearly one-half refers to the cheaper form of this concentrated product which is prepared in the home manufacture, and which therefore, it is to be presumed, expresses approximately the consumption of the less wealthy portion of the community. The exact number of the millions of pounds sterling that are swallowed in the form of strong drink in our own islands alone can scarcely be ascertained on account of the diversity of form in which the product is presented for consumption, and on account of the complex relations which connect duty and quantity in the different forms. The amount can only be guessed at under the guidance of such figures as have been named. If, however, one penny in the pound upon taxable incomes be taken to represent, as it is stated it will shortly do, a sum of £2,000,000, then the £30,000 paid yearly to the revenue by alcohol is tantamount to an income tax of fifteen pence in the pound upon such incomes, and to an assessment of £31 a year upon an individual income of £500 per annum. The fact which is involved in the figures of these several statements would assuredly be a very surprising one, even if the large sum of money were expended in an article of unproductive but harmless luxury.

As Dr. Richardson suggested in his lectures, a very strong impression would be made upon the public mind if, after some long period in which the boilers of steam engines had been fed with a mixture of spirit and water, it was suddenly discovered that the engines would work quite as well with the water without the spirit, and that the millions of pounds that had been devoted to the production of the spirit had all been so much unnecessary waste. But the argument goes very much beyond this in the case of "the millions of engines called men," if it can be shown that there is hurtful as well as wasteful expenditure, and that in a very large proportion of instances the engines would have worked even better without the costly addition of the spirit. In these days of the scientific applications of the doctrines of economy it certainly must remain a matter of some surprise to thoughtful men that in a land of advanced cultivation and intelligence so many millions of good money are continuously applied to the production of a commodity which, in the existing habits of society, may reasonably be held to be pernicious alike to the pockets, to the health and to the morals of the community. It unfortunately happens that the question of the influence of alcohol is a difficult one to deal with on account of subtle effects and the complicated instrumentalities which have to be encountered and unraveled at every turn; but it is for that very reason a question that imperatively demands a more searching inquiry and a more concentrated attention than it has yet received at the hands of the general community.—Edinburgh Review.

Palestine Exploration.

As regards inscriptions I may say that, no matter how thoroughly an explorer may examine, new ones are likely to be brought to light every year. An old ruin may fall down, or a fountain or house be repaired, or a mill be built, bringing to light stones with inscriptions which had been met nowhere else. In all the places that M. Waddington visited, and I also visited, I found from two to eight and ten inscriptions which he had not seen. At Gerash M. Waddington was not there, however I copied and took impressions of over forty inscriptions, all of which were Greek, except three or four Latin ones. This was only surface gleaning, which I dared pretend to have been at all thorough. One long Greek inscription of seventeen lines, in excellent preservation, was dug out of the ground only last year by a man who was making a raceway for his mill. I copied it, and took also a good impression of it. Moreover, the Aramaic inscriptions are far more numerous in portions of the Hauran than scholars have generally supposed, and if they can be collected with care important details may be brought to light relating to the history of an interesting people. In some cases, as for instance, at Beth Gamul, an exceedingly interesting place sixteen miles southwest from Bozrah, which only two Europeans had succeeded in reaching previous to the visit of our own party, the stones are being carted to other and distant cities and villages, because this is easier than getting new ones from the quarries, and thus important inscriptions are every year being scattered or destroyed.

In all the cities of the Hauran one is constantly surprised at the great number of Christian churches that once flourished there, and which still exist partly or entirely in ruins. In the early Christian ages this region was densely populated, and the inhabitants were intelligent, enterprising and prosperous. The Christian churches stand often side by side with a heathen temple. The heathen temples are magnificent, possessing columns, gates and portico, all of which excite the admiration of the beholder. But, as a rule, the space within was small. They were not built to accommodate numbers. Christian churches, on the other hand, while not so vast or splendid in exterior appearance, were designed for the use of the people. Congregations, and not the priests alone, gathered in them to worship. In some cases old heathen temples have been enlarged and converted into churches. At Gerash there are near the center of the city the ruins of a Christian church which must have been an elegant and costly structure of great, unusual size. I saw also the ruins of three or four churches in different parts of the city. At one time as many as thirty-one bishops were subject to the primate of Bostra (or Bozrah).—New York Tribune.

Life in Other Worlds.

Says Proctor, the astronomer: The question whether or not the planets and stars are inhabited, and, if so, by what sort of beings, has long agitated the minds of astronomers as well as of common people. The latter, with the utility argument, reasoned that the heavenly bodies must be peopled by some sort of inhabitants, since it was contrary to the economy of nature to suppose that thousands of worlds have been created, not one of which, excepting our own, is suitable for organic existence. To this it might be answered that facts, and not theories, must be taken as data from which to proceed. Planets and stars are in a continual state of change. From the nebulous stage onward, the matter of which they are composed is never at rest. Necessarily millions of ages must elapse before the surface of the planet is prepared to support any sort of life, either vegetable or animal.

After that comes a period when life in its various stages becomes possible and exists. Then, as a family left to intercommunication, dies out, as does organic life become extinct on any world. The period of organic life is, comparatively speaking, but a moment when compared with the whole life of the star, and therefore, in looking over the list of planets, the chances are thousands to one against the present age being the habitable one in any of them. The fact that the life stage is now prevailing in our own planet is no proof that it also prevails in the other worlds. Untold ages passed in the history of the earth before it was prepared, by cooling, to receive us, and similar ages will roll away after the human family has perished from the earth. It will gradually cool, so that the average temperature of the year will become lower and lower, until finally the earth will be, like the moon, barren, cold, the oceans all frozen, and all life extinct.

In more closely considering the various planets of the solar system we find that none of them, except perhaps Venus, affords those conditions which are essential to life. Organic life on Mercury would be impossible on account of the extreme heat, since there water cannot exist save in the form of steam. Mars has oceans, and at certain times of the year these are liquid, but in general they are frozen, and snows prevail over almost the whole planet. Jupiter and Saturn are out of the question. Every indication points to the certainty that they are themselves secondary suns, diffusing intense light and heat to their minor satellites. While Mars has passed the life-bearing stage, Jupiter and Saturn have not yet reached it. Venus, having a year nearly equal to our own, having seasons similar to ours, and a day and night, is probably the only planet that is now at the stage in which life is possible.

WHERE THE SUN DOES NOT SET.—A scene witnessed by some travelers in the north of Norway, from a cliff elevated a thousand feet above the sea, is thus described:

"At our feet the ocean stretched away in silent vastness; the sound of its waves scarcely reached our airy lookout; away in the north the huge old sun swung low along the horizon, like the slow bent of the pendulum in the tall clock of our grandfather's parlor corner. We all stood silent, looking at our watches. When both hands came together at twelve midnight the full round orb hung triumphantly above the waves, a bridge of gold running due north, spanning the water between us and shine. There he shone in silent majesty, which knew no setting. We involuntarily took off our hats; no word was said." Combine, if you can, the most brilliant sunrise and sunset you ever saw, and the beauties will pale before the gorgeous coloring which now lit up ocean, heaven and mountain. In half an hour the sun had swung up perceptibly on his beat, the colors changed to those of morning, a fresh breeze rippled over the flood, one songster, after another piped up in the grove behind us, we had slid into another day."

Lamotte, a young Frenchman, who had been invited to hear Voltaire read one of his new plays, observed, when asked what he thought of it, that it was a pity the whole was not original. Voltaire, chagrined and angry, asked him what part was borrowed. Lamotte named the second scene of the fourth act, and recited the whole of it. Voltaire sat like one astonished at this remarkable feat, and had only to say, at last, that he had written that scene as well as the rest of the drama. At last Lamotte relieved him by saying: "When you read the manuscript that scene pleased me so much that I resolved to retain it in my memory, and have done so, as you may perceive."

Different denominations have their peculiar forms of doctrine and polity, but the differences pertain only to minor matters. Each has the right to think its own mode the best. But if a man comes to join our commonwealth it is but reasonable that he should conform to the law of the house. If the meat is too strong or unsavory, there is no compulsion to take it. There are other tables where the provisions are better adapted to him.

Some people are too trusting for this world. At a recent trial the prisoner entered a plea of "Not guilty," when one of the jurymen put on his hat and started for the door. The judge called him back, and informed him that he couldn't leave until the case was tried. "Tried?" queried the juror; "why, he acknowledges that he is not guilty."

"Yes, sir," said a centennial orator, "Putnam went right into the wolf's den, dragged her out, and the independence of America was secured."

Religious Intelligence.

—A society of native Christians has been formed in Bengal, devoted entirely to the singing of gospel hymns.

—The Presbyterians have now ten churches in Egypt, with an average of more than forty communicants in each.

—The secretary of the London Missionary Society has received an offer of $25,000 to establish a mission at Lake Tanganyika, where Stanley met Livingstone. A committee has been appointed to carry out the project.

—Several persons have come to Erzrum, eastern Turkey, from the neighboring parts of Russia, in order to hear the gospel. The colporteur who visits in that region reports the inmates of fifty-four houses as Protestants.

—The Illustrated Christian Weekly says that "many find peace in going to an altar or an anxious seat. There is no virtue in either; but there is a great deal of virtue in a simple, resolute decision, and in an act of public committal that emphasizes it. In spite of much contrary teaching, generally, doing something marks one's acceptance of Christ."

—The receipts of the American Missionary Association for December were $20,954, of which $9,080 came from Massachusetts; from the estate of Mary Rice, of Concord, $1,357; from Whitinsville church and congregation, $1,132; from "Uxbridge," Springfield, $1,000. The next State in order of receipts is Illinois, $2,579. Connecticut furnished $1,351, and Maine $1,249.

—An excellent article in the Baptist Missionary Magazine recounts the first efforts made by that denomination in England to spread the gospel among the heathen. It is mistaken, however, in making this Baptist attempt the beginning of the modern enterprise of foreign missions. To say nothing of the temporary labors of the Lutherans under Ziegenbalg in India, and under Hans Egede in Greenland, the Moravians had commenced their great and permanent work among the heathen in 1732, and the English branch of that church had been enlisted in the cause half a century before Carey began his noble enterprise.—Independent.

—In 1868 a widow, Mrs. Yang by name, entered the service of a mission of the China Inland mission. The love of the heavenly Father compared with her own affection for her only son was the means of fixing her faith in Christ. Her father-in-law threatened to kill her, and on one occasion was about hanging her to a beam, when some of her relatives interfered, for fear of getting themselves into trouble. Her sister's doors were closed against her, and, last of all, her son was completely alienated from her. In the midst of these afflictions she has been a daily witness to Christ, has borne her poverty patiently, and remained steadfast in the faith.—Independent.

PRESBYTERIANS IN CHINA.—The New York Observer has a report of the proceedings of the Presbytery of Ningpo. Rev. Bao-Kwang-hyi was chosen its moderator. Twenty-four members (4 ministers and 20 ruling elders—were in attendance, only 1 of whom were foreigners; so it will be seen that the body is largely native. The membership of the churches in the presbytery is 508, gathered into 11 churches, 3 of which pay their pastors' salaries without aid from the board, the others doing much toward the support of their pastors. Four young men were received, after examination, as students of theology, making in all 13 candidates for the ministry now under the care of the presbytery, 2 of whom are already licensed.

The China Inland mission was organized in 1865, although several of its missionaries were in the field before that time. Its purpose is to reach those districts of China which are remote from the sea ports, and ultimately all the as yet unoccupied provinces. It is evangelical and unsectarian. Among its more prominent supporters we find the names of George Müller, Henry Varley, Lord Radstock, H. Grattan Guinness, and the Marquis of Cholmondeley. Its officers, both at home and abroad, are unsalaried, and it relies upon the Lord's promise for its income. This amounted to $21,885 for the fourteen months ending July 31, 1871. Contributions are partly given for the general purpose of the mission and partly for the benefit of specially-named missionaries. Its present staff includes more than one hundred laborers, and consists of English missionaries and their wives, male native assistants, of whom there are over seventy, and several Bible women. There are now over forty stations, and many other places are reached by itinerant efforts. The work has extended into five provinces, and it is now proposed to enter Yunnan, by way of Burmah. No statistics of membership are given; but we find frequent mention of baptism and of inquirers. In reading Occasional Papers we are struck by the kindliness of the members of the mission among themselves. Here is an instance: A missionary family needs to return to England, on account of ill health. There are no funds for the purpose. One missionary gives $100, another $200, another $50, three gave $10 each, and a fourth $2.20, so that the outfit was provided and the passage money raised in good time to get the home steamer at Shanghai. Prayer for their support is one of the departments of the work of these missionaries, and the record which Mrs. J. Hudson Taylor, the director of the mission, gives of the manner in which funds arrive exactly to cover needs is very interesting. We have already narrated the sacking of the mission premises at Huchau, and the narrow escape of the two missionaries, Meadows and Douthwaite, from the mob. The latest letters from China state that the outrage has not yet been redressed.—Independent.

A modern essayist defines gossip to be the "putting of two and two together and making five of them."

Our Young People.

JESUS, LOVING SAVIOR.

Jesus, loving Savior,
From thy throne on high,
On the little children
Bend a loving eye.
From the host of glory,
From thy throne of light,
To the love and pity
Look on them to-night.

Some are cold and hungry,
Some are very sad,
Some are tired and weary,
Their feet must make their way,
Some are wandering lonely,
Without home or food;
On the cold, dark pathway
They must lay their head.

Some are weeping sadly,
All they love is gone
None on earth to cuddle them?
They are left alone.
Jesus, tender Savior,
In thy heart of love,
Gather the little children
To thy rest above.

Some are sleeping sweetly
In their curtained bed,
On the soft, warm pillow
Lies the golden head.
Watched by loving mother,
Sheltered by their care,
Cold and rain and hunger
Cannot touch them there.

Jesus, loving Savior,
Thou hast been below,
Take the little children,
Thou their wants canst know.
Every care and sorrow,
Every sigh and tear,
From thy throne of glory
Thou dost ever hear.

Then take the little children,
The homeless, hungry, cold,
And tell them from their lost boy-home,
Lead them to thy fold.
Take the little children,
Rich and poor, to-night,
Feed them in thy bosom,
Warm them with thy light.

From Our Little Friends.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old, just learning to write. Papa takes your good paper. I see so many nice little letters in the children's corner that I thought I would try and write one also.

We have a new minister this year—the first change we have had in four years. You must know that we were very fond of him. Bro. Bradford was his name. But we have another that we love just as well—Bro. Thompson, whose dear son was killed in the Clinton riot, which you have heard about. He preaches for us once a month. We have a good many pupils in our Sunday-school. We meet every Sunday evening and recite our lessons to our teachers, but have no superintendent. We have a beautiful church, but it is not finished. The times are so hard the members have not been able to have it finished. Good-by.

From your little friend,

LILLIE STEMAN.

MR. EDITOR: I remember my promise this morning. Doubtless you have forgotten it. Told you if I lived until I was ten years old I would write to you again. Well, this is my birthday. I am going to school. Miss Lizzie White is my teacher. She is kind to us, and I love her very much. Our Sabbath school is progressing very well—did not go into winter-quarters, as many others did; and now that spring has opened so beautifully I think we will have a good school all the year. Bro. Armstrong is our preacher this year. I love him for several reasons. He talks to us in our Sabbath school. I think everybody loves him. For fear we little folks will weary you with our long letters, I will close for this time.

From your little friend,

EMMA BROOKS.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. Father and mother were both born in Louisiana. They moved to Texas during the war, and decided not to go back. Father loves the people of Louisiana, especially the editor of the ADVOCATE. Father takes your paper. I delight to read it, especially the Child's Corner, and have looked long and anxiously to hear how Barney milked the bays' nest. I hope Father Goodale will tell us how. Well, Mr. Editor, our church and school-house got burned down some time ago, so we have no Sunday school now. We hope to have a new church soon. This is a beautiful country, and some take your paper here. If you see proper to publish this I will write more at another time. Respectfully,

MATTIE J. CARNES.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little orphan boy. Father Joseph D. Carnes died over two years ago, in San Jacinto county, Texas. Mother, one brother and two little sisters live near my old grandpa's, John Carnes, who still lives, and is eighty-four years old, in San Jacinto county, Texas. I am living with my uncle, W. J. Carnes, in Gonzales county, Texas, who learns me to work, and sends me to school when we have one. I have got good health since I came out here, and am delighted with this healthful country. As our church is burned down, our circuit rider preaches in a live oak grove every fourth Sunday, and our local preacher every second Sunday. When your paper don't come we all miss it very much, especially the little folks. How long do you think it will be before Grandpa Goodale tells us how Barney milked the bays' nest. I will write more next time.

Your orphan friend,

W. W. CARNES.

Fast or Slow.

A little golden butterfly flitted merrily along the margin of a pond graced with fragrant water-lilies rejoicing in the sweet summer air and sunlight, and dancing minnows on the dark, glassy leaves that lay on the water. When weary with play, she perched herself on a spear of grass to lay her little plans for the future—how little a butterfly's plans must be!

While here she heard an old mud turtle giving her some directions for a journey. "The gay soldiers will be there; and the flag will be flying; but after you have seen all that and eaten as many worms as you can hold, hurry home, and don't stop to play with bad little turtles by the way."

Then the little yellow butterfly said: "I'll go too. May be I can perch on a soldier's plume, and flit round among the stars on the flag; for some way I can never manage to get up to the other kind of stars."

So she brushed up her tired little wings, so as to keep pace with this big black fellow that was to hurry so fast.

So off they set, he crawling slowly through mud and mire, and she floating over him like a topaz in a sapphire sea.

She found it rather slow traveling after her slow guide. So she would stop now and then to dance on a flower, or to rest on the down of an early thistle. Soon she met a party of gay friends, and joined them in a dance and a frolic, saying: "There's no danger. I can easily overtake that slow old fellow. He only crawls." But, alas, she lingered too long this time! When she flew back to the place where she had left him he was gone, and she had no guide but the ugly tracks he had left behind.

As she went on she met another friend, and they held a waltz on a spire of golden rod, till she was weary. She sat down on a bright green leaf to rest her wings, and when she rose up what should she see but the turtle on his way back!

"Why didn't you go?" she asked.

"I have been and seen the soldiers and flag, and have eaten all the worms and tadpoles I can hold, and am hurrying back, as my mother bade me. Follow my tracks, and you will see the show yet, if you hurry;" and the turtle was crawling on.

"Do you call that gait 'hurrying?'" and the butterfly laughed as loudly as ever a butterfly did. "I'll show you what hurrying is!" and off she flew.

Alas! the suit was down, and so was the flag, when the tiny fairy reached the place. The night was falling; and the dew chilled her golden wings, and she turned homeward without flitting among the stars or even lighting on a soldier's plume.

When near home, faint and chilled, she met the turtle crawling along. She would gladly have passed him unnoticed; but he was victor now, and he ventured to rebuke the little boaster. Without stopping for a moment, he rolled round his ugly eye and said: "It is as my mother has always told me: the diligent and faithful, not the idle; and the dull and slow, if persevering and obedient, will always excel the brilliant and trifling, who boast of their beauty and their power. I am black and slow; you are yellow and swift; but who saw the flag and the soldiers to-day?"

PRAYING AND DOING.—"Bless the poor children who have not got any beds to-night," prayed a little boy just before he lay down on his nice warm cot on a cold and windy night.

As he rose from his knees his mother said: "You have just asked God to bless the poor children; what will you do to bless them?"

The boy thought a moment. "Why, if I had a hundred cakes, enough for all the family, I would give them some."

"But you have no cakes; what, then, are you willing to do?"

"When I get money enough to buy all the things I want, and have some over, I'll give them some."

"But you haven't half enough money to buy all you want, and perhaps never will have; what will you do to bless the poor now?"

"I'll give them some bread."

"You have no bread; the bread is mine."

"Then I could earn money, and buy a loaf for myself."

"Take things as they are now. You know what you have that is your own; what are you willing to give to help the poor?"

The boy thought again. "I'll give them half my money; I have seven pennies; I'll give them four. Wouldn't that be right?"

A CHINAMAN'S FORBEARANCE.—We clip the following touching incident from a recent California daily:

A Chinaman had set down his basket to rest himself near the corner of Mason street. Three well-dressed boys, aged from twelve to fifteen years, came along on their way to school. They each stole what vegetables they could take conveniently in their hands—principally tomatoes—ran off a short distance, and pelted the Chinaman, besmearing his clothing, and damaging his little stock. A gentleman went up to the Chinaman and said to him: "Why do you stand still and permit such a thing? Why did you not throw one of those rocks and punish the young rascals?" What was the reply of this heathen? "Me no punish—him now, bym by we alee go up there;" pointing heavenward; "God punishee him for me alee same." Astonished at the reply, the gentleman asked: "John," where he learned that. "O me go Sunday school and mission school. Good teacher-man show me how I makee good man."

Observations on a Meeting.

It was our privilege to attend some of the services of Messrs. Hall, Cree and Hardie. They were edifying, solemn, and with nothing in the methods to which any religious man could take exceptions. At a night meeting in the Carondelet Street church we were impressed for one thing; with the fact that the house was full, although the weather was stormy and threatening, and the most of the people came with their umbrellas. If it had been an ordinary prayer meeting, or even a Sunday night preaching, not one-half of those present would have thought it prudent to venture out. It would have seemed to them like tempting Providence. But, there they were, and probably no one was seriously alarmed by the wind and rain combined. The larger part of the congregation was composed of church members, and many of them from distant sections of the city. Where there is a will there is a way, and the will is backing ordinarily. Professing Christians are not all moved by simple duty, nor is there always love enough in them to draw them to the stated services of the church.

The Gospel of Numbers was illustrated. Christ preached with effect to one woman, and saving sermons are sometimes preached to a handful of hearers. The promise is a gracious and encouraging one: "For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." It has helped many a little band to realize the Master's presence, to have a good meeting, and to claim the blessing, notwithstanding the very slim attendance. It takes, however, a strong faith and a great deal of religion to face empty benches, with only here and there an occupant, without feeling a certain faintness and sinking of heart. A house full of people is an inspiration to all, and an element of power. Praying people feel it, and seekers and unawakened sinners are moved by the mighty impulse. Here is a reason why all should be in their places. It is a means of helping forward the work of God, and supplies one of the important conditions of liveliness, and enthusiasm. When Christians gather in earnest crowds the outside world begins to believe there is something in religion. Mr. Moody preaches the Gospel of Numbers. The most stirring element in his meetings is the vastness of the crowd. The Holy Ghost is by no means confined to multitudes, but he does wield the sympathies and magnetic influences of large masses so as to intensify religious feeling, and to bring about the conversion of souls.

The power of song was also manifest. A collection of hymns and songs, with the music, had been provided, and copies so distributed that nearly all could use them. A cabinet organ on the platform was used, and the people sang with spirit. The first half hour was given exclusively to singing, Mr. Hall sometimes pausing to expound and comment, to tell how certain parts should be sung, and to repeat some of the most stirring lines. The congregation sung themselves into a proper frame. Thus the ground seemed to be prepared for the sowing which came after. We must have hearty congregational singing. Without it we are doomed to dull, cold meetings, and the absence of revival power. As Mr. Moody's labors show, and as all revivals prove, singing is a means of capital importance. God inhabited the praises of Israel, and he moves powerfully on the tide of song in connection with the preaching of his word now. Without the singing this meeting would have failed in interest and results. If Methodism or Christianity ever takes the world's masses, it will be greatly through the power of sacred melody. We must emphasize this feature of worship, and improve herein. On this occasion it seemed to us that everybody sung. Some who are usually dumb as a post opened their mouths wide, and they were filled.

There was a threefold sermon. Mr. Hall read the narrative of the healing of the lame man who was laid at the gate of the temple, and briefly pointed out its spiritual import. Then Maj. Hardie addressed us for a few minutes on the dead and helpless condition of the unconverted, and the need of a divine power to save, illustrating somewhat from the lame man's helpless state. And then Mr. Cree took up the same scripture, commenting and applying the lesson to the unconverted, and Mr. Hall, in conclusion, gave a summing up, and sent it all home to the consciences of saints and sinners. The three addresses altogether occupied perhaps forty-five minutes. The laymen were two, the minister one, the text a single paragraph from Scripture. It was a fresh and profitable gospel sermon by the mouth of three witnesses. We like lay preaching much, and we would that thousands of our laymen could be induced, after Maj. Hardie's example, to devote their gifts to the work of preaching the gospel.

The second or after meeting of the evening was devoted to prayer, testimonies from believers on specific points of experience, and singing. Those who desired the prayers of God's people, and were seeking Christ, were asked to hold up their hands. The number was announced, and there was silent and then audible prayer made for them. Thus ended the services, altogether about two hours in length, and leaving impressions upon hundreds that, we trust, will last forever. From beginning to end there was continuous movement, varied exercises, and a progress of means and results from the first note of praise to the last word of the benediction.

The conducting of such a meeting requires experience, tact and rare gifts. It is something to be studied. The pastor or evangelist must have the anointing spirit, a strong faith, and deep experience in spiritual things; but, besides, he must acquire the art of using methods and measures which shall best conduce to the great end of saving souls. We must honor the Holy Ghost, but ordinarily he uses the fittest means to awaken and to save. It is not by might nor by power, but still it is through chosen and adapted instrumentalities that the Spirit operates. Without him preachers, evangelists, song and all measures are worth nothing; but there are methods which fall in with the economy of his ministry, and that are peculiarly blest by him to the recovery of sinners.

What is Religion?

Many are asking this question mentally, if not audibly. They mean not what is religion in general, or in the abstract, but what is the Christian religion in its application and relation to me as an individual? Let us try, as clearly and as briefly as we may, to answer. It consists in three particulars; and, first, it is something to be believed. Faith is the first and the essential requisite of religion. Without faith it is impossible to please God. He that comes to God must believe that he is. Without faith in the being, the existence of God, religion, whether theoretical, practical or experimental, is simply impossible. Without faith in the being of God there can be no one element of religion—no praise, prayer, reverence, trust, obedience or love. But faith must be more than a bare assent to the proposition: God exists, there is a God. It must go further. It must believe that God is "a rewarder of them that seek him." More than that: that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him. This degree of faith supposes a revelation from God, which teaches that, for reasons satisfactory to himself, God will be sought unto by the guilty and the needy; and this supposes the "plan of salvation," with all that Christ has done, all that he has secured for us by his meritorious obedience to the law. The faith, then, that is essential, without which it is impossible to please God, is the faith that leads us to seek God diligently, not only because we feel our guilt and need, but because we believe Christ has died to secure for us access to God, and to make it just in the holy God to pardon us, though sinful and sinful. In the plain but most encouraging language of Scripture, the thing to be believed is faith in the Lord Jesus Christ for all the purposes of salvation. But faith does not end when, as the instrument, it has secured for us justification. No; through life's journey we walk by faith, as seeing him who is invisible.

Religion, secondly, consists in something to be experienced. That experience is that we have been made new creatures in Christ Jesus; not new bodies or senses, nor new intellectual powers, but a new heart or new affections. These affections have been renovated or regenerated, so that we are said to be "born again," born of God, "born of the Spirit." Our natures have been changed, and turned from sin to holiness, from satan unto God, so that now we have new pleasures, new associations and new hopes, such as we did not have and could not have in our unregenerate state. This experimental feature of religion may be realized with considerable varieties of experience, owing to education, temperament, or the degree of faith we may exercise; or God may see, for reasons satisfactory, that it may be best to give us the assurance of acceptance under circumstances and in a way quite different from which it is given to another. But we may scripturally assume that all genuine experiences of a new heart will involve in them "love," "joy," and "peace." In one case the fires of love may be kindled less suddenly than in another, the joy may be less instantaneous, the peace may come more gradually. Christ opened some blind eyes instantly, suddenly; but there is at least one example of his doing so gradually. But there may be difference not only in the suddenness of the work, but one may "love more," rejoice more rapturously, and all the storm may subside into peace as suddenly as the winds and waves of the Sea of Galilee, in deep and all-pervading "rest" of soul. All real religion must have some such experience.

Thirdly, religion is something to be lived. We must "follow" Christ. We must walk as he walked, in the narrow path; we must press for the mark; we must run with patience the race set before us. Christ gave himself for us not only to redeem us from all iniquity, but to purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. We are to adorn by innocency of life the doctrine of God our Savior, "that by well-doing we may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men." This consecration is to be entire, and permanent as life itself, so that we are at once to cease to work and live. Blessed are they that endure to the end, for they shall be saved. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give you a crown of life." In the great day the Master shall say: "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make you ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

The Dancing Plague.

MR. EDITOR: When Bishop Wightman dedicated our new church in Mansfield, while dwelling upon the growth and spread of Methodism, he said that it bid fair to take the world. A minister of another denomination twittingly remarked that he would like to know what it would do with it if it did take it. Of course the Bishop meant to take it in one sense, and the other in another sense. It is a question of no small importance to know what to do with the world when it gets into the church in the latter sense. There seems to be a growing disposition upon the part of the world to get into the church, and some tendency upon the part of the church to compromise with the world, take it in, and be mutual partakers of the good and evil.

Lately, in visiting one of our appointments, we learned that a dancing school was in vogue, that a number of dancing parties had been given, and that they were liberally patronized by all the religious denominations in the place. Some of the more religious were very much disturbed, and others who have less experience were almost ready to yield, believing that any further effort to keep this feature of the world out of the church useless. Those who have more experience and have seen more service feel that this is simply another emergency which requires a prompt concentration of forces and firm resistance to arrest the evil, for which the church is fully competent. The pastors of different churches resolved to act in concert, and to close the doors of their respective churches against this evil. Now we wish to say, for the benefit of all whom it may concern, that the law of our church upon the subject of dancing is plain and emphatic, and ought not to be misconstrued by anybody who is capable of reading the English language.

It may not be unlike to say that when any law of the church admits of more than one construction the College of Bishops are to decide what the construction shall be, and their decision is the law. The condition of membership, according to a statute in the General Rules, on the twenty-eighth page of the Discipline, is to avoid "the taking those diversions which cannot be used in the name of the Lord Jesus." The decision of the College of Bishops upon this statute, as found in the appendix, on page 302 of the Discipline, is that it included the modern dance, both private and public; that it is a justifiable offense, when persisted in, to exclude any member from the church. Now for members of the church to dance, and justify themselves on the ground that there is no law in the Discipline against it, evinces an amount of ignorance which ought to be both pitied and punished.

For any one to take upon himself the vows of the church, and sacredly pledge himself before God and the whole congregation to keep them, and then come out from the ball room, and with apparent gusto, in defiance of the church, say: "I don't believe there is any harm in dancing!" We declare to you, Mr. Editor, that this is enough to shock the nerves of piety itself. Others justify themselves by saying that dancing is not as bad as many other things. We as a church have never said that it is. We only denominate this evil an imprudence; but one, if persisted in, sufficient to expel any one from the church.

Well, some say they send their children to dancing schools. Of course they must go there to learn good manners, for the modern Chesterfields would make you believe that any one who was not refined by the dance is destined to be a dunce and a clown; and we must needs go to take care of our children. Doubtless they will need to be taken care of there as much as any place on earth. But that don't make it right to go. The premises are wrong—it is wrong to send them—and of necessity the conclusion must be wrong—it is wrong to go.

We always hesitate long and pray much before we advise any one to leave the church; but we do advise all members of the church who have fully and thoughtfully made up their minds to indulge in this evil, in violation of the rules of the church, at once to dissolve their connection with the church, which they are at liberty to do at any time before charges are preferred against them. Nerved by a felt sense of duty, by the grace of God we intend to use all prudential means to keep this evil out of the church.

Centenary College Endowment Plan.

MR. EDITOR: I have written to every preacher in charge in the Mississippi Conference in regard to the proposed endowment of Centenary College. Many of them have responded, showing that some have a misconception of the plan. For instance, some think that contributors must be restricted to $1—no more, no less; others that only members of the church are to be solicited; others that efforts to collect are not to be made till the close of the Conference year; others that the results of the collections are to be reported to the board of trustees of the college.

To all these I reply that the board of trustees are not known in this matter at all, except, of course, that I, as their officer, am required to report to them all funds contributed from all sources to the college; next, that smaller sums than $1 will be thankfully received, and by no means ought persons to be restrained from giving more, the $1 per member being suggested simply as a basis of operation; again, let all persons, whether church members or not, be asked to contribute who are likely to do so; and finally, that the earlier in the year the matter is attended to the better, so as not to interfere with the collections usually taken in the fall.

Much more benefit is resulting to the college from this plan than I hoped for at first. All the responses I have received from brethren are favorable to the plan, and are more or less encouraging, except one. One (the pastor of a first-class station) writes that "it would be unfeeling and injudicious" to ask an average of a dollar from his members, "unless the object was as urgent and necessary as daily bread." Of course if communities are in such straitened circumstances as that one is represented to be they ought not to be expected to contribute.

The publication of the plan has called forth responses from other localities. A lady from north Louisiana has sent a contribution, and a gentleman from the North Mississippi Conference has promised to send his check for $100 at once.

There are not quite so many students in attendance on the college as at this date last year, but they are still coming in, and the character and standing of those here is encouraging. There are five candidates for graduation.

The usual intermediate exhibition, March 23 and 24, passed off to the delight of the large audiences in attendance, and to the credit of the students.

A Remainder of Sin.

The venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce is giving his thoughts on sanctification through the columns of the Southern Christian Advocate. In his last article he touches on covetousness, and explains it as a remainder of sin in the justified. He puts the matter in this way:

I am now very old, and I can recollect scarcely a single case of conversion from among these miserly-minded men in whom meager giving was not an evidence of its being the remains of sin in them. It is much safer to speak of it as the remainder of sin than to conceive of it as a new accession of sin to the convert. My object is to look into this grave question. If these persons did get religion when they thought so (and we admit they did), can they keep it with a mind so unrenewed? We think not. For being renewed in the spirit of the mind is the only conclusive proof we can have of having put off the old man, with the deceitful lusts thereof. This indwelling evil of which I am speaking belongs to the spirit of the mind; and while the sin of its former mastery over its victim may be forgiven, as to the past, its future effect must depend on its relation to what is meant by the spirit of the mind. If the convert should undertake to live after the law of a new life, with the spirit of his mind, or this love of money, unrenewed—as is the case with all this class of converts—he never for a single moment, when the call for money on him is for the Lord's cause, counts to see how much he can give; but he invariably parades his own call for money, to see how many reasonable excuses he can muster to scale down his church contributions. For themselves, where the stock was believed to be good, they would pursue exactly the opposite course, and would lessen mere comforts to increase capital stock. These painful reflections are not for a few very bad cases, but to excite just apprehension of soul-danger almost every where. These money lovers, before conversion, in whom it remains like an evil sediment afterward—so long as it finds any patronage—can never attain to the sensible evidence of divine pleasure in their spiritual devotion until they are so renewed in the spirit of their minds as to give cheerfully; yea, more: so as to feel it to be with them "more blessed to give than to receive." This is startling to a money-loving professor. But to such as feel that Christ died for them, in this way of gracious giving, that they might cease living for themselves, and live for him who died for them and rose again, it is felt to be experimentally knowable. Indeed, my ensnared brethren, let me assure you you can take no course in a religious life so sure to delude and ruin you forever as to reckon a scale of religion which runs upon a plane below the Scripture proofs of its divinity. In this particular snare of the devil, if you ask for advice as to how you can escape, I answer: By a close application of life to the practical meaning of this universal remedy for all deficits of this sort in Christian obedience. Work out your own salvation—while God is working in you both to will and to do his good pleasure.

This article is intended mainly for those church members who could do better in this respect if they had the will; and to convince them, from the records of their own conscience, of their moral defeasance. All of you that know you could do better for the church than you are doing, feel God working in you, first to will his good pleasure, and then to do it. The sin that is feeding this withering lust for money is your failure to will God's good pleasure in this particular instance. You know this to be your besetting sin—the point where you are more likely to diverge from wholehearted duty than any other. And yet, instead of laying aside every weight, as you are commanded to do, you rather bind them on by continuing to follow your own will. This preventive of all sanctifying emotions will never yield to anything but a determined will to break it up by an exactly opposite course in obedience to the will of God. To pray or hope for entire sanctification, while living in conscious default of duty, is practical unbelief; and to die without entire sanctification is to die without holiness, without meetness for heaven; for without holiness no one is to see the Lord.

The series of meetings in Russellville, Ky., attended by a great religious revival, says the Western Methodist, closed on Sunday evening of last week at the Methodist church, after an uninterrupted continuance of twelve weeks. So we learn from the Russellville Herald, which further says: "The result of this combined Christian effort was the happy conversion of one hundred and fifty-one souls, and a general revival of religious zeal in all the churches, and a reclamation of backslidden members. The additions to the churches of this city, so far as we can ascertain, are as follows: Methodist church, 67; Cumberland Presbyterian church, 15; Old School Presbyterian church, 5; Baptist church, 5. All these churches will receive further additions, doubtless, in a short time, as all the other converts will unite with one or the other of them."

The only religion possible to man is the religion of penitence.

A lady sends us $4 to pay for two copies of the ADVOCATE for one year for needy persons.

A brother, who always responds to every appeal when it is in his power to do so, and whose giving is probably up to the Scripture standard, sends $5 to aid in furnishing the ADVOCATE to the same class, and says:

Well did the editor say that "aiding in supplying the needy and destitute with the ADVOCATE is a fine investment in genuine beneficence." I am astonished at myself that I give so sparingly, when I think that in giving I am only lending to the best of Paymasters, on the best security and at the highest rate of interest, for he returns double, aye, a hundred-fold. In this life, to say nothing of the life to come; and besides this, when I think of him who though he was rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich, surely

"Love so amazing, so divine, Demands my life, my soul, my all."

The Lord being my helper, I am determined to give more liberally, and especially as my time for giving is short. Soon I shall be compelled to have done giving.

GREAT CHRISTIAN CONVENTION.—The Hippodrome in New York, now the daily scene of a glorious work of grace, is to be the gathering-place of a great conference of Christian ministers and others, week after next, March 29 and 30, 1876.

Ministers and laymen interested in revivals of religion, and wishing to confer on the ways and means to promote them, are called to assemble and spend two days in discussion and prayer and praise. From this city and State, and all the States near and far off, the churches are invited to send their pastor and a delegate, without regard to numbers of churches. There will doubtless be room in one or both of the great halls of the Hippodrome for all who assemble. The wisest and best ministers in all churches are in sympathy with the work, and will give to the convention, in the form of brief addresses, their experience and reflection, so that whatever good things have been developed may be crystalized into permanent methods, and evils may be criticised and avoided. Mr. Moody will conduct these conferences, Mr. Sankey will lead the services of song, and thousands of souls will be refreshed and quickened by these two days of communion in the midst of a great revival.

Any church wishing to be represented by its pastor and a delegate will receive tickets of admission by forwarding the names and address to Samuel Thorne, Hippodrome, New York city.—New York Observer.

GRAND CENTENNIAL BAZAR.—The ladies of the congregations of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South of this city are interesting themselves in the Seashore campground, and for its benefit are getting up a Centennial Bazar, to be held by them at Odd Fellows' Hall on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, April 4, 5 and 6, 1876. Admission, twenty-five cents.

We acknowledge the receipt of complimentary tickets, and bespeak for the ladies large patronage and success.

Our venerable brother, David Ayers, called on us the other day. From his own lips we received the tidings of the death of Sister Ayers. She died at Galveston, Texas, on Sunday, March 12, aged seventy-six. Bro. Ayers is now eighty-four, and enjoys good health, bating some infirmities incident to his advanced years. He endures his great bereavement as a Christian should, submissive to the Father's will, and expecting soon to join his sainted wife on the deathless shore.

Rev. John Pipes writes: "I see the minutes of the Louisiana Conference that in the report from Desoto circuit of Bishops' money a mistake was made. It is $5, whereas it should be $15. Bro. S. S. Scott took up this collection and sent up the money, and I remember when the report was read that it was read correctly. It may be due Bro. Scott, as he has gone to Texas, to call attention to the mistake."

We greatly regret to hear of the death of Mrs. Louisa J. Smith, Thibodaux, La. She was one of the most devoted and useful Christian ladies we have ever known. For a long time she had been a main pillar in our church at Thibodaux. She was given to hospitality, cheerful and benevolent in word and deed. She died in great peace, February 24. An obituary by her pastor, Rev. Lewis A. Reed, will appear soon.

The services conducted in the Carondelet Street church by Messrs. Hall, Cree and Hardie were well attended, and resulted in much good. These gentlemen left the city on Friday, the seventeenth instant; but the noonday prayer meeting and services at half-past seven P. M. are still kept up by Bro. Mathews.

A Centennial concert of the little folks will be given at the First Baptist church, corner of Second and Magazine streets, on Friday evening, April 28. We hope our Baptist friends will have a good attendance of those who love the Sunday school. We are indebted to Dr. Nicholson for a ticket.

HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, FROM THE DISCOVERY OF THE CONTINENT. By George Bancroft. In six Volumes. Volume I. Thoroughly revised edition. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1876.

This great work was begun more than forty years ago; the introduction is dated 1831. The author is still at work, although at an advanced age, and it is hoped that he may live to bring the history down at least to the earlier days of the revolution. The six volumes now being issued have undergone a laborious and thorough revision, and embrace the history as far as completed. This volume covers the colonial history down to February, 1677. Mr. Bancroft has during his long life enjoyed the best opportunities to collect the materials of this history; his style is charming, graceful, picturesque. He brings the wealth of varied learning and ripe scholarship to illustrate and adorn his pages, and is eminently philosophic in tracing the growth of the country, and its social and political development. The present centenary edition, is very handsomely printed, with excellent paper and type, and sold at a reasonable price. We are indebted to the publishers for a copy of volume I. The work is for sale by R. J. Harp, 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

THE STORY OF THE BIBLE, FROM GENESIS TO REVELATION, TOLD IN SIMPLE LANGUAGE FOR THE YOUNG. By Charles Foster. Hartford, Conn.: Jamesoleets & Co.

The story or history is traced in its scriptural order from Genesis to Revelation. It is the Bible paraphrased for the use of children and young people. Text and comment are blended in the thread of the narrative, and the style is simple, perspicuous and attractive. It is free from sectarian bias, so far as we have examined it, and the mind of the spirit is given with clearness and strength. It is the very book for the lambs of Christian mothers to read to their children, and one that will interest and edify all who love the word of God. It may, indeed, be the means of awakening interest in the Bible in many who have hitherto neglected the precious volume. The work is copiously illustrated, is supplied with a chronological table and index, and contains 528 pages octavo, in private binding.

Scribner's Monthly for April. Yale College, illustrated; Is there a Subterranean Outlet to the Great Lake Region? Poe; Irving, Hawthorne; The History of a Critic, illustrated; Revolutionary Letters; Without War; The Astor Family in New York; The Legend of the Rhine. The editorial departments as usual, fresh and spirited.

The St. Nicholas for April will be welcomed by the young people with enthusiasm. The pictures are many and very fine. Among the articles we notice: How a Grizzly Got Obed Rollins, Talk with Girls, Lake on Fire, The Boy Emigrants, The Microscopic Brickmaker.

Lippincott's Magazine for April. The Century—Centennial Exhibition Under Roof, illustrated; Cities of India, illustrated; The College Student; The House that Jack Built; The Sabbath of the Poor; Letters from South Africa, and other articles.

The March number of the South-Western Musical Journal is full of good things, such as all musical people are interested in.

Seashore Camp Ground.

THE EDITOR: Please inform your numerous readers that the trustees will meet on the camp ground on Wednesday, the twelfth of April next, the arrival of the morning trains from New Orleans and Mobile. They will then lay out a new row of building lots on the western border of the camp ground, and be ready to assign them for building tents.

All persons wishing to select choice lots for building, or desiring information on any points connected with the camp ground, are requested to be present then and there.

NEW ORLEANS, March 20, 1876.

The Rev. James A. Orman, pastor of the church in Columbia, Tenn., and the Nashville Christian Advocate of March 11, made us a visit last week. He visited Nashville in the interest of his church, which he hopes to have finished in time for the next Conference, which is to meet in Columbia. He tells us that the seven memorial windows—one of which is the "James K. Polk," which contributions are pouring in from various quarters—six are taken. He must allow us to put a name in the Polk memorial window, for one or other of them.

The congregation and pastor of St. Paul's church in this city (Sam Jacobsen), are greatly encouraged, as the Pacific Methodist of March 4th by the prospect of success in their work. Scarcely a Sunday passes that there are not some who connect themselves with the church, and the spirit of religious sentiment which pervades the services indicates that a glorious revival of religion will soon be aroused.

The American Printing House for the Blind.

STATEMENT FROM THE LOUISIANA TRUSTEES.

The subjoined document has been handed to us for publication:

(Copy of Circular.)

NEW ORLEANS, ——, 1876.

MR. ——: Sir—You made a donation to a corporation established for a charitable purpose, which donation was to be returned to you if a sum sufficient to accomplish the purposes of the corporation was not raised within a certain period.

This donation having been forfeited by the said corporation, we can recover it for you, with interest, if you will sign and return the agreement hereto annexed.

Respectfully yours,

I promise and agree to pay fifty per cent. of any and all amounts recovered by them for me from "The ——" they to bear all costs and expenses of recovering said amounts. I authorize them to compromise my said claim before or after suit, if they deem said compromise for my interest and advantage.

DEAR SIR: The Louisiana board of trustees of the American Printing House for the Blind have learned with surprise that the above circular is being sent by a law firm of this city to persons who have contributed to the funds of the corporation, soliciting their signatures and authority to demand and receive back the funds thus donated for a great and noble object the printing of books with raised letters for the blind.

Calling attention to the circular, and noting that the name of the corporation is studiously omitted, the board of trustees deem it due to all who have contributed to the praiseworthy objects contemplated to say that the trustees have faithfully carried out the objects of the donors as expressed in the charter:

"The object of this association and corporation shall be to raise funds, for, and otherwise aid in, the permanent establishment and successful management, at Louisville, Ky., of a publishing house for the printing and publication of books in raised letters for the use of the blind in the United States."

Notwithstanding the war has interfered with the correspondence with various established boards for the common object in other States of the United States, the funds have been raised, and the printing house has been established at Louisville, Ky., and is engaged in printing, publishing and sending forth books in raised letters for the blind. No portion of the money contributed has been misapplied. The trustees have carefully guarded and preserved the same, even during the period of the war, and they here assure the donors that all the funds they have so generously contributed to a most worthy charity will be faithfully and honestly applied to the objects for which it was donated.

Let there be an entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks throughout the entirety during the period of a single generation, and a drunkard would be as impossible as combustion without oxygen.—Horace Mann.

We are now in the midst of Lent. Good Friday will come on the fourteenth of April, and Easter on April 16.

MARRIED.

RANDOLPH—THOMSON—In the city of New Orleans, March 14, 1876, by Rev. Louis Barger, James P. Randolph to Miss Mary E. Thomson.

REYNOLDS—COSNAHAN.—At the residence of the bride, on Sunday, March 12, 1876, by Rev. W. E. Ballard, Mr. E. W. Reynolds and Miss S. A. Cosnahan, all of Beauregard, Pojiah county, Miss.

QUISENBERRY—McVEA.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Winnsboro, Franklin parish, La., on the fourth of November, 1875, by Rev. A. M. Wailes, Mr. John Quisenberry to Miss Barbara McVey.

OSBORNE—BRADLEY.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Franklin parish, La., on the eleventh of November, 1875, by Rev. A. M. Wailes, Mr. James Osborne to Miss Clara Bradley.

ANDERSON—MARTIN.—Near Winnsboro, in Franklin parish, La., on the ninth of December, 1875, by Rev. A. M. Wailes, Mr. Charles Anderson to Miss Maggie P. Martin.

DAVIS—PARKER.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Franklin parish, La., on the nineteenth of January, 1876, by Rev. A. M. Wailes, Mr. Isaac Davis to Miss Alice Parker.

SNODGRASS—WARD.—At the residence of the bride's father, in Franklin parish, La., on the tenth of February, 1876, by Rev. A. M. Wailes, Mr. Stanley Snodgrass to Miss Phebe Ann Ward.

BOYKIN—DERICK.—At the residence of the bride's father, on the twenty-fourth of February, 1876, by Rev. R. A. Sibley, Mr. R. B. Boykin to Miss M. E. Derick, all of Smith county, Miss.

BECKWITH SEWING MACHINE.—Our readers in want of a sewing machine should not forget the Beckwith. The agent has testimonials from various portions of the South certifying to the fact that it has given satisfaction. It obviates the objections to the treadle machine, and is so economical in prices as to be within the reach of many who are not able to pay the price at which other machines are sold. Many who have had to abandon the use of the treadle machine find that they can use the Beckwith, and thus facilitate their work without damage to their health.

BOOTS AND SHOES.—We wish to call special attention to the advertisement of the Louisiana Boot and Shoe Factory, under the management of Messrs. A. D. Moores & Kernberger. This factory is located at 79 Custom-house street, corner of Chartres. They keep constantly on hand a stock of cable-wire shoes, and are prepared to fill orders from country dealers. See their card in reference to diplomas in the Isle Logs Island State Fair.

CISTERN MAKER.—R. Broderick, 132, 134 and 136 Julia street, is one of the oldest cistern makers in the city. He has done the cistern building for several of the largest contractors and builders in the city, who will certify that he has given satisfaction in his work. We have two of his cisterns, built several years ago, which are entirely satisfactory.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Profits of Sheep in Mississippi.

A correspondent writes to the Southern Farmer in relation to the yield of wool per head of Merino sheep raised in Mississippi:

"I must again plead for a sheep farm in lower Mississippi. I have sheared nine pounds of wool from a Merino ram, and notes not at hand, but memory serving, I think five to eight pounds from a lot of yearlings. Assume the weight per head to be five pounds, and at sixteen cents in the dirt, eighty cents for each sheep. Labor and cost considered, what branch of agriculture will be found more profitable? One thousand head of sheep can be attended to by one man, Indian pony, and two Calley dogs, with an abundance of time to hunt squirrels, rabbits, fish and idle about promiscuously. Put the increase at only seven hundred and fifty, these at $1 apiece, and the wool at $750. Calculate! To keep properly, some winter protection and food should be provided, and some salt. But a man of any industry could make rails and split boards to fence in fifty acres. Twenty-six thousand rails will put a superb fence around eighty acres. Eighty bushels of rye will seed the eighty acres in July and August in the pine woods; then a ten-foot shed, or sheds are best—say ten of them forty feet long, covered with four-foot boards and weight poles—should be provided. Better have a few tons of oil meal, and fence off a lot of five acres to separate the old and weakly sheep. By penning the sheep on these eighty acres one year by night, the eighty acres lying well, would produce the succeeding year a good crop of corn. This land could be sown again with rye in August for the sheep in winter. How many acres will it take, on the average, in Mississippi, to make the same amount in cotton, the expense and risk? Take natives and Merinoes—the healthiest and best cross for natives—and estimate that half-bloods will yield four pounds of wool. Remember, in a few years the sheep will be brought up to seven-eighths and to fifteen-sixteenths, and, of course, improve in quantity and quality. Besides, one successful man would open the way, so that all half and three-fourth bloods will sell as breeders at an advance over the natives. Good feed and good care in winter will give size. Literally no aid will be needed to summer pasture, and winter keep will not exceed thirty to sixty days."

American Violets.—It cannot understand why such a beautiful family of plants as the viola should be so shamefully neglected, or at any rate our native species, when they are so readily cultivated and so exceedingly desirable for early blooming. The one in question (Viola cucullata) is large and showy, although destitute of fragrance, but in my opinion is inferior to the very handsome bird-foot violet (V. pedata.) The charming little arrow-leaved violet (V. sagittata) is interesting, even when destitute of flowers; yet the latter are by no means to be despised. The Downey yellow violet (V. pubescens) of our woods is as handsome as an orchid; and, were it not so common, would be eagerly sought after. Among white species the little sweet violet (V. blanda) is well worthy of cultivation, and should have partial shade and moisture. The primrose-leaved violet (V. primulifolia,) which needs a similar situation to the last-named, is somewhat inferior to it, but still pretty. Viola striata is a tall-growing species, with large, creamy-white flowers. I merely select the above from the list of violets for the purpose of directing more attention to that class of plants; and I may add that I once saw in the garden of a noted botanist every known species and market variety of the viola, growing with an abandon which plainly indicated how much at home they were when under the charge of one who felt an interest in their growth.—Correspondent of New York Tribune.

Tonic for Fowls.—It is a good plan to keep on hand the preparation of sulphate of iron, so often recommended by experienced poultrymen. It is frequently useful in the poultry-yard, and is thought, in a measure, to ward off some of the ailments to which fowls are subject. It is a useful tonic during the moulting season, and a great benefit to fowls in cold winter weather. During summer it serves as a disinfectant, keeping the drinking vessels from becoming soured or foul. Its constant use in the water, however, is not to be commended, since by such a course its efficiency in cases of real need would be less marked.

Several formulas have been given for preparing the solution, so as to have it in convenient form at all times. Some of these make the solution too weak. The following will be found to be right, and, the proportions being all in "ones," the formula is easily remembered. In one gallon of warm water dissolve one pound of sulphate of iron copperas, and then add one ounce of sulphuric acid. Put the mixture into a jug, from which it may be used as needed. To one quart of drinking water add one teaspoonful of the solution. It gives to the water a rusty appearance and a pungent taste. A preparation of very near the same proportions as the above has long been known as the "Douglass Mixture," from having first been published by Mr John Douglass when superintendent of the Wolsey Asylums.—Southern Farmer.

A Clean Poultry House.—A clean, sweet fowl house is a very desirable thing. A building infested with vermin is a wretched place to induce fowls in; and however generous may be their feed, or the attention given to their needs otherwise, the neglect to keep the laying and roosting quarters free from lice overbalances all attempts to maintain poultry in a healthy condition. Purity and cleanliness are absolutely essential to the health and comfort of the fowls, guarding them from vermin, and rendering even narrow quarters comparatively comfortable. Whitewashing is one of the most important aids to secure these results, and should be performed twice a year, spring and autumn, at least, and oftener, if necessary. The best wash is made from fresh lime slaked with boiling water, to which is added one ounce of carbolic acid to every four quarts of water. Some say that the building should be cleared of fowls, closed and thoroughly fumigated by burning in it sulphur or tobacco stems in an iron kettle, previous to whitewashing, but we have not found this necessary. Whitewashing every part of the interior with the above mixture will do the business. The lime, besides purifying the building, covers unsightly stains on the walls, and greatly improves the general appearance of the room, while the acid destroys lice, fleas, and other vermin.

To Destroy Cabbage Lice.—For years past the writer as correspondent of the Journal of the Farm has been in the practice of clearing this plant from an insect that infests it at an early stage of its growth, and often continues its ravages to a later date. These are little blue lice, which are so nearly the color of the plant that it is sometimes difficult to fix their identity. This is, however, soon determined by the curling of the inside leaves a considerable time previous to heading. The concave portions of these leaves, being closely inspected, disclose often hundreds of the little insects, scarcely larger than the seed of the plant. An effectual exterminator of these has been used for a number of years with unfailing success. It is simply this: Take some dry ashes in a pan, and while the dew is on the plant in the morning sprinkle the ashes all over the plants, being careful to spread it on the inside of the curled leaves. Hickory ashes, or that of corn cobs, on account of the strength of the lye caused by the dew, are preferred. For a length of years this remedy has been tried with unfailing success. If well applied it will not be necessary to perform the operation more than once.

Autumn-transplanted trees have the advantage of those planted in the spring, in the better settling of the earth about the roots, so that they are ready for an early start. But there are two things to look to, or they will be likely to be worse off than spring-set trees. The wind often whips them about, and makes a hole around the stem, greatly to their injury. In such cases dig the earth away from them with a spade down to the roots, and replace good mellow earth; not hard lumps about them, pressing it well about the tree with the foot. The other difficulty is the hardening of the surface of earth into a crust. This must be dug up and made mellow if you would have the trees do well through summer. Trees set out in spring often have the advantage of fall-transplanted trees, because the earth is left mellow after setting, instead of hardened into a stiff crust by winter and spring rains. But if the care is taken here pointed out, the fall-set trees will do the best.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 10, 1875.

MR. EDWARD L. HALL—SIR: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following results:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to painted or metallic surfaces. It contains no poisonous substances by which injurious effects or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands sold to answer other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and thorough cleaner. Yours, truly,

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, a well-established virtue and its high reputation in all diseases of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all Inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Gout, or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure in truly extraordinary medicine has never been equalled by compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children. It requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottle contains more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without spoiling, and it may be used in families whenever needed by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of different hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

Scientific.

—The California Academy of Sciences is now absolute owner of the property given to it by Mr. Lick. Its present income, in the shape of rents, is about $4,000, and this sum is destined to increase rapidly. Its members number five hundred, including twenty-five life members. The donations to the museum during the year 1875 were numerous and valuable. At the last annual meeting the vice president, Mr. Edwards, suggested the adoption of some plan of distributing the members in sections of geology, botany, entomology, etc., each section to assemble weekly and pass upon papers which, if approved, should be presented at the fortnightly meetings of the academy.

—Decreasing Flow of Rivers:—The Vienna Academy of Sciences, says La Nature, is occupied with a question which concerns all Europe—the decrease of the quantity of water in springs, rivers and water courses, and its cause. A circular, accompanied by a very instructive report, has been addressed to the scientific societies of other countries, inviting them to undertake observations which, in time, may yield useful results. The academy calls attention to the fact that during a certain number of years there has been observed a diminution in the waters of the Danube and other large rivers, especially since the practice of felling forests has become common. The Austrian Engineers' and Architects' Union are also occupied with this question, and have appointed a scientific committee to collect facts and prepare a report. The Danube, Elbe and the Rhine have each been assigned to two members, while others will be occupied with the geology relating to the same subject, and with the influence that rivers and Alpine torrents may exercise on the general result. The commission considers the question important, and recommends the immediate adoption of measures to remedy the evil. According to the Revue Eaux et Forêts, it is unanimous in declaring that the prime cause of the disastrous decrease of water is the devastation of the forests.

—The jaw and lingual membrane of North American air-breathing snails among which our common garden snails are included are the subject of an elaborate memoir by Mr. Binney, containing the results of his re-examination of specimens collected during the last thirty years. The paper appears in the Philadelphia Academy's proceedings, is fully illustrated, and is presented in a manner which will be of service in throwing light upon the classification of these animals. For the benefit of those unfamiliar with the subject, the position of the organ and the methods of extracting and preparing them for study are carefully detailed. Says the author: "By holding up against the light an individual of Helix thyroidus in one hand and offering to him with the other some food—a piece of carrot is always accepted—one can readily see with the naked eye the two organs treated of. Above the extremity of the mouth, through the transparent tissue of the head, is seen a small, arched, reddish, free crescent, which appears to rise from, as if fused in cutting off more or less of the head. This is the jaw. On the floor of the mouth is the lingual membrane, occupying about the position of the human tongue. Its form is not nearly the same as that of the head to afford any strong contrast with close attention it will be detected by its glistening, silvery appearance as it works backward and forward. The use of the tongue is to be to rasp the food, and also to force it back into the œsophagus."

—A scientific paper says: "Keep mirrors away from the sun." And from the daughters also; if you can, add a family paper.

A CARD.

To our Friends and the Public.

We are charged with a violation of the revenue laws having been instituted to recover, and having received from our customers throughout the South and West a number of letters of kindly interest and good will, we wish through this summer to correct any wrong impressions that may be entertained by our friends or customers, especially those outside of the city, who are not advised of the exact nature of the charges made.

The charges embrace only technical irregularities in the keeping of our books, and are such as are brought against any business house in all goods subject to revenue tax.

We have been charged with defrauding or defrauding the Government of the just dues of the Government. To whose charge we will be able to give a complete denial and establish our entire innocence of the charges against us.

New Orleans, Tuesday, March 21, 1876.

The river is 4 feet 1 inch below high-water mark.

COTTON.—The following are the arrivals for the three days ending March 21:

Mississippi river and bayous	bales	4,134
Red river		2,950
Arkansas river		2,141
Ouachita river		1,328
Railroads		4,231
Mobile		63
Texas		1,298
Total		15,857

We gather our views and make up our reports of the cotton market mainly from information obtained by our visits to the Cotton Exchange, where factors and cotton buyers daily assemble and discuss the movement of the fleecy staple. We strive to present to our readers a fair and accurate state of the market from Wednesday morning to Tuesday at three P. M.

The transactions of the week show great regularity, and sales from day to day indicate a healthy condition. Very little speculative feeling was manifested.

On Tuesday the market opened at the following quotations:

Low ordinary	5
Ordinary	5¾
Good ordinary	10⅜
Low middling	11⅝
Middling	12⅜
Good middling	13⅛

and sales of 5,000 bales reported. Market firm; some factors asking higher figures for lower grades.

Thursday.—The quotations for low ordinary were changed to 5c., and for low middling to 11⅝c.; other grades the same as yesterday. Sales, 5,000 bales. Receipts, 2,163 bales. Market quiet and steady. New York, spots dull; futures easier and quiet. Liverpool, quiet.

Friday.—Prices unchanged. Market easier, but not quotably lower. New York, also easier. Liverpool, unchanged. Sales here, 5,000 bales. Receipts, 4,245 bales.

Saturday.—Our market improved in tone, owing to more animation displayed in Liverpool. Sales spun up 7,000 bales. Lower grades neglected, while better grades were firm. Quotations unchanged.

Monday.—Market reported strong, but figures unchanged. Sales, 6,500 bales. Receipts, 6,771 bales. New York, firm for spot cotton, but quiet and steady for futures. Sales for the week in Liverpool, 91,000 bales. Market active and firm.

Tuesday.—Market again reported strong, and figures advanced ⅛c. from yesterday's prices. We quote:

Low ordinary	5¼
Ordinary	5¾
Good ordinary	10⅜
Low middling	11⅝
Middling	12⅜
Good middling	13⅛

Sales, 9,000 bales. New York market, spots firm and futures strong. Liverpool, active and firm.

Sales here for the week, 37,700 bales.

The world's visible supply, 3,020,137 bales.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,236,805 bales, against 967,414 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 568,022 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph is 558,823—3,708,238 against 3,149,415. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 123,956 bales to Great Britain, of 96,453 to France, and of 235,891 to other foreign ports.

PLANTATION SUGAR.—Receipts, 364 hhds. Market active and firm. Our sales of round lots at the landing we quote: Common to good common, 6@6½c., fair 6¾@7c., good fair 7@7¼c., fully fair 7⅛@7⅝c., prime 7⅜@7⅞c., strictly prime 7½@7¾c., choice 8@8¼c., yellow clarified, ordinary to choice, 8½@9¼c., white clarified, ordinary to choice, 9½@10c. Stock in sheds this day, 3,878 hhds.

REFINERY SUGAR.—Standard A 10⅝@10¾c., granulated 11¼c., powdered 11⅜@11¾c., crushed 11⅝@11¾c., cut loaf 12c.

MOLASSES.—Receipts, 282 bbls. Demand good and market steady. We quote fermenting: Common and centrifugals 28@33c., fair 33@42c., prime 42@46c., strictly prime 46@49c., choice 49@52c. Non-fermenting and city refined 2@3c. higher. The stock is diminishing, there being only 8,112 hhds. and 155 half-bbls. in the sheds this day, the larger proportion of which consists of low grades.

GOLDEN SYRUP.—In good supply and quoted at 80c. ₱ gallon.

RICE.—The stock is moderate, with a fair demand. Choice quoted at 6¾c., prime, 6¼@6⅝c., good 5¾@6c., fair 5¼@5¾c., ordinary 4¼@5c., common 4¼@4⅝c., No. 2 2¾@3¾c.

EGGS.—Large receipts and a moderate demand. Western are quoted at 15@18c., Louisiana 17@20c. ₱ dozen.

MONETARY.

Money continues plenty, and all calls for regular discounts are met by the banks freely. Second-class paper neglected. City mortgage paper difficult to negotiate, owing to depression in real estate market. The latter shows no improvement, notwithstanding Capt. Eads' success in opening a channel to the gulf.

Gold continues steady. The sales are for legitimate trade. We quote 14¼@14½. Silver, Mexican, 91½ in gold; American, $1.05@$1.00 currency.

A certain remedy for all NASAL, THROAT, and LUNG diseases, affording relief in some cases in a few minutes. For CATARRH it has proven the only known specific. BRONCHITIS yields to it, and CONSUMPTION if taken in season. ASTHMA, ROSE COLD, and HAY FEVER cured. SORE, INFLAMED, TICKLISHNESS, and common colds relieved at once. A few inhalations will correct the most OFFENSIVE BREATH. Made of hard rubber, it may be carried as handily as a lead pencil or needle-case, and is always ready for use. It supercedes all other inhaling tubes and contrivances—is approved by the entire Medical Fraternity, and endorsed by the standard Medical Journals of the world. Dr. George Hadley, Professor of Chemistry and Pharmacy in the University of Buffalo, in a carefully considered report upon it, concludes in these words: "On the whole, this inhaler seems to me to accomplish its purposes, by no novel, yet by the most simple and efficient means, to be philosophical in conception, and well carried out in the execution." No person afflicted or threatened with any of the difficulties stated, should be without this inhaler. Patented in the United States, England and Canada. Over 20,000 in use. Send your address and receive our descriptive circular and testimonials of hundreds of Physicians who have used it in their practice. We send Inhaler with Inhalant for two months' use, free by mail, for $2. Extra bottles of Inhalant, 50 cents. Sold by Druggists.

DOMESTIC.

MEMPHIS, March 21.—Parties from renada, Miss., represent the storm Sunday night as grand and tor- fic. During the day it sleeted, and ees and shrubbery were covered ith ice. When night came a furious ow storm set in, accompanied by ind, flashes of lightning and ter- fic thunder, making a scene never itnessed in that section before. In ortions of north Mississippi snow ll to the depth of a foot.

BOSTON, March 21.—The Newport ain was blown from the track by gh wind. At Thatcher's Island e velocity of the wind is reported forty-seven miles per hour. Of e hundred and thirty-three vessels sight yesterday, none are now sible. Later reports place the ve- city of the wind at sixty miles an ur.

SHREVEPORT, March 21.—A hard eze occurred last night; clear and d to-day. The river has risen one ot during the past twenty-four urs.

WASHINGTON, March 22.—House. e bill removing the political dis- lities of C. H. MEMPHIS, March 27.—There is great fear here of a disastrous overflow. The river is now within nine inches of the danger line, and rising steadily. At Devil's Elbow, forty miles above here, it cut through the neck yesterday, shortening the river some fifteen or twenty miles. A steady rain is falling this morning, with good prospect of a continuance.

WORCESTER, MASS., March 27.—The damages from the flood are $100,000 in this vicinity. Six dams were washed away, and three stone arches of bridges in this city are totally destroyed.

NORWICH, CONN., March 27.—The damage in eastern Connecticut is several hundred thousand dollars. Several lives were lost.

FOREIGN.

VERA CRUZ, March 15, via Havana. The revolutionists captured Jalapa on the twelfth. The State of Vera Cruz was on the thirteenth declared in a state of siege. The insurgents occupied the railroad between this city and the capital yesterday, but they permit trains to pass.

A primary meeting of Congress will be held on the twentieth. The regular opening of the session will take place April 1.

LONDON, March 21.—The title bill has passed the Commons. Disraeli said he was certain the Queen would not assume the title of Empress in England under the circumstances.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 22.—Public attention is fixed on Oaxaca, where the insurrection continues, and the situation is critical. Gen. Alatorre is continuing the campaign with an army of four thousand men.

Gen. Corella, after repulsing two attacks of the revolutionists, broke through their lines, and effected a junction with Alatorre, but Col. Gonzalez has not yet been able to join the main body.

The revolutionists have fortified Carbonerin, where they will dispute Alatorre's passage to Oaxaca. A battle is expected. Should Alatorre fail, the government will find itself weak, morally and physically.

Donata Guerra's band of rebels has been completely dispersed.

A number of towns in the Puebla mountains are now in open rebellion. The Opan insurgents have joined the Pueblans. Gen. Escobedo having suppressed the outbreak in Michoacan, will go to Puebla and operate against the revolutionists in that quarter. Puebla will be declared in a state of siege. Tlascala has already been so proclaimed.

The Pronunciados in Hidalgo recently attempted to gain possession of the Real del Monto mines, and of the bullion now stored there; they were driven off, and troops now protect the mines. The revolutionist Gen. Bocardo is near Huamantla, on the line of the Vera Cruz railroad, but up to the present time has not attempted to interrupt travel.

The capital of Aguas Calleutes was recently abandoned a few days by the Governor of the State. During his absence United States Consul Pilon preserved order in the city.

Gen. Rocha's band has been completely routed.

There is much discussion over an invasion by sixty Texan filibusters, sent into Mexico by Portirio Diaz, whose unpatriotic course is causing him to lose ground. It is reported that Texans have been whipped by Mexican troops. All the invaders caught will be executed.

The Mexican government has imposed an extraordinary tax of half of one per cent. The French and Spanish residents have objected to paying it. Mr. Foster, United States minister, jealously declines to act with the other foreign legations in a protest against the tax, and the foreign residents abstain from action. Harder times are expected. The real working people are opposed to any revolution. It is generally believed that the church party and priests are doing their utmost to foment revolution and divide the Liberals.

MADRID, March 23.—The Cortes begins the discussion of the new constitution next week.

It is believed the government will send an energetic reply to the Pope's protest against the religious toleration clauses.

A protest has been received from the Vatican against the article of the Spanish constitution sanctioning religious toleration. The protest declares the article violates the rights of Catholicism and annuls the concordat.

Nine hundred troops will go to Cuba on the thirty-first instant.

HAVANA, March 24.—Advices from St. Thomas to the seventeenth have been received. The revolution in Hayti broke out at Jacmel on the seventh of March. As soon as the news reached St. Thomas the Haytian Gens. Boerond, Canal and others chartered the Danish steamer Thyra and sailed for Jacmel. President Domingue has declared the port of Jacmel closed, proclaimed a state of siege in eastern and southern Hayti, and called out the National Guards, and at last accounts was marching on Jacmel at the head of his army. The insurgents in Jacmel are led by Gen. Tanis.

ROME, March 25.—Bishop Littlejohn, of the diocese of Long Island, officiated at the opening of the American Episcopal church in this city. There was present a large congregation of distinguished persons.

RIO JANEIRO, March 26.—There were five hundred and thirty-six yellow fever deaths during the past fortnight.

NAPLES, March 27.—The volcanic eruption is unabated.

The Railroad Tax.

SELF-DEFENSE.

In view of the imminence of the peril to every interest of our city, the refusal of citizens interested in the existence and welfare of New Orleans to apply a small portion of their means to the forwarding of the New Orleans Pacific railway, would appear a grave delinquency. It bears a strong resemblance to the failure of a citizen to march forward to repel the assault of a beleaguering foe, who advances to capture or destroy the place of his home and his property. It is not life which is to be thus exposed, but only a small fraction of his material means he is asked to contribute for the public defense; not only to save what remains, but to advance and increase its value. The tax imposed to raise the necessary means to finish this road is of this character. The duty and policy of cheerfully rendering such contribution were forcibly indicated by one of our largest property-holders and taxpayers, who declared that it would be to his interest to give one out of ten houses he owned to secure such a railway connection, as the remaining nine would then become more valuable than the ten now are. He might have added, too, that the value of the tenth house, invested in the stock of such a road, would not be less productive than the property thus given.

From the Work.

PENSACOLA, FLA.—Mr. Editor: The smallpox is declared epidemic with us. Notwithstanding its prevalence, thank God, there are signs of prosperity in the church. Under God several have been added to the church already, and still they come. You will pray for us. Several ADVOCATES are taken, and I want to largely increase the number. I wonder that any family can be content to live without the ADVOCATE! Yours in Christ,

P. H. LIGHTFOOT.

March 20, 1876.

THE LATE COLD SPELL.—The late cold weather has been of untold damage to our fruit crop, and all who have had courage enough to examine their peach trees proclaim that not a vestige of a chance remains for the crop the present season. Trees that had not bloomed, but whose buds had swollen ready to burst into blossoms, have fared, it is feared, little better than those which had fully blossomed. The cold has not confined itself to the peach, as early trees of all varieties have suffered more or less from it. All the young leaves which wore such beautiful colors a few days ago now have a crisp, dry appearance, and will in a few days more fall to the ground.

In the storm at Beauregard last Saturday night the Methodist church, Beauregard Institute, Midway Seminary, owned by Mrs. Latre, and the African church, together with thirteen or fourteen residences, were blown entirely down or badly damaged. No lives were lost, though all the residences were occupied at the time.—Vicksburg Herald, March 23.

Phillip Phillips writes to 'Zion's Herald from Cawnpore, India, January 17: "We expect to leave Bombay on the fifteenth of next month for England, where I have accepted another engagement of one hundred nights of song, under the auspices of the London Sunday School Union. Our route from here will be via Cairo, Alexandria, Palestine, Naples, Rome, and on the Continent, to London. Should I be permitted to reach Rome again I shall then have belted the world, giving my evenings of sacred song in the principal cities en route."

The bankruptcy of Mr. Daniel Drew, says the New York Christian Advocate, is among the strange incidents of these strangest of times in financial matters. Mr. Drew was, doubtless, among the richest men in the country only a few years ago; but the vast wealth has all passed away like the morning dew. The statement made in the papers a few days since that he had made provision for securing to the Drew Seminary and Wesleyan University the amounts heretofore donated to them by him is probably not according to the facts.

A CORRECTION.—Mr. Editor: Please state in your paper that the $27 reported in the minutes of the Alabama Conference "for other purposes" (Camden circuit, Alabama Conference) should have been reported as missionary money, and much oblige yours truly,

GEORGE F. ELLIS.

SPRING HILL, ALA., March 9, 1876.

Men who never do wrong seldom do anything.

Increase of Church Property.

A noteworthy fact disclosed by the ninth census we have in the remarkable increase of church property in the United States during the last two decades. The following figures present the aggregates of this increase:

Year.	Property.	Increase.
1850	$87,328,801
1860	171,397,942	$84,069,141
1870	351,486,551	180,085,609

In the first of the above decades church property was nearly doubled, and in the second more than doubled. To show in what denominations the larger part of this increase occurred, we submit the following table of figures:

	1850.	1860.	1870.
Baptists (regular)	$11,020,855	$19,709,378	$39,229,221
Christian	853,500	2,518,047	6,424,147
Congregational	8,001,905	13,327,511	25,000,698
Protestant Episcopal	11,375,010	21,605,098	36,514,569
Friends	1,513,767	2,544,505	3,339,560
Jews	418,600	1,135,300	3,155,254
Lutheran	2,909,511	5,385,179	14,917,747
Methodist	14,825,050	23,093,371	69,851,121
Presbyterian (regular)	14,543,789	24,227,359	47,828,752
Reformed Church	4,116,280	4,453,850	10,359,255
Roman Catholic	9,257,758	26,774,119	60,985,506
Unitarian	3,220,822	4,338,306	6,292,255
Universalist	1,778,316	2,850,765	5,602,225

The first of the above tables shows that, as a general average for all the religious sects, large and small, church property in this country has doubled itself in each of the last two decades. The second table presents a comparison of the rate of increase for the same period among the larger sects. Taking the two extreme points of the period, we find the increase of the Baptists to be more than three-fold; that of the Christians to be more than seven-fold; that of the Congregationalists to be more than three-fold; that of the Protestant Episcopalians to be more than three-fold; that of the Friends to be less than three-fold; that of the Jews to be more than twelve-fold; that of the Lutherans to be more than five-fold; that of the Methodists to be more than four-fold; that of the Presbyterians (regular) to be more than three-fold; that of the Reformed Church to be more than two-fold; that of the Roman Catholics to be more than six-fold; that of the Unitarians to be less than two-fold; and that of the Universalists to be more than three-fold. The Jews and Christians in the ratio of increase stand at the head of the scale, and the Unitarians at the foot. Next to the two former come the Roman Catholics, next to them the Lutherans, and next to the latter the Methodists. Then come the Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians and the Universalists, whose ratio of increase is over three-fold. Then come the Friends and the Reformed Church, with a ratio of increase less than three-fold, and last of all the Unitarians, who are below two-fold.

The large sects—largest in numbers and richest in the amount of church property held by them, indeed holding the major part of all the church property in this country—are the Baptists, the Congregationalists, the Episcopalians, the Lutherans, the Methodists, the Presbyterians (regular,) the Reformed Church, and the Roman Catholics. Of these the Catholics take the lead in the accumulation of church property during the last two decades, having advanced nearly twice as rapidly as any one of the other sects. Judging them by this standard, we see at once that the Catholics carry the palm in the element of church prosperity. As a sect they are growing rich the fastest, and evincing their well-known proclivity to accumulate large funds in the possession of the church and for the propagation of their religious faith. Their progress in this respect is about twice the average rate of the other sects.

This increase of church property in this country, purely by voluntary contribution, supplies pleasing evidence that the religious sentiment is by no means dying out in the popular heart. The attacks of the various forms of infidelity seem to have made no noticeable impression upon it. Twenty years of church life have twice doubled the amount of property contributed and held for church purposes. This one fact abundantly tells its own story as to the reality and extent of church power among the American people.

There is, however, one view suggested by the above figures which has a very important bearing upon the question of taxing church property. If the next decade shall keep up the ratio of increase of the last two decades, the church property of this country in 1880 will amount to $708,967,162; rising at the same rate to $1,417,934,324 in 1890, and to $2,835,868,648 in 1900. The growth of thirty years at this ratio will give the stupendous aggregate of nearly $3,000,000,000 invested in church property. Add another decade, bringing us to 1910, and we have nearly $6,000,000,000, and so on with every decade. If all this property, with all its prospective increase, is to be wholly relieved from bearing any tax burdens, then a progressive and finally and enormous load of such burdens must be placed upon all other property, to make up for all the deficit that would otherwise exist in the revenue of the State. In forty years, at this rate of growth, the taxable property of the country must carry upon its back an additional tax load equal to the tax that would accrue from about $6,000,000,000, provided the amount were taxed in common with all other property. The load will be doubled with every decade. We are quite aware that the taxable basis of non-exempted property will be constantly increasing, and, hence, that the people will be the better able to bear the additional load; yet this makes it none the less true that the burden is real and progressive in its amount with the lapse of every decade. If we maintain the principle of exemption in favor of church property, then we must accept all its consequences, and one of these is a constant increase of the property exempted. Fifty years of growth, at the rate of the last two decades, will put it in the neighborhood of twelve billions, and sixty years will carry it up to about twenty-four billions.

It needs but little forecast and but little knowledge of the history of other countries to see that we must stop somewhere with this principle of exemption, or finally reach a state of things that will be felt to be intolerable. We believe the present to be the best time for stopping and placing all private property, no matter what may be its uses, under the same general law of protection and responsibility, without favoritism or disadvantage in any direction. There is no evil in the mere increase of church property—the more of it the better; yet there may be a very great evil in exempting it from taxation. We have no objection to the increase, but rather rejoice in it; yet we decidedly object to the exemption, as wrong in principle, as unjust to taxpayers, and fraught with much prospective evil. There is hardly anything future that we regard as more certain than that the American people will not always continue it.—Independent.

MR. EDITOR: From the recently published minutes of the Alabama Conference for 1875 I derive the necessary data for the following calculations, which, as they relate to very important interests of the church, I hope you will have the kindness to insert in the ADVOCATE. I hope the reports at the next session of the Conference will show a decided improvement on the figures given below.

Seashore Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: Please inform your numerous readers that the trustees will meet on the camp ground on Wednesday, the twelfth of April next, on the arrival of the morning trains from New Orleans and Mobile. They will then lay out a new row of building lots on the western border of the camp ground, and be ready to assign lots for building tents.

All persons wishing to select choice lots for building, or desiring information on any points connected with the camp ground, are requested to be present then and there.

Things We Have Noticed.

We have noticed, in the beginning of every year, that the farmers are going to plant more grain and less cotton. In the fall we noticed that there had been just about as much grain as there was the year before. We have noticed every year that the farmers are going to make provisions enough to supply themselves; but, notwithstanding this, we notice that about the same number are engaged in hauling provisions out of the towns, which they buy at ruinous prices. We notice every year that the country is next year going to be self-supporting; but when next year comes it is painfully evident that the country gets its support from the far West. We are told every spring and summer by the farmers: "Publish in your paper that the cotton crop is going to be a failure," and when we smile incredulously they tell us of the caterpillar, the boll-worm, the drouth, the rust, the bad stand, and numerous other indubitable proofs that the crop must turn out a failure. We suspect at the time that they are trying to create an impression through the papers that the crop will be small, so as to induce a rise in the price. But how futile are their efforts! The price of cotton is never affected by newspaper reports, and it always stays down. At the end of each year we notice that the crop reaches away along toward four million bales, and the farmers sell for less than it costs. We notice that the farmers try every means except the right one to raise the price of cotton. We notice that the policy of raising a great deal of cotton and very little provisions causes the country to languish, and spreads bankruptcy throughout the land. We notice that some of the Grangers are woefully false to their professions of raising their own provisions and buying for cash; and we believe that they are the truest Grangers who live at home and do not have store accounts. We notice that farmers get more advice than any other class of men, and apparently pay less attention to it. But we notice that the advice still flows on; the supply seems inexhaustible; and, as we believe it is good, we propose to continue to do our share as long as the types hold out to print it.—Eufaula News.

The International Chamber of Commerce and Mississippi Valley Society.

We have been favored by the Hon. Jefferson Davis, president of the American Department of the above-named society, with a copy of its charter and constitution. The president of the European Department is the Hon. John Crossby, a very wealthy and influential gentleman and member of Parliament, with his office in London.

The objects are to promote direct trade between the States and Territories of the valley of the Mississippi, and those of Europe and of Central and South America, to induce and facilitate immigration, to collect and transmit information in regard to the Mississippi valley, so as to lead to safe and profitable investments of European capital and labor in aid of the development of the varied sources of wealth and happiness with which this country is so bounteously endowed by nature, and to accomplish these purposes by co-operation with the International Chamber of Commerce and Mississippi Valley Society of London, England, or by such other means as may seem proper and advisable.

The present board of direction in this city is composed of the following well-known gentlemen: Cyrus Bussey, William C. Black, Thomas A. Adams, S. H. Kennedy, J. B. Hood, Adam Thomson, John Chaffe, E. B. Wheelock, Scott McGehee, Charles G. Johnson, Louis A. Wiltz, A. J. Gonella, W. R. Lyman, E. C. Palmer and Charles E. Fenner, who will serve until the first election in February, 1877.

This society can certainly need nothing further than what is above given to commend it to the people of the Mississippi valley. With the objects it has in view, with such a board of direction, and, above all, under the presidency of Mr. Davis, we are assured our people need no more to commend it unto them.

Mr. Davis has established his office at No. 35 Camp street, where he will be happy to give personally any information that may be desired or furnish copies of the charter to those who may desire them, and to his address, as above, all letters desiring information should be sent.—New Orleans Democrat.

STORM AT POINT LA HACHE.—From Messrs. P. A. and Fred. Tiravollet we learn that the storm of Sunday, at Point la Hache, was the most disastrous that has occurred for years. From the lower line of Casimire du Plessi to the lower line of Belle Isle, a distance of three miles, the levee was completely destroyed, letting in the water upon the bordering country to a distance of about three miles. The terror-stricken people had scarcely time to save themselves from the encroaching flood. Mr. Tiravollet was aroused from his bed between eleven and twelve o'clock on Sunday night by the invading waters, which had flooded his house to the depth of two feet.

A large crevasse also occurred at Mr. B. Johnson's plantation, and another, two hundred feet wide, at Soutvildu Plessi's.—Daily Picayune, March 23.

WRITTEN AT MY MOTHER'S GRAVE.

BY GEORGE B. DRESSER.

The [illegible] dew-drops fall
Upon the shutting flowers, like tears at rest;
The stars shine [illegible] and up
Silver moon is [illegible]

Mother, I'm at your grave;
The violet, with its blossoms blue and meek
Waves o'er the head where should wave
Above it a cloud.

I see sweet flowers, and must
Its bright leaves to the opening tempest bow—
Dear mother, [illegible] dust
Is on thy brow.

And I could have wept,
I have endured life's dark bitter streams—
My face, as erst in childhood, lie,
And shake thy dreams.

And must I linger here,
To sigh the plainings of my sinless years,
And mourn the hopes, in childhood dear,
With bitter tears?

Aye, must I linger here,
A lonely branch upon a withered tree,
Whose last frail bud, untimely sere,
Went down with thee?

Up from life's withered bower,
In still communion with the Past, I turn
And muse on thee, the only flower
In Memory's urn.

And when the evening pale
Bows, like a mourner, on the dim brow where,
Lest day to hear the night winds wail
Around thy grave,

Where is thy spirit flown?
I gaze above. My look is meeting there
I listen—and thy gentle tone
Is on the air.

O spare, while here I press
My brow upon thy grave, and, to thy guilty
And [illegible] tears of tenderness
Bless, bless thy child!

Yes, Bless thy weeping child;
And o'er thine urn, religious and holiest shrine—
O give his spirit undefiled,
To mend with thine.

Created Sin.

MR. EDITOR: In a former article we discussed "created holiness;" we come now to notice "created sin." If there is anybody in the whole world who believes in "created sin," we have never heard of it. And the discussion would abruptly terminate here did there not lie concealed in these words the denial of a most important doctrine, or rather two doctrines—"imputed sin" and "inherited depravity."

We believe in the doctrine of imputed sin, imputed guilt, and inherited depravity or "birth-sin;" and we believe John Wesley held to and taught most vehemently the same. But what do we mean by imputed sin? Not that God, by some mysterious process, has infused sin and guilt in upon the soul—not this; but that the whole race of Adam, even before the years of accountability, God treats as sinners.

In the fifth chapter of Romans Paul brings out most clearly the doctrine, and teaches, as we believe, that in consequence of Adam's sin all men are treated as sinners; and this is what we mean by imputed sin or imputed guilt.

"Therefore, as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." "But sin is not imputed when there is no law. Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression." "For if by one man's offense death reigned by one, much more," etc. "As by the offense of one judgment came upon all to condemnation," etc. "For as by one man's disobedience many were made sinners," etc.

In these verses and chapter the following doctrines are taught: 1. That Adam is our representative, federal and natural head. 2. In view of our union to him, and our relation to him, his sin is the ground of the condemnation of the whole race, or their subjection to penal evils. 3. That in consequence of this condemnation not one of the race, infant or adult, can be saved without grace—without the blood of an atonement and regeneration of the Spirit. 4. And this Paul proves by establishing the fact that the righteousness of Christ imputed is the ground of our justification. By the imputed sin of Adam we are not to understand any mysterious identity with him; nor any transfer of moral turpitude, so that we should feel remorse; nor that his sin was personally the sin of all men; nor that his act was in some secret sense the act of his posterity; but from a legal standpoint, in view of law, by virtue of a covenant relation we are regarded and treated as sinners.

The apostle's argument seems to be this: The infliction of a penalty implies violation of law. Now all mankind are subject to death, and therefore under the curse of law. But this was not the Mosaic law, for death reigned where this was not; nor was it the law written in our hearts, for millions die in infancy; therefore it was another law which brought death and the curse, and this is the covenant law, made with Adam. Wherefore he says: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin." All die, all are exposed to penal evils, all are punished with death, bodily and spiritually, because all have sinned.

A distinction may be drawn between "imputed sin" and inherited depravity; and one may believe in the second without believing in the first. It seems to me they are so correlated that whatever is proved of one is true of the other, and whatever objection is lodged against one presses equally upon the other. Those who object to one comment last to throw both overboard. If a child is guilty by imputation, he is no more and no less guilty by inheriting a sinful nature. He obtains neither by a voluntary choice, and in either case he stands condemned, and can be saved by grace only.

Let us now consider a few other passages of Scripture. Jesus declares he came "to seek and to save the lost." We believe infants are saved by Jesus, and if saved they must have been lost. Now nothing can work the loss of any creature but sin. Infants became sinners either by imputation, inheritance or actual choice. Again, Paul affirms that "Christ came into the world to save sinners." And Christ says: "Except any one (see the Greek) be born of water and the Spirit he cannot enter the kingdom of God." This applies to infants; therefore we baptize them. Now it seems absurd to apply baptism to a child except under the consideration of guilt; and much more evident must this appear when it is said of them: "They must be born of the Holy Ghost" before they can enter into the kingdom of heaven. Regeneration must be required only of those who are guilty. There is work for the Holy Ghost where there is need; and the greatest need is where there is sin. One of the strong arguments used by Wesley is the universal corruption of the race. Men of every age, of every nation and people have been abominably wicked, from the least to the greatest; and this can only be reasonably accounted for on the supposition that they are corrupted and sinful by birth—as David: "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me."

But we cannot pursue this subject, though we are but upon the brim. Let us look at the words of Wesley himself. The following quotations are made from his work on "Original Sin," and we would advise some of the preachers to give it a careful perusal:

On page 142, the Unitarian who defined the doctrine of birth-sin makes this statement: "But nature cannot be morally corrupted except by a moral agent." Wesley replies: "I am inclined, and was ever since I can remember, antecedently to any choice of my own, to pride, revenge and idolatry." These are "moral corruptions." Page 171: "Therefore, God does not look upon infants as innocent, but as involved in the guilt of Adam's sin. Otherwise death, the punishment denounced against sin, could not be inflicted upon them." Again, on page 185, the Unitarian had said: "Suffering may happen where there is no sin, as to brutes and infants." Wesley answers: "Absolutely true where there is no personal sin, but only imputed sin." Speaking of our Lord, he says he suffered "for the sins of others imputed to him; as the sin of Adam was imputed to infants, who suffer death through him." The objector had granted "that the children of Dothan and Abiram suffered for the sins of their parents." Wesley exclaims: "It is enough. You need allow no more. All the world will see if they suffered for them, then they were punished for them. Yet we do not confound suffering with punishment. Punishment is not barely suffering, but suffering for sin. If, therefore, the children of Dothan and Abiram suffered for the sins of their parents, which no man can deny, then they were punished for them." Page 172. The Unitarian had declared this doctrine "hurtful to the power of godliness." Wesley says: "Just the reverse. There is no possibility of the power of godliness without it." Our young theologians will please hear this statement of the venerable old man in mind. He continues: "No man can love God till he believes in Christ; no man can believe in Christ till deeply convinced of his own sinfulness and helplessness; and this no man ever was or can be who does not know he has a corrupt nature."—Page 168. Or, in other words, the man must be fully convinced that he was born with a sinful nature, and justly exposed to wrath, in consequence of his relation to Adam in the covenant. All this is "antecedent" to any choice of his.

JOHN.

The Relation of Our Children to the Church.

MR. EDITOR: It will be remembered that the writer of the articles on the above subject, referred to in my former communication, uses as a premise in his first article, and reaffirms in the second, the following truthful proposition: There must be some well-defined system of grace, in the economy of human redemption, by which those dying at this (infantile) age are saved. But when he proceeds to give us this plan he rejects faith altogether as a part or condition in the plan, for he pronounces the twin infants, which he uses in illustration, "incapable alike of sin and faith." He calls it a "well-defined plan." Now we would ask: Is there any plan of salvation well defined or otherwise revealed in the sacred word without faith? I know it is generally assumed that infants cannot believe, and therefore are saved without faith, and that in taking issue with Bro. Weems on this question I am also taking issue with many, probably a majority, of those who write on the subject; yet I am persuaded it is a position not sustained by reason or Scripture, and shall in this connection give several reasons why I regard it as untrue that any soul is incapable of believing on or apprehending God, unless it be those who are given over to "a strong delusion, that they might believe a lie" and be lost.

1. It makes the capacity for faith, or the power to believe an acquired capacity—one that begins or is possible only after a certain degree of development of the understanding; whereas it is clearly an elemental or constitutional faculty, and must be capable of action so soon as the individual possesses personality or individual existence. I know that in a fallen state, as all infants are, this power is crippled and impotent of itself; but then it is always the subject of the quickening and enabling powers of the Holy Ghost; therefore it cannot be said to be wholly in a dormant or passive state; for, if so, the Holy Spirit has not quickened or, in other words, there is no application of the benefits of the atonement, which, according to the opinion of all, would leave the child unsaved.

2. This theory places the little one in a state of grace, and into the church on earth; yea, more, if it should die it carries it into the eternal world, and into the presence of God, without the capacity to apprehend or believe on him; for if the soul of man possesses a capacity to know and enjoy God, faith must, to say the least, be an element in that capacity. Neither will it do to say it receives the capacity to enjoy God and heaven after death, for this would be preparation for heaven after the dissolution of soul and body—a doctrine the writer of the aforesaid articles takes special pains to reject.

3. It makes knowledge acquired through the senses indispensable in order to the existence or exercise of faith; whereas such knowledge is only an auxiliary to faith, needful, it is true, while we have connection and communion with that which is temporal, but not absolutely essential in order to communion with that which is invisible and eternal; for St. Paul defines faith to be "the evidence of things not seen, the substance of things hoped for;" and the Savior, in reply to Peter after he had manifested his faith in the strong expression, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," said: "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." Which is equivalent to saying: The knowledge requisite to the exercise of faith is not revealed through the senses, or by human instrumentality, but directly by God himself in the workings of the Holy Spirit.

4. It presents two modes of salvation—the one with, and the other without faith—and divides the human family into two great classes by a line clearly marked and deeply cut; whereas the Scriptures present the plan of salvation as a unit in all of its great essentialities; and as to the few spoken of, which is necessarily a part of this theory, I find not a trace of it in the sacred word.

5. It limits the import and application of such passages of Scripture to a part of the human family, as the following: "Without faith it is impossible to please God;" "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin;" "He that believeth not shall be damned;" "He that cometh to God must believe that he is, and that he is a rewarder of those that diligently seek him." Whereas to my understanding these, with many others of like import, teach great truths or principles that necessarily and invariably belong to and grow out of the relation that exists between God and a rational, immortal creature. Upon these principles God can and does save a human soul, and, so far as we can learn, upon no other.

6. This doctrine or theory opposes, in my opinion, the plain, direct teachings of the word. Jesus said: "Whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me," etc. Fortunately for us, Bro. Weems uses this circumstance in his articles, and takes the position that the Savior here was speaking of those "who were really little children;" and this idea is confirmed if we observe the manner in which he designates the subject of his remarks, using the demonstrative adjective pronouns to point out those of whom he was speaking: "This little child," and "these little ones;" which to my mind actually precludes the idea of his alluding to any other but those of whom the little child present was a representative. But on another occasion he taught the capacity of children to worship God, if possible, in stronger terms than the above, where he said to the chief priests and scribes who were "sore displeased" at the children, crying: "Hosanna to the Son of David! Have ye not read, Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." Can perfect praise be rendered where there is no capacity for faith? no power to take hold of or apprehend God? Surely not.

JOHN W. HALL.

CRAWFORD, Miss.

Only a Word.

"A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." Only a word! Yet it bore joy, peace and balm with it. Only a word! Yet it wrecked a noble life. It is useless for us to endeavor to believe that words have in themselves no effect; for every word spoken has either a good or bad influence on some one who hears it. We may not at the time know it, but could we read the hearts we meet we would then know how oft a little word had been a keen dart or a sweet messenger of peace. There have been many words spoken indifferently that have been the blight of many bright anticipations. On the other hand, there have been words spoken, when the heart was saddest, that have been a comfort and a blessing to it all through life.

When the time comes that no hasty, thoughtless, angry words fall from our lips, no more profanity, and all our words are fitly spoken, then we will joyfully hail the dawning of the millennium.

Angry words! O let them never
From the tongue unbridled slip;
May the heart's best impulse ever
Check them ere they soil the lip.

Would we but bear in mind that a word once uttered can never be recalled, we would, if possessed of any sensibility whatever, use them with more care. How often parents, when in company with their children, utter careless words, thinking, if they think at all, that they are too young to realize their meaning. But how different is the effect! As they advance in years they will oft remember that word, and think they have the same privilege to use it their parents had; and that word will be a guide-post, leading to darkness and unhappiness. On the other hand, how much good a single word has done can never be realized. How often, when ready to give up all hope, will the remembrance of a fond mother's word rouse all our drooping energies, and cause us to be brave once more. Or when tempted, how oft will the gentle admonition of some departed loved one strengthen us to avoid the tempter's voice. Then let us remember, and adopt the old Scottish maxim: that "every pickle makes a muckle," and never, even in jest, utter a single word that would cause another pain.

Pastoral Visits.

MR. EDITOR: All civilized and Christian people look upon ministers of the gospel as their teachers, advisers and counselors. Public sentiment sets them up as examples and leaders of their charges, whether they are found in the house of God, in palaces or in hovels. They are not regarded as professional or ordinary men, but as the mouthpiece for God. Here, then, is a broad field for labor and usefulness in each minister's own work. He can become a missionary in his own parish. In every family he will find work to do. The afflicted are comforted by his prayers, the bereaved are soothed in the hour of grief, the widow and the orphan feel that while contending with the cold charities of the world there is one to point them to that home of everlasting rest. Many communicants are so circumstanced that they are denied attending the house of God. A visit from their pastor dispels the dark cloud that is lowering over their pathway. They feel strengthened and encouraged by these visits.

The most learned and eloquent sermons from the sacred desk may not effect as much good as pastoral visits. They are sermons within themselves—personal sermons.

In the example of the sainted Jefferson Hamilton we have a model pastor, an exemplary Christian. The afflicted and the poor were his special care. Whether in city or inland town, walking in the footsteps of his Master, he visited them. A faithful minister, a true Christian, he is now wearing the golden crown he so richly merited.

OBITUARIES.

DIED, in Thibodaux, February 21, 1876, Sister LOUISA J. SMITH, in the sixty-fourth year of her age. Sister Smith had been a resident of this community about thirty years, and the large concourse of people who assembled at the Methodist church to attend the funeral solemnities, and follow her remains to St. John cemetery for interment beside the resting-place of her late husband and two little daughters, was a silent though solemn and profound expression of the high estimation in which she was held by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, who had in her life-time been attracted to her by the flow of her social, great benevolence, cordiality and social qualities.

Prominent in life's picture, Sister Smith was herself, acting her own part, imitating no one. Without affectation, her modesty and reservedness never stood in the way of an exhibition of her peculiar personality, which was fully delineated in every company, society or position in which she was found. During the late civil war the Southern soldier had a warm place in her affections and sympathies, and with great self-sacrifice and assiduity she visited him in the hospitals, bringing with her the charm of a mother, a sister's heart, and by her cheerful demeanor, her words of solace and comfort, and her kind attention in administering to his wants, she cheered the heart of many a home-sick Confederate far away from his friends. At her own house she was kind and hospitable—there was a freedom that always made her guests feel welcome and at home. Under her roof the weary itinerant especially found a sweet resting-place. Attached to her church, nothing gave her greater pleasure than the entertaining of the preachers. They were not neglected by her because she could not entertain them in the style of the more opulent. By the cordiality of her manner the wayfaring man felt not the want of the affluence of the palace.

We are sorry that we are not in possession of the details of her espousal of Christ, or the date of her connection with the church. When we first visited her house, twenty-seven years ago, she was then a warm-hearted Christian and a zealous member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, and her home only interrupted her attendance upon the means of grace. The house of God was the last place she visited prior to her last illness. She died on Monday morning, and on the Wednesday evening previous she was at church, and sang. It was remarked, with more than usual spirit, as if to say:

"Then let my raptured soul
Let one sweet song be given:
Let music chord me last on earth,
And greet me first in heaven."

During her sickness she remarked to a lady friends sitting by her bedside: "I am very weak. I am too sick to live." The lady observed to her: "You are not afraid to die?" To which question she answered: "No; I am not afraid to die. I am willing to die now, if it is God's will." She remarked that her mind was constantly called out in prayer, and that she was able to look confidently up to Jesus.

Sister Smith was the daughter of Ozias Sprigg and Kitty Scruggs, and was born in the State of Virginia, December 9, 1812. Some time during her minority her parents moved to Nashville, Tenn. November 21, 1837, she was married to John B. Smith. Subsequently they moved to the State of Mississippi, and from thence, about the years 1845 to Lafourche, La. Her husband and one daughter died with yellow fever, in Thibodaux, in 1853. She was the mother of nine children, only three of whom now remain to mourn a mother gone.

LEWIS A. REED.

IN MEMORIAM OF COL. A. G. FUQUA.

The following is presented as supplemental to the resolutions in memory of Col. Fuqua, several weeks ago, unanimously adopted by the Baton Rouge Quarterly Conference:

Col. James G. Fuqua was born in Wilkinson county, in the State of Mississippi, March 2, 1822. The son of a mother rich in womanly excellencies, and possessed of rare spiritual wealth, he received and responded to the elevating influence and wise guidance which only such a mother can exercise. His boyhood was characterized by a hearty obedience, a sincere reverence, and a chivalrous, helpful service to his widowed mother. In mature manhood his filial devotion had nothing of the dry punctiliousness of mere duty, but possessed the freshness, the fervor and the spontaneity of a full-grown love. Filial piety is an axis around which a rich character is almost sure to crystallize; and in his case this was true with a decided emphasis.

To his youth was not vouchsafed the opportunity for wide school instruction. In spite of meager school furnishing, he became a well-educated man. His schools and schoolmasters were everywhere. He had the seeing eye, the hearing ear, a sound mental digestion, and the power of thorough mental assimilation. He gathered much, which became his own by right of arrangement and complete adaptation to his work. In early manhood he began the practice of law at Clinton, La., when the bar of that place numbered men of high ability. He was soon abreast of the foremost, and ever after held place in the front rank. During the war with Mexico he responded to the call for volunteers by organizing a company of riflemen, which he led to the seat of war. Although no opportunity for field service was afforded, yet he and his men bravely endured all the inconveniences, the drudgeries and hazards of the camp and the march.

When secession by separate State action was proposed in Louisiana, he in many public addresses urged the people of his district to oppose the movement, believing that Southern aggrievances could not be remedied by that policy. He was elected to a seat in the convention which was to decide the action of the State. He fully comprehended the magnitude of the issues presented. The grandeur of the past, the mighty responsibilities of the then, and the disastrous possibilities of the future, passed before him in solemn procession, and stirred his soul to its utmost depths. His address to the convention is said to have been marked by a masterly discussion of the subject—a pathos and sublimity of appeal which made it the distinguished utterance of that occasion. He entered the army as a captain, and in the battle of Shiloh was so severely wounded that full field service became impracticable, and his health unfavorably affected it for the remainder of his days. Early in life he entered the church, and was always a liberal contributor to all its interests. In his everyday life there was a genuine, generous kindliness, which evoked respect and secured confidence. In his domestic relations there was a faithfulness, a tenderness, a devotion and a liberal providence which made home pleasant to his guests, and to his family the abode of a pure, free joy. Equilibrium was his distinguishing characteristic. In him was that true balance, product of rightly distributed force.

Faultlessness is not asserted, but there were of the minor sort, which, though undesirable, do not seriously mar, but serve to remind the strongest of their weakness, and to emphasize the teaching that in Christ alone can humanity find completeness and strength.

He was called away on the twenty-first of December, and peacefully departed.

The guardianship of the God of the widow and the orphan be with the bereaved family of my departed friend.

P. LAY.

MRS. PATTIE T. SPEED, wife of Judge J. H. Speed, of Marion, Ala., died February 20, 1876, of consumption. Each year from the jeweled thread of friendship some gem is taken—in the sunny home some breach is made. For months and years the eyes of affection watched the slow progress of the fatal malady as it made insidious advances upon the delicate frame, but hope always whispered: "Not yet; a little longer she shall be yours;" and until a few hours before she left us could not realize that we must give her up. Alas! we know the genial smile and words will never more greet us here, only "where the faded flowers shall freshly blow" can we see, blooming again in heavenly strength, the frail, beautiful flower that faded so soon after its maturity. Her life was lovely, good and pure, gentle and loving.

Chosen to be a mother to those whose early childhood had been bereft of a mother's care, the warm affection and gentle influence of her husband's children grew worthily and successfully she filled a place so difficult. She had been a Christian for years. In her girlhood she became a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, after her marriage joined the church of her husband, the Methodist Episcopal South. Her delicate health and family cares prevented her frequent attendance upon public services. Her religious duties were not on this account neglected, and from which she was accustomed to derive comfort and strength will be sadly missed by the loved ones, who find so many passages marked by the feeble hand often turned the sacred pages to point those promises in which that never failing resignation and perfect peace that were in dying hour were satisfactory proof that death was "swallowed up in victory." There were many ties that bound her to earth. Little children need her motherly care, and one especially—a dear little daughter—claimed her tenderest solicitude. Entirely conscious that she was on the very verge of death, trusting all to God, "doeth all things well," she passed away, leaving the precious little ones who had preceded her to that smiling clime where a mother finds her children.

Mrs. Speed was the daughter of Rev. Rachel Pack, and was married to Rev. J. H. Speed December 20, 1854. May her husband and children, father, mother, brothers and sisters so live that they may meet where all families are gathered.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

At a meeting of the H. W. L. Grange, No. 161, March 11, 1876, the following preamble and resolutions were adopted:

Whereas, It has pleased almighty God to take from our midst our beloved and worthy chaplain, A. M. KEAN, a charter member of our grange, favorably known by this community as a good neighbor and citizen, a devoted husband and indulgent parent; he moved from Poplar Grove, in this parish, in January last, to this parish, East Baton Rouge, on the plantation of Mr. Henry Von Phul, only a few days from where he was called to his eternal home on Friday, February 11, at twelve o'clock, M., in the eighth year of his age, the prime of life, leaving a large and dependent family to mourn his loss;

Resolved, That in his death we feel a loss, and regret we were not able to give him the attention in his sickness that was due by our order.

Resolved, That in token of our respect and esteem for our deceased and worthy chaplain we will wear the badge of mourning for thirty days, during which time our hall and his seat be draped in the emblem of woe.

Resolved, That we hereby tender our deeply bereaved family our fullest sympathy and fraternal condolence.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the record of our grange, a copy to be furnished to his family, and also published in the West Baton Rouge Planter, Baton Rouge Advocate, NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and other papers.

JAS. L. LOUPPE,
Master of Grange No. 161.
N. A. DUGLASS,
Secretary.

DEAR little ALBERT STEPHENS BUMEAS, grandson of T. Y. and A. E. Strong, and son of William T. and Sue Burgers, was born November 25, 1873, at Chunkey Station, Newton county, Miss., died of membranous croup, February 1876, aged two years, two months and twenty-two days. Dear little Albert was a sprightly child in body and mind; but in his infinite wisdom, saw fit to take from us. We therefore pray for grace and submissive to the divine will.

WILD ROSES.

BY EDNAH FAWCETT.

O long, serene midsummer days
Of ripening fruit and yellowed grain,
How sweetly, by dim woodland ways,
In tangled hedge or leafy lane,
Pale wild rose thickets, you unfold
Those pale pink stars with hearts of gold!

Your sleek patrician sisters dwell
On lawns where gleams the shrub's stiff mask,
Or fairest gardens, tended well,
Near polished walk and quaint kiosk,
Proud flaunt their colors regal—
They bloom on Beauty's fragrant breast!

But you in lowly calm abide,
Sought by the bee! save by breeze or bee;
You know what splendor, pomp and pride
Befell your brilliant sisters see;
What sorrow, too, and bitter fears,
What mad farewells and hopeless tears!

How some are kept in old, dear books,
That once in bridal wreaths were worn;
How some are kissed, with tender looks,
And later tossed aside with scorn;
How some their fatuous petals lay
On icy foreheads pale as they!

While these truths you vaguely guess,
Abloom in many lonesome spot,
Sweet wild roses, may you bless
The fate that rules your modest lot;
Else rosier shame did meekly stand
Before the ladies of their land!

Aunt Hannah on "Preachin'."

BY MAJASA.

Well, if some folks ain't mighty unreasonable," exclaimed Aunt Hannah as she hobbled into the large kitchen. "I was comin' out of the meetin'-house this mornin'," and the old lady brought her cane down with an emphasis that showed she was in earnest; "as I was comin' out the meetin'-house door Bro. Jones stopped to shake hands, and says he: 'We don't hear such preachin' every day.' 'No,' says I, 'but we have just as good.' 'But our preacher don't tell it like Dr. Smithson does,' he walked away with the solemnest face, as though our poor meetin' house was dreadfully to be pitied because that tall preacher couldn't stretch out his long arms, to get off fine words in the pulpit every Sunday mornin'.

Now our preacher is a good man, mighty good man, and preached good sermons, and he's a good pastor too, and visits all round, and looks, and looks after the lambs of the flock, and some that aren't lambs, I keep neither, but mother-like, as the folks all know it, and that church is twice as full as when he came; but if some man with a big name happens to come along in fine clothes, and preaches a hyfalutin' sermon, with lots of stories in it, there's always some folks ready to get all our preacher's faithful labors, and these folks begin to whine and say, 'Oh, dear, if we could only have that preacher all the time,'" and the old lady untied her bonnet strings with a jerk, and settled back in her easy chair much out of breath.

"But, aunt," said John, "you can't blame folks for liking to hear sweet preaching, do you?"

"No, I don't, if they'll just remember that there's other things in the world just as useful as fine speaking, and a heap more so, and you'll mind, John, if you live as long as I have. Now, I thought the preacher did talkable well this mornin', though I'd rather had something about grace and salvation, and God's love to poor sinners, in the place of what he called philosophy, and the meaning of them folks—what did he call 'em? And one of his stories was not reverent to me; but I 'spose he'll say that's because I'm old-fashioned. But I didn't mean to fault the preacher, John; 'tisn't right when he's preachin' the gospel, and the preacher did speak once about prayer and duty and work born of prayerful, and gettin' its reward. But, John, you can't tell what kind of a man a preacher is by just one sermon, and all that will down, too, don't swallow don't make a summer,' as I don't like to see our pastor looked askance at after years of hard work by some one that we saw this time for the first time. And now we've got a good, faithful pastor, why can't we be satisfied to let well enough alone? And there's another thing, John; if I'd only known it a little sooner I would have saved me lots of worryin' over things. These folks that keep complainin' so much about the preacher, and keep sayin' we oughter have a smarter man, and that the church's runnin' all out, and such like unchristian talk, aren't generally the folks that's worth much to the church, now. They ain't the ones that's always to prayer-meetin' rainy nights, and Sunday-school cold mornin's, they don't pay the lion of the preacher's livin' neither. But some day, when a new preacher comes along, then they're all at the door, clean down to the baby, if they haven't been there for a month afore, and the first thing you hear they're so 'fraid the church is goin' down unless they get a new preacher, or unless suthin's done," the old lady gave her chair an impatient twitch back from the fire as she warmed with her subject. "It seems to me you are rather hard on Bro. Jones and the rest of his set, don't, Hannah," said John mildly, but slowly, in order to keep the tone down in his voice.

"I don't want to be uncharitable to nobody"—the indignant tone was growing softer—"'specially to some of the brethren and sisters in the church; but, John, I want you to grow up to be a pillar in the church, like your Uncle Josiah was, and the way to begin it isn't gruffly to find fault with the preacher; and I saw Bro. Jones talkin' to you, tryin' to draw you over to his side. Now, as I said, I want you to grow up to be a pillar in the church, and take your Uncle Josiah's place; he was a deacon nigh on to forty years. And I want you to be turned out of the straight and narrer way, and stumblin' up for your pastor 'cause some folks grumble and find fault with him. You'll always find such folks, and I want you to know how to meet 'em. Don't stop to argue or dispute with 'em; that's just what they like, and the devil, too, likes to see folks to disputin' about doctrines and laws, so they won't have time to keep 'em. You can't make folks see what they shut their eyes agin for fear of seein'. You just ask the brother or sister if they were sick last prayer meetin' night, and tell 'em what a good meetin' we had, and ask 'em if the roads were so muddy or dusty that they couldn't get to Sunday-school, and tell 'em what a mighty interestin' lesson we had. I've found such talk makes 'em have less to say directly. If them folks had the new preacher, do you 'spose they'd be satisfied after the new wore off? Why, John, I don't b'leve the 'postle Paul or the angel Gabriel would be good enough for 'em to listen to faithful every mornin' and night, and prayer meetin' and church meetin' for one hull year! I don't b'lieve they'd go to meetin' through thick and thin that long unless they or some of their kin could lead the singin', or the prayin', or exortin', or had the first seats in the synagogue.

"You see they seem to think they can go to meetin' when they feel like it. I wonder if their hired help didn't feel like churnin' some day, or their Mike wouldn't feed the horses 'cause he didn't feel like it, how long would it be before they'd have to hunt for another house to live in?

"Your Uncle Josiar used to say, 'Come, Hannah, it's time to go,' every Sunday mornin' reg'lar, rain or shine, and the Lord was good to him, for the last Sunday he lived he went to meetin' just the same as he had for forty years, and the next Sunday"—and the old lady's voice grew tremulous—"the next Sunday they sung over his coffin his favorite hymn, 'Jerusalem, my happy home,' and the preacher broke down and cried when he told how he'd miss him, and said he'd gone

> Where congregations ne'er break up,
> And Sabbaths never end."

By this time the old lady's tears were falling fast, and John laid one hand tenderly on her shoulder, and said earnestly: "Aunt Hannah, God helping me, I will be faithful to the church and the minister. Pray that Uncle Josiah's mantle may fall on me."—Interior.

The Foot and Its Coverin'.

The human foot, in its natural form and comeliness, is one of the most beautiful objects for contemplation. Its graceful lines of curvature, its lithe and supple tissues, its fairy lightness and delicacy of construction, combined with its immense capacities for sustaining weight, and executing intricate movements, render it at once a mechanism of surpassing wonder and admiration. No artificial substitute, in case of loss has ever approached the original; and, at best, all such efforts have proved but clumsy and inadequate makeshifts.

But few eyes have ever rested upon a perfect foot—so unavoidable are those physical and organic defects perpetuated and handed down from parent to offspring—the sad heritage of ignorance, for which no patrimony can compensate.

Yet, even in this state of imperfection, the foot of an infant is still beautiful; and, while it escapes the deforming grasp of the modern shoe, continues to exhibit those wondrous capacities which, alas! are certain to succumb to subsequent abuse. Thus it happens that a healthy, well-formed, natural foot, at adult age, is the rarest of exhibitions; while a secure tread, a safe step, a firm gait and graceful carriage, with ease and comfort, without fatigue and suffering, are certainly not often to be met.

Experience of surgeons proves that a large proportion of sprained joints, ruptured ligaments and fractured limbs are the legitimate consequence of defective, deformed and weakened feet. All this is the direct result of failure to comprehend the simple and beautiful mechanism of the organs of locomotion, or to understand the anatomy of the foot as a magnificent series of arches, perfectly adapted to sustain the weight of the body, while in the capacity of a living and growing machine it enables us to move about with comfort and facility, in obedience to our wishes and necessities.

The power and efficacy of the foot is destroyed or largely lessened by unnatural pressure. If you would prove this, let me ask you who have worn the old-fashioned shoe for a life-time, to experiment with your toes and see how much strength they possess. Of course they should be vigorous and powerful; they should possess muscular force sufficient to support the entire weight of the body; but the wedging, cramping system of the old shoe destroys the power of the toes by inducing partial paralysis—for any physician will tell you that absolute loss of power may be brought about by long-continued pressure—renders natural, elegant, graceful and unrestrained locomotion impossible, and induces more suffering than any other error that can be named.

It is safe to say that no single subject is of greater interest or importance to civilized human beings than the construction of covering for the feet; for our northern climate, with its great extremes of temperature, its diversified seasons, and its sudden changes, it is necessary that our foot clothing should be adapted to a variety of conditions. Especially is it desirable that the feet should be protected from cold and moisture, and from sudden, extreme and prolonged changes of temperature, as well as from those injuries which locomotion among harsh and rude substances would surely occasion. For the protection of the feet from violence and climatic exposures, it has been found desirable to cover them with the prepared skins of animals. This formed the earliest foot clothing of which we have any knowledge, and has been employed in all ages, alike by the savage and the civilized. Science has not been able to surpass it by the use of any manufactured fabric. To-day, as in all the past, "there's nothing like leather" from which to fabricate the needed clothing for the feet. Its excellencies are many; and if it were the custom of shoemakers intelligently to mold their foot clothing so that the members which they clothe would not be distorted thereby, and to use the best skins, properly prepared, nothing more could be desired. But the truth is that very imperfect material is constantly employed, and the form into which that material is wrought has been, among all civilized nations, radically wrong, having very slight reference to the form of the foot, and still less to the various duties imposed upon it.—From an address by Joel McComber, Esq.

Origin of Surnames.

We have at different times given something on the origin of English surnames. These, it will be remembered, were not generally adopted until the close of the tenth or the beginning of the eleventh century. The following, from the New York Observer, contains some things not contained in what we have given:

The system in use with English-speaking people was of slow growth, and many of the common surnames owe their existence to the expedients which were resorted to while the system was developing. The occupation or residence once added became part of the name when the occasion of its adoption was forgotten. Many names established in this way explain themselves, while others cannot be understood without tracing them back to the old English or Latin. Of the first class, Mason, Baker, Farmer, Shepherd and Cooper; Chapman, a trader, from chepe, a market; Sutor, a not very common name, meaning in old English and Latin, shoemaker; and Spencer, from dispensator, or, dispenser; and of the second class, Smith, in Anglo-Saxon, meant to smite, and was applied to all those occupations in which success depended upon a strong arm. The frequent use of the name is thus explained. Gow has in Scotland the meaning of our word smith, and the Gows were so numerous that many changed their name to Smith. The termination ward indicates a keeper; Woodward was in early days a keeper of a forest—perhaps the king's—and Durward was a doorkeeper. The special business of the keeper is expressed in the beginning of each word. The Earls, Lords, Deacons, Squires and Chamberlains can trace their names back to some forgotten holder of an office or dignity.

A very general attempt was made by adding son, or its equivalent, to the father's name, to put an end to the confusion which a scarcity of names naturally caused. Johnson, Peterson, Sullivan, and other names of a similar termination, are examples of this. The same idea is expressed by adding ing. Browning means the son of Brown, whose name was probably suggested by his color, since color or height, or any personal peculiarity, was often mentioned when names failed. In Hebrew, Ben is prefixed; in Welsh, Ap; in Scotch, Mac; and Russian, Vitch is added. The Welsh also joined with the name of the son that of the father in the possessive case, John William's told briefly that William was John's father; and when in the course of time the idea of possession was lost, Williams became a family surname. John John's was changed into John Jones by careless pronunciation, and Jones is now the commonest of all Welsh names. Names of French origin are known by prefixes, de, du, des, de la, and by a number of suffixes, among which ville is the most common.

A family living on a hill were called from the location—Hill or Hills—and the name Underhill applied to those on the edge of the plain. Wood, Atwood, Lake, Rivers, Pond, and other terms of the same character, when first introduced, were no more a part of the name of those on whom they were fixed than the postoffice to which letters are sent is of the person to whom the letters are addressed.

Religion of the Abyssinians.

A writer in the New York Times, who is apparently well posted on the subject, has a long article descriptive of the Christianity of the Abyssinians. He remarks that it is a fine phrase to call this a "barrier between the Mohammedan government and a Christian mountaineers," and it excites sympathy to be told that, however ignorant and obscure this Christian community may be, "their differences from us are only a matter of education or language or dress." "I don't know much about the state of religion and morals in England," he continues, "but if I thought that the American Christian differed from the Abyssinian only in the above particulars I should desire to turn Moslem." The religion of the Abyssinians is an odd jumble of Judaism, fetichism, superstition, mixed with some of the theologic dogmas of Christianity. Although two-thirds of the Abyssinians are nominally Christians, they are divided into diverse tribes, with different dialects. There are two communities—the Voited, small in numbers, and the Kemanies, about 100,000 which profess no known religion. Throughout all the territory Moslems are dispersed, who are more devout and better instructed in their religion than the Christians in theirs. In the interior of the country of Dembea the Abyssinians are black, have a particular language, and are Moslems. The people in the east of the country of the Gallas hate the Christians and believe in Mohammed. There are also the Changuellas, southwest of Thegri, who live like animals in holes in the ground, and seem to have no religion. Some of the Abyssinians profess Judaism, and expect the Messiah, who will reign over the whole of Ethiopia; their priests are and must be eunuchs. The Abyssinian Christians of all sorts number about 2,000,000; the other third of the people, 1,000,000, is simply pagan. The state of morals is represented as being fully as bad as before the flood, and for which the world received the doom of drowning.

What the key is to the watch prayer is to our graces—it winds them up and sets them going.

Religious Intelligence.

—The suit for the possession of Logan's chapel, in Blount county, East Tenn., has been decided in favor of the Methodist Church South, and the Northern Church will not appeal.

—The time for the meeting of the General Conference of the Reformed Episcopal Church has been postponed from the tenth of May to the twelfth of July. The place for the session of the Conference remains unchanged—namely, Ottawa, Canada.

—The eighth annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Congregational Church was held at Boston, on January 4. The receipts of the year amounted to $75,000. The Woman's Board now has 12 branches and 800 auxiliaries. It supports 50 missionaries, and 50 Bible women and native teachers.

—The Congregationalist, in an article discussing the question of the banishment of Roger Williams, shows that Williams at the time was not a Baptist, but a Congregational minister, and that his banishment was not for Baptist principles, or because of his tolerant spirit, but because he promulgated sentiments dangerous to the peace of the State.

—The Sultan visits the mosque in Constantinople every Friday, and this custom makes a weekly pageant. Soldiers and gaily-dressed civilians line the streets through which he passes, and vehicles are kept out of the way. A discharge of cannon announces his departure from the palace, and as he walks along in the midst of his attendants the spectators cheer lustily.

—Miss Charlotte Maria Tucker, the well-known A. L. O. E. of Sunday school literature, whose departure for India as a zenana laborer has been noticed by the religious papers, is to have her future home at Umritzur, in the Punjaub. She is employed by the Indian Female Normal Society. Miss Tucker recently showed her interest in the women of India by offering a purse of $100 for the best poem in Bengali on "The Lord Christ." It was competed for by women only, and the prize was divided between two Bengali women, both wives of Christian husbands. Their poems, it is said, judging from the English translations of them, have some real merit.

IRELAND.—The Dublin Daily Express of December 23 contains the following letter: "The religious interest in this town Donegal is spreading far and wide. A large hall in the place is crowded nightly, persons sitting in the aisles, on the platform and table, and others standing outside. Many have come, during the last few nights, through darkness and storm, two or three miles from the country. The preacher is Rev. O. E. Leonard, the clergyman from Ameglea. A very large number of persons profess conversion. A Young Men's Praying Band already numbers one hundred members. The whole place is stirred. There has been nothing like it since 1859."

—The Sunday School Times says that Presbyterian missionary work among the Chinese on the Pacific coast makes progress. The congregation grows larger. The weekly prayer meeting, which began with two or three, has now from twenty-five to forty in attendance. The Presbyterian Monthly Record tells of a Chinese young woman's mission band, of which the missionary contributions are liberal. It also reports that a Chinese convert has been employed to superintend a Chinese Sunday school of one hundred and fifty, and to do missionary work among its attendants. Ten converts are already studying to labor among their people as teachers and evangelists. All these are house servants, and are cut off from the society of pagan Chinese because of their Christian profession.

—The great obstacle with which the missionaries among the Zulus have to contend is polygamy. The exchange of wives for cattle, as a source of revenue, ease and luxury, has irresistible fascination for the owner of a kraal. Mr. Tyler, in the Missionary Herald, says that it is not uncommon for Zulu men to set themselves in a circle, after listening to an affecting gospel sermon, and while the snuff-box is passing round, speak in this wise: "The missionary tells the truth. But how can we who are polygamists, become Christians? Let not those entangled as we are give heed to the missionary's words." He also mentions the case of a Zulu anxious to be a Christian and regardless of the sneers of his heathen neighbors, but who has two wives and children with each, and cannot persuade himself to give one of them up.

—The greatest hinderance in the way of missionary effort on the Island of Jamaica has been the want of education among the masses. It is, therefore, gratifying to notice the progress which has been made in this respect since the enlightened administration of Sir John Peter Grant. Ten years ago the government spent about $6,000 a year for schools, while it gave about $250,000 in stipends to the Episcopal clergy. The disestablishment of the Episcopal Church has relieved the revenue from this great burden, and a large sum is now annually free for purposes of education. The government gives full support to only two schools, which are normal institutions; but it bestows grants-in-aid upon a great number of schools partly supported by individuals, and by the churches, which have earnestly seconded the liberal policy of the administration. During 1874 these grants-in-aid amounted to $71,465, while the total sum of $169,530 was expended by government, churches and individuals for purposes of education. The schools, which are constantly rising in grade and efficiency, were 709 in number, and 50,635 children were on the rolls. This is a vast improvement, although more than one-half of the children are still without instruction. In the degree in which education pervades this ignorant community the religious progress of Jamaica will become more rapid and secure.

Our Young People.

THE ORIOLES.

Four little months agape forever;
Four little throats which are never full!
Four little nestlings who disobey
One big worm, by a mighty pull.

Upon a limb—the lazy fellows!—
Perches the father bird and gay,
Proud of his coat of black and yellow,
Always singing throughout the day.

Close at their side the watchful mother,
Quietly sober in dress and song,
Chooses her place and asks no other,
Flying and gleaning all day long.

Four little months in their grave soon gather;
Four little throats in time are filled;
Four little nestlings quite apart bear
Spreading their wings for the sun to gild.

Lazy no longer sits the father—
His is the care of the singing school:
He must teach them to fly, and gather
Spread-out worms by the nearest pool.

Swinging away on the shaking branches,
Under the light of the happy sun,
Prepping through the avenues—
Father Oriole's work is done.

Four little beaks their mouths embolden,
Four little throats are round and strong;
Four little nestlings, fledged and golden,
Graduate to the world of song.

The Patience Story.

Wilhelmina Albrecht lived in one of the little hamlets that nestle in the valleys of the Tyrol.

It was winter. Gray clouds hovered around the white heads of the mountains, hiding them quite out of sight. The snow came whirling down almost every day, and Wilhelmina was lonely.

Knitting long socks for five shining needles was her only employment; for her mother said, "Little girls should not get under foot," when Wilhelmina attempted to assist her in the simple house-work; and old blind Fritz, the dog, was her only play-fellow, for she had no brothers or sisters.

Her father, Karl Albrecht, was a wood-carver, and once in a while he would lay aside the wonderful hollow chisel, which he called his dearest Hohlmeissel, and which was almost the only tool he used in his dainty craft, to take his little Wilhelmina on his knee and sing her some quaint old song, or tell her a story; but usually he sat quite silent and busy at his table, and seemed interested in nothing that was not box, bowl or fir-wood.

One day, when it was very dreary out of doors and very still within, and Wilhelmina had knit till her fingers ached, she somehow got her yarn in a snarl, and in trying to disentangle it she pulled out her needles and unraveled nearly all her work, when she dashed the whole upon the floor and began to cry.

Good Karl Albrecht looked over his spectacles at his daughter and then at his work, and concluded to finish a rose he had begun before he talked, for he could never talk and work at the same time.

Wilhelmina began to cry louder, and rattled her wooden shoes together in a very distressing way.

"What is the matter, little one?" asked the father kindly. "Patience; we will soon rearrange the knitting. Why dost thou cry over so small a trouble? Life is long and sad, and tears never turned a mill; dry thine eyes, my Wilhelmina," and he untwisted the yarn with careful hands, and picked up the runaway stitches as quickly and easily as one pulls primroses in May.

"I am not crying over the knitting or the yarn," said Wilhelmina with a long sob.

"So?" replied the father, gently stroking the child's braids; "tell me about it."

"I'm tired of everything," she went on; "tired of the snow and the dark days. I long for the summer, when I can go again with Aunt Tessa and Uncle Frederic to the pasture on the mountain-side, and watch the black-faced kids, and see the Kitzkamp and the Back Kog Furri into fire as the sun rises. Oh, I'm so tired of the winter, and the narrow, silent house!"

"So, so, I understand," said the father, still more gently, patting the bridled hair. "But the winter might bring thee pleasure, my child, if thou couldst be patient. Wait, I will tell thee a story, and perhaps that will help thee when the days are long and the yarn snarls."

"Once upon a time there was a little girl named Ulrica, and she was quite like thee, my Wilhelmina.

"One morning she awoke and saw, what do you think—the white beds of her father and mother, and the window shaded by the curtain edged with knotted fringe? Oh, no; she saw a strange, high room, that she had never seen before, and all the furniture in it was her bed, a chair, and a tall embroidery frame covered with canvas marked for working. Near the frame lay a mass of dingy, dusty threads.

"Beside her bed stood an old woman, who bade her rise.

"'Child,' said the old woman, 'thy wants shall be supplied, but thou canst not leave this room till thou hast finished this piece of tapestry. Whether the time be long or short remains with thee; when thou hast finished this work I will immediately release thee,' and then she vanished.

"For a long time Ulrica wept and beat her hands, and cried aloud for help; but it was useless—no one heard her.

"At last she began studying the design marked upon the canvas stretched on the embroidery frame, but to her it was meaningless. Then she began working, and when she set one stitch six appeared, and when she drew out one thread from the mass six threads came out straight and smooth for working; when she was cross and impatient, however, six stitches disappeared whenever she touched the canvas, and it was quite impossible for her to pull out even one thread from the bunch.

"Observing this, Ulrica determined to be careful and patient in future, and so well did she succeed that at the end of a year and a day the tapestry was done. 'Twas early twilight when she set the last stitch, and as she looked she did not at first see the figure standing beside her. It was the old woman; but as Ulrica looked at her she changed into a beautiful young woman, her black dress became a gown of shining white, and when she spoke her voice sounded like the sweetest music.

"'Thou hast done well, Ulrica. Behold!' said the shining one. Then Ulrica saw some of the dingy threads had become fine spun gold, and others the sacred colors, blue and red, and some were green and violet; and the design, which had been to her so meaningless, was a lovely picture of the holy Christ blessing the little children.

"'Ah, my daughter,' said good Father Albrecht, 'no matter if our home is lowly, and our work apparently poor and mean, God sets us in our place, and appoints our task; and if we do our work well, and with a cheerful spirit, I'm sure he'll sometimes show us, in the mansion his beloved Son has prepared for us, the lovely picture of a useful life our patient toil has wrought.'

"'And what is the name of this story, father?' asked Wilhelmina.

"'I will call it "The Patience Story," my Wilhelmina, and I hope thou will always remember it,' said the father. And Wilhelmina did remember it so well that when she died, many years after, a very old woman, all the people who knew her said: 'Hers was a useful life; we bless her memory.'"—Ethereal Christian.

Doing Nothing.

Mr. Berryer, who was one of the greatest French statesmen of the present century, in his youth was very lazy. His masters had great trouble in making him submit to school discipline; the under masters quite despaired of him, and went one day to tell the head master that this boy would never do anything, and that they could not make anything of him. He sent for him into his study, and said to him:

"My boy, work is disagreeable to you, and you think that happiness consists in doing nothing. Well, come into my study; you can look at me while I am at work; that won't fatigue you, and you will do nothing. But let us well understand each other—nothing of any kind, remember."

The boy was delighted. The first hour passed away to the great pleasure of the scholar. He congratulated himself on neither having to open his dictionary nor learn his rudiments by heart. At the end of an hour and a half he had enjoyed the delights of fancy. He put out his arm to take a book. The master stopped him at once.

"You forget your agreement; you are to do nothing. To read is to do something. Enjoy the permission I have given you; do nothing."

The boy began to discover that the pleasure of doing nothing soon became monotonous. He hazarded some questions; the master did not reply. Then, when he had come to the end of the page he was writing, he said:

"My boy, each has his taste; you have that of doing nothing, I have that of working; I do not trouble you, so do not disturb me."

Young Berryer could scarcely help saying that it would be difficult for him to find happiness much longer in such patience. At the end of three hours the master got up, and went to take a walk under the shade of the trees in the park. As soon as he came into the garden he wished to leave his master and go with the school-fellows, who were having a merry game. The master held him by the arm:

"You are not thinking of our agreement. Playing is doing something. Remain by my side; we will walk up and down the avenue, or you can sit down, if you like it better."

But the boy had enough of doing nothing. He was very willing to promise to learn his lessons in order to escape to his playmates.

WHAT IT MEANS.—A little girl used to go to church. She was only between four and five years of age—quite a little girl—but she listened to her minister. She knew that he would tell her good things, and she wanted to learn. Once, when she reached home from church, she said to her mother:

"Mother, I can tell you a little of Mr. H.'s sermon. He said: 'Touch not the unclean thing.'"

The mother wished to know whether her dear little daughter understood the meaning of these words. So she replied:

"Then, my dear child, if Mr. H. said so, I hope you will take care in the future not to touch things that are dirty."

The little girl smiled, and answered: "O mother, I know very well what he meant."

"What did he mean?" said the mother.

"He meant sins," said the child; "and it is all the same as if Mr. H. had said: 'You must not tell lies, nor do what your mother forbids you to do, nor play on Sunday, nor be cross, nor do things that are bad or wrong.' The Bible means that a sinful thing is an unclean thing."

TEN FAIRIES.—Shall we call them fairies? I think we will, for you will all know just what they are when you have read the story. A French book says there was once a lazy girl who would do nothing, but yet always wanted to be comfortable. So she asked her fairy godmother to give her somebody to do everything for her. Immediately ten little people, called dwarfs, came to her. They dressed her, and combed her hair and fed her; but still this lazy girl was not happy, for she was afraid they might some time leave her. "To prevent that," said the godmother, "I will place them permanently in your ten little fingers." And there they are.

So much for the story. Now with ten quick, strong, nimble fingers, always ready to help, each other to do things; shall we ever be so lazy as to let them be idle, while we ask somebody else to do what we might do and ought to do ourselves?

A very small man observed that he had two negative qualities—he never day long in bed, and he never wanted a great coat.

A Word Behind Thee.

The prophet's reference may be to the voice of conscience. The teachers were not to be removed into a corner any more, but "thine eyes shall see thy teachers." Beyond this the inward monitor was no longer to be silenced, and its testimony was not to be doubtful. "And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way; walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand and when ye turn to the left." God is evermore speaking to men's consciences, and never more clearly and powerfully than in these times. But the controlling influence of this divine voice is fearfully neglected and resisted.

Looking at the world and its ways we may sometimes be tempted to doubt the existence of conscience, and to question whether the Spirit everywhere reproves men of sin. The manifestations of depravity are so flagrant, the world is so filled with crime, selfishness and evil passions, and the labor of bringing men to Christ is so difficult, that we might think that God has measurably left human souls to their own depraved and perverted wills. There is doubtless a lamentable deadness of conscience in society, in business, and even within the circles of religious profession; but still there never was so much light, nor light so generally diffused, and the Holy Spirit was never busier in moving upon the hearts of the people.

There is the consciousness of this inward voice in nearly every one. If it was felt and acknowledged by the heathen, it must be confessed as more sharply and actively present in those who have been reared amidst the institutions of Christianity. Our young people can scarcely divest themselves of the sense of religious obligation, and that God is directly dealing with them as the children of manifold mercies and privileges. In all their wanderings from the Father's house, and in all their straying from the paths of virtue, there is a word behind them sounding in their ears. No backslider has departed from the path of duty without realizing in the first instance, and in every step of his subsequent downfall, that this warning voice was calling. Its tones of expostulation, reproach and condemnation have been hushed partially, they have been disregarded, and their distinctness has gradually died away, but they have been heard. No sinner of any sort lives and riots in forbidden indulgence who has not been followed long and far, and who does not still in some degree feel that divine mercy pursues and strives to overtake and arrest him in his career.

It is related of the King of Macedon that he assigned to one of his attendants the duty of often rehearsing this admonition in the royal presence: "Remember, Philip, that thou art mortal." There is a word that follows us all, from the highest to the lowest, and the message speaks to every heart: "This is the way; walk ye in it." It is not the perfunctory utterance of a paid courtier, but the Holy Spirit whispering in the conscience, and pointing to the shining path of duty and righteousness. There is in men something that responds to the word of God, and truth has an ally and friend in the human breast. When we turn to the right hand, and when we turn to the left, it is present to direct our course, to warn against the wrong, and to lead us to choose the right. We may assume this in our endeavors to influence men religiously. The more we appeal to conscience the better. The teaching which awakens it and brings it into healthy activity is the best. The intellect and the natural affections may be stirred, while the conscience remains comparatively torpid. To affect the last is the main thing in a genuine revival of religion. There is much waste of time in the effort to convince the understanding, and people are often moved to tears without feeling the sinfulness of sin. An ounce of real conscience in an awakened soul is worth more than a river of tears, or a volume of mental assent to the general doctrines of Christianity.

It is the conscience element in religion first needs at this time to be made prominent. Without a deep sense of guilt and condemnation repentance is superficial, and men, without any radical change, glide into a state of false security. The mind and the emotional nature have been aroused, but the moral sense has not been correspondingly quickened. Daubing with untempered mortar is an ancient device, and also modern. The temper in genuine gospel mortar is this tender and acute sense of right and wrong, and the restored dominion and enthronement of conscience in the soul. The publican who cried, "God, be merciful to me, a sinner," had an awakened conscience. He was arraigned at this bar, and pleaded guilty.

It is stated as a mark of the true believer that he regards this voice of God: "Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way; walk ye in it." Not all, however, who name the name of Christ are obedient to the admonition. What strange things some professors of religion do, and even glory in their shame. They can patronize the theater, encourage promiscuous dancing, be careless about paying their debts, and give themselves up to worldliness, and still suppose themselves to be Christians. They can be indifferent to the great enterprises of the church, negligent about their personal religious devotions, almost strangers to earnest prayer and the communion of saints, and yet imagine that they are something better than those who make no claims to piety. Surely they must be hiding from the voice of the Lord God, or they have stopped their ears, that it may not disturb them.

There is a word behind every Christian, but unfortunately not every one listens to it. There are other voices to which they yield—that of the tempter, the lusts of the flesh, the pride of life and covetousness—and the sound of God's voice is drowned. The path of duty is not hard to find if we have the desire to know and follow it. It is to be feared that with thousands the light that is in them has become darkness. They have so long and so persistently turned to their own way, and trifled with their serious convictions, that the word behind them seems but the feeble echo of a long-past experience.

Mexico. Homeward.

CITY OF MEXICO, March 2, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: On last evening (Wednesday) we had sixty-five persons present, all Mexicans, in our "Templo Evangelio!"—a very good week-night congregation for some other places besides Mexico. The preaching, singing and praying was all in Spanish. I wish you could have dropped in and sat down on one of the "amen" chairs, and enjoyed the flood of light which the chandelier pours over the audience. Your heart would have been moved, I know, to pray earnestly for the pouring out of that true light upon these minds that now seek for the truth as it is in Christ. Forty days, without ceasing, was a long time for the apostles to wait and pray that the Spirit might come upon them. The Holy Spirit himself must have aided their steadiness of purpose, their importunate cry, their unutterable groanings, holding an anguish of desire that no words could syllable. It was like the notes of that unearthly cornet that preceded the "ten words" which God himself spoke on Sinai. How many days have we prayed continuously for the fulfillment of his promise: "I will send him unto you"—"Without me ye can do nothing?" Doubtless those who have labored here, and have themselves tasted the good word of God and the powers of the world to come, have cried often for a revival of God's work among this people. For three years in some places, for five in others, and ten in others, the preparatory distribution and reading of the Scriptures, the preaching of the doctrine of justification by faith, and the urging the necessity of a new heart, have been going on; is it not full time to expect fruit? Why may not these simple-hearted, dying multitudes at once receive all the precious discoveries, I may call them, in experimental religion which have marked the history of the Protestant churches during now a hundred years, both in England and the United States. Surely wisdom and truth and power may be transported, as well as science and art, and the peculiar wealth of distinct latitudes. Truth was as fully intended for the "market places" of earth as any other precious commodity; where men most congregate Wisdom exposes her wares, unequaled by the "gold of Ophir, the precious onyx or the sapphire." It is this new exchange of values that distinguishes this nineteenth century—the missionary argosy freighted with blessings; its prows turned toward every land and cutting every sea. The earthly ends and sharp instincts of trade are now softened by the presence of higher and nobler enterprises. We have here quite a number of Americans, full of the quick wit of our most advanced marts; some with schemes of railroads, narrow or wide gauge, some with telegraph wire, some with the latest pattern of fire-arms, some life insurance agents with "$35,000,000 available capital"—which is a good deal—and some are representing sewing machines to the number of twenty-seven distinct patents; but among all these are also, in full proportion the representatives of churches at home, who seek only to spend money, and not to make it; who are establishing schools and evangelical congregations, building churches, and distributing Bibles, tracts and hymns, planting printing presses, and setting on foot all the grand agencies of a charity that first came from Heaven, and is still fed by the love of a Savior who bought the people with his own blood, having suffered for them without the gate. The ocean steam lines that traverse the gulf, and the railway that climbs the clouds and peaks of the Cordilleras, furnish to the messenger of Christ the wings of an angel, so that he may swiftly reach dying men, and pour into their bruised spirits the news of life. It is a reflection of mingled pain and pleasure that into this "divine employ" we have entered.

After writing the above I went up on the housetop of the Iturbide to look at Popocatepetl and Iztaccihuatl. The sky was bright and soft. The mountains were undimmed in outline, their peaks hoar with glistening snow, and they stood as silent and eternal in the glory of solitary height as when I last saw them from this paved roof. A good place for meditation, by the by, is this upper exposure; private enough for prayer if the house is not too low; having also the inspiration of sunshine and warmth—two very pleasant things in this altitude. These bricked tops are the back yards of Mexico. Clothes are dried and aired, utensils scrubbed, flower-pots arranged, and temporary rooms for servants erected at this highest point of the establishment. The division walls are strong and high enough to insure privacy and safety.

It is not all poetry that occupies the minds of American travelers, however, just now in Mexico. The air is full of rumor. Pronunciados are springing up in every direction, and the cutting the railroad between this place and Vera Cruz is daily expected. I have been halting between a half dozen opinions, each gathered from equally experienced resident English-speaking citizens. I shall hold on until through with my work, and then certainly take the first train to Vera Cruz. The recent advantages gained by Gen. Hernandez in Oaxaca give color to the fears of many and the hopes of some that the government will be changed. I do not think so. Lerdo is strong in common sense, experience, cultivation, firmness, moderation, and in knowledge of the Mexican character. He has law on his side, and the resources of the States. The army is commanded by generals who are fully in unison with him. He overcame, in 1872, a much more serious disturbance and combination of disquieting, disorganizing forces. He may have some trouble, but will in the end maintain his place as President. Being a civilian, it is to be hoped that he may not be displaced by a military chieftain, for the sake of the future of Mexico.

This is not a conflict between Ecclesiastics and Liberals, but between Liberals and Liberals. It is one way of having a "peaceable election"—not exactly our way, for it is in advance of election day, which is in December next.

MARCH 6.

The time having come, I start today for the "tierra templada"—Orizaba or Cordova.

CORDOVA, March 11.

Arrived here yesterday. To-day saw several beautiful tropical fruit trees—the mango, the cherimoya, the aguacatti and the chichona. The coffee plant of this place is the great feature of the profitable hacienda, and is as pleasant in flavor as the Mocha. The shipments of it are increasing with every season and increased facilities of communication with New Orleans and New York. Climate here is all that could be desired; altitude some twenty-five hundred feet above the sea.

VERA CRUZ, March 14.

Here waiting for steamer. Pronunciados have cut the railroad. Parties who started for Jalapa have returned. Many Americans are here waiting for passage to New Orleans or New York.

NEW ORLEANS, March 24.

Arrived here yesterday on the City of Mexico, by the mercy of God. We started on the seventeenth from Vera Cruz. The vessel was full of passengers. On the eighteenth we reached Tuxpan and laid out in the roadstead for six hours. At Tampico, on the nineteenth, we steamed backward and forward half a day, the swell too high to admit communication with the shore; sun shining and wind stiff from the southwest. At twelve o'clock on Sunday night, when three hundred and fifty miles from the Southwest Pass, the wind died out and the sails were taken in. In an hour we were struck by a full-fledged norther. My stateroom was on deck, and gave all opportunity one might care to have for measuring the force of an equinoctial gale. In an instant it had made every shroud and spar a storm-pipe. The sough increased steadily in din and roar as the rush of wheels hurrying to battle. No one but a seaman could have stood on deck. The sea was whipped up to its full fury under the pressure of the blasts which swept it. Whole acres yawned far down, and then in a moment rose by successive overlapping stratas of dark, gneiss-like water into hills topped with crests of raging foam. The steamer was a staunch craft, and rode the storm wondrously. She would tremble, shudder, poise herself on the top of a sea, and dart down as if making a last plunge, but presently emerge with a rush and a recoil that absolutely wrenched my back.

Meanwhile the stars were shining, and neither mist nor cloud at night, nor during all Monday, screened any of the storm's horrors. The clear day rather added to the ghastliness of the deep's face, as sunshine on a corpse. The passengers kept their staterooms and berths until Monday at six P. M., when the wind had abated; indeed there was no moving about when wave-blows solid as a ton of iron were striking the vessel every instant.

I am not surprised that vessels have left port and never been heard from. The wonder is that so many survive a gale. Had the engine or rudder failed but an instant we could not have lived in the trough of that terrible sea. Each one would have found his coffin and winding sheet in his stateroom and bed in less time than it has taken to write these sentences. When lying at Vera Cruz two enormous sharks came up at the vessel's stern. It then seemed to me as if the two dread alternatives of sea-steaming men were fire and sharks; but the experience of this storm has added two other elements of destruction—wind and water—which "they that go down to the sea in ships" may sooner or later expect to encounter.

I am most truly yours in Christ,

J. C. KEENER.

The Poverty of the Pope.

Our readers will remember, says the Christian Intelligencer, the recent letter of Cardinal Antonelli, lamenting that owing to the "financial straits" of the Pope, and the cruel "deprivation of his States of which he had been the victim," he could not carry out his desire of sending a large contribution of articles to the Centennial Exhibition in this country, but must content himself by showing his sympathy for and admiration of the United States with sending a few specimens of mosaic tapestry. The venerable and excellent William Howitt, who is now in Rome, has written a remarkable letter showing the fallacy and hypocrisy of the plea of the Pope; and contrasts with the Pope's allegation of penury the real luxury which he enjoys and the wealth which he revels in. Mr. Howitt, addressing himself to the statements of the Pope's American letter, says:

"All this is in true beggars' whine, which the church has made universal as far as its rule has extended. Deprivation of his States has been the finest thing in the world for the Pope, and the means of working on the feelings of the whole Catholic universe, and of pouring into his coffers treasures such as his predecessors in their most halcyon times never possessed. The fiction of his miserable imprisonment, with his lying on rotten straw, the open sale of little bundles of these fabled straws in most Catholic countries, the photograph of him peeping through his prison bars, with a soldier, with a musket and bayonet fixed, on each side of him—all these outrageous lies have drawn an actual river of gold from the bosoms of the silly popish peleans that far outrivals the ancient Pactolus. By these means no less than twenty millions of francs have been poured into the papal chest during the year of jubilee just passed, and all this is described as the voluntary tribute of the faithful! And all this time this so-called miserable prisoner has been living in a palace of eleven thousand rooms, crammed with such wealth as was never before collected in one place, not even in the Bank of England. Treasures of gold, of silver, of all precious gems, of the most beautiful and noble works of art, statues, pictures by the finest masters, bronzes, coins, medals, crosses sparkling with the most valuable diamonds, rubies, emeralds, etc.; vessels and ornaments in silver and gold of the most exquisite workmanship, by such masters as Benvenuto Cellini, by the richest arrases and tapestries, all these arranged in galleries miles in length, and this wretched prisoner attended by hundreds of guards in an old costume very like our Windsor beefeaters, and by crowds of cardinals, monsignenrs, archbishops, bishops, priests, and lacqueys without end. As for money, besides the twenty million francs paid in for Peter's pence and jubilee indulgences in 1875, the imbecile ex-Emperor of Austria has left him $3,000,000, and rich arras and gold vessels to adorn his chapel. The Duke of Modena, the father-in-law of the ex-King of Naples and Count Chambord, has made him his heir, and it is said he will derive £10,000 from that source annually. And yet the Pope has the unparalleled impudence to tell the Americans that he cannot send much to their exhibition because of his poverty!"

OPENING OF A METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN NAGASAKI, JAPAN.—After about two years of preparation and irregular labor, such as teaching the Bible in English, and preaching in Japanese to about a dozen persons in one of the rooms of our dwelling, it was deemed highly important that a place for more direct and public labor be opened as soon as possible. Accordingly, having secured the right to the most favorable location, in the Foreign Concession—the only place in which we are yet allowed to preach publicly—an urgent appeal was made to the mission at its annual meeting, in July, 1875, and a vote passed authorizing the erection of a building as soon as practicable. A few weeks of careful estimation and drafting resulted in concluding a contract for an edifice capable of seating about 350 persons, 30x60 feet, with a spire extending to the height of about 75 feet—the cost, including a substantial fence, to be $1,800. The building should have been ready for dedication on Christmas, but, owing to a little unfavorable weather, the time of opening was prolonged until Sunday, January 30. The day was very fine, being the first Sunday without rain for several weeks. In order not to conflict with the regular services of the other missions, the time of meeting was fixed at half-past two. The services were opened with singing, followed with prayer by the missionary in charge, and after singing again, Rev. H. Stout, of the Dutch Reformed mission, preached an interesting sermon from Luke ii, 10: "And the angel said unto them, Fear not; for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people." Another hymn was then sung, followed by encouraging remarks from Mr. Segawa, Bro. Stout's native helper. The services were then concluded with the long-meter doxology, and the benediction by Rev. Mr. Maundrell, of the English Church mission.—New York Christian Advocate.

Our esteemed Bro. Clark, of the Methodist Recorder, was in New Orleans lately, though we missed seeing him. We trust his visit to the South will be the means of restoring his health. We give this paragraph from the last number of the Recorder, and indorse the major part of it:

Not long since we attended a meeting, in a city more than a thousand miles from Pittsburg—a union evangelistic service—in which one of the speakers was introduced by his fellow-evangelist as "Major——." Now that was handsome! A gospel major! But wouldn't a colonel or a brigadier have been still better? It was a commendable disregard of the quaint old New Testament nomenclature of "brother." Even to ring the changes on reverend, doctor and bishop is nowhere at all for effect alongside of drum majors and re-creating colonels at a revival meeting! It would have been a good title for Paul, in warring his warfare at Ephesus and round about, to have introduced him to a strange congregation as Major Paul! Even the lay evangelists must lay claim to a title! Call 'em majors!

DEATH OF THE REV. A. M. BOX.—We are greatly pained, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, to record the death of the Rev. A. M. Box. We sincerely sympathize with his brethren in the ministry, and especially with his distressed family. The Rev. J. H. Johnson writes us, Marshall, Texas, March 9: "It is with a sad heart that I announce to you the death of your old friend, the Rev. A. M. Box, of the East Texas Conference. He died in peace at his home on the Harrison circuit, on Tuesday, the seventh instant. He leaves a large and helpless family, who will need the prayers and sympathies of the church."

From Richmond, Va., says the Episcopal Methodist, we learn that there is a glorious revival in progress at Centenary church, Rev. J. E. Edwards, D. D., pastor. He is receiving valuable assistance from Bishop Doggett and others. The repairs on Clay Street Methodist church have been completed, and it will be reopened on Sunday next, the twenty-sixth of March. Rev. Dr. Duncan will preach on the occasion.

The Right Rev. Benjamin Selferth, senior Bishop of the Unitas Fratrum, or Moravian Church, died at Ockbrook, January 31, aged eighty years.

God reaches us good things by our own hands.

Periodicals.

—The Ladies' Repository for April, also Golden Hours, Nelson & Phillips, New York, and Hitchcock & Walden, Cincinnati, publishers, have been received. Golden Hours contains several very handsome illustrations. Of its many entertaining articles we note: A Regular Good Time, The Crimson Fountain, The Firm of Pixie & Prog, Domestic Life in India, Little Pickle. The Repository has: The Old World and New in Social Contrast, Mosaic and Antique Art, Faith and Feeling, Noted Men of Revolutionary Times, Amusements, and other articles. This number contains an engraved likeness of Rev. Thomas T. Tasker, and a very well-executed picture of Lake Esther, Sierra Nevada mountains.

—The Clergyman in His Home is the title of an address to the candidates for holy orders, delivered in Fulham Palace chapel, by Rev. E. H. Bickersteth, M. A. This excellent address is published in pamphlet form by E. P. Dutton & Co., New York.

—Littell's Living Age, March 18, has a fine table of contents. We note especially: Modern English Prose, Dutch Guiana, The Pope and Magna Charta, Mazarin, The Drainage of the Zuyder-Zee.

—The Atlantic Monthly has: A Carnival of Rome, Early American Novelists, Rural Architecture, The Siege of Boston, Llevnur's Pneumatic System of Sewerage, and other articles.

—Ninety and Nine, or the Lost Sheep. Published by C. M. Cady, New York. The music is as sung by Mr. Sankey and William W. Bentley.

"REV."—A decision has at length been had in the highest tribunal having cognizance of the matter upon the very important matter as to whether a dissenting minister in England has a right to the prefix "Rev." The dispute arose out of a case where a Methodist minister attached this prefix to his name on the tombstone of his daughter. The rector of the parish decided that the stone could not go into the graveyard. On appeal to the Bishop of Lincoln he was sustained. But now the English Privy Council has reversed the successive decisions of the Bishop, the chancellor of the diocese and the Arches Court. Common sense characterizes the decision which declares that "reverend" prefixed to a clergyman's name, and always has been a mark of courtesy simply, and never an official title, and that under the law of England every man may take it who can get it. The decision has thrown some of the Establishment clergy into what our grandmothers used to call "conniption fits," and they all want to be called rector this and vicar that, "never no more to be called "reverend." The Bishop of Lincoln had not yet been heard from.—Standard.

GRAND CENTENNIAL BAZAR.—The entertainment by the ladies of Odd Fellows' Hall, on the fourth, fifth and sixth of April, seems to find favor with the people. The committees of the several churches receive cordial co-operation and aid. The object in view—the Seashore camp ground—is worthy of their labors, and commands the regard and interest of all.

In addition to the creature comforts being provided, there will be a grand musical concert given under the charge of a distinguished professor of music, and embracing some of the first musical talent of our city the particulars of time, etc., of which will be given next week.

We are pained to hear of the death of Miss Anna Montgomery, youngest daughter of Rev. H. H. Montgomery, of the Mississippi Conference. She died at Jackson, Tenn., March 15, 1876, after a brief illness, and before her parents could reach her. The bereaved family will have the prayers and sympathy of their many friends in this great sorrow. May the divine Comforter sustain the grief-stricken household.

Bishop Keener, after a stormy and perilous passage from Vera Cruz, reached New Orleans on Thursday morning, March 23. The Bishop looks none the worse for his Mexican tour and tossings on the deep. We are under great obligations to him for the excellent letters which he has furnished the ADVOCATE.

Rev. W. H. Hopper, writing from Pearlington, Miss., March 22 says: "Doubtless you will rejoice to know that God is blessing his people on this circuit. And the ADVOCATE is much appreciated."

We are obliged to Rev. J. C. Harrell, secretary, for a copy of the minutes of the recent session of the Louisiana Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The Marianna District Conference, Alabama Conference, will commence on Thursday, April 20. We believe it is to be held at Marianna, Fla.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Farmers' Gardens.

1. The best way to lay out a garden is to have it long and narrow, with space enough at the ends to turn a team handily. Length is important if you would have the cultivation all done by horse-power. It can be done far better by horse than by hand-power. The length should lay from north to south, so as to enable the sun to reach both sides of the rows.

2. Plow the garden land twelve inches deep, if possible; then harrow as fine as flour, and plant at once, laying out the rows three feet apart. The garden spot must be kept entirely clean of trees, bushes, flowers, or anything else that would not allow the plow and cultivator full sway. There is not a brilliant prospect of a fine garden without manure. But a good substitute may be improvised in this way: Prepare a barrel on a platform, as you would for an ash-hopper. Fill it full of manure. Have a large tub under the edge of the platform to catch the liquid manure. Pour into the barrel all the slops from the chambers and commodes of the premises, as well as the soap suds from the wash-tubs, and the refuse water of the kitchen. In this way you have forty quarts of liquid manure every day from one barrel of manure. If the liquid manure is too strong, add water to it, and pour it on your garden spot and vegetables in the afternoon, from half an hour to an hour before sundown until dark. In this way you will be able to water your garden fully once a week, or one-sixth of it each day. When the ground is wet do not apply the liquid manure.

3. After your ground has been well prepared to be planted in, stretch a line from one end to the other of the garden, and plant in rows three feet apart whatever you wish to raise. In ten days after make another planting, and keep on every ten days until you prepare for winter, thus keeping up a succession of vegetables. Let the ground be gone over with the cultivator before each planting, and the weeds destroyed, and everything put in the best condition for the seeds. By this plan garden beds are done away with, and everything is cultivated by horse-power. An hour or two will give the garden a thorough cultivation, and the ground can be worked deep, and thoroughly pulverized, and the vegetables kept in the highest state of growth. Some hand-hoeing may be needed, but fully nine-tenths of that will be saved by this plan.—Southern Farmer.

HOGS IN WARM WEATHER.—The Journal of Agriculture says that the practice of turning hogs into the woods to make their own living till cold weather, and then shutting them up and feeding on corn alone, is a very expensive way of making pork. To be sure, the summer feed costs nothing; but then, as a general fact, the hogs make very little growth—not half so much as they would if they were supplied with proper food. Their growth should be made as rapid as possible during warm weather. It should be remembered by every pork-raiser that a given amount of feed will produce larger results in summer than in winter. In winter a large amount of vitality is expended in resisting the cold, and therefore an increase of feed is required just to sustain the system in a healthy condition. To promote the growth of hogs in warm weather, slops made of shorts and bran should be used; also of oats and rye. Neither corn nor any other carbonaceous food should be fed to hogs in large quantities in hot weather; yet if they are permitted to feed on clover, corn in moderate quantities will be as good as any other feed. But the principal point we would make is that hogs should be fed all through summer, so that when the cool weather of August comes they will be found in a thriving condition. If other feed is scarce, let the farmer commence cutting up green corn for his hogs by the first of August, or even earlier. It will be economy to do so, rather than to let them go without till it is ripe and then feed it to them. By the middle of September the fattening process should be commenced in good earnest, and the work completed before the severe weather sets in. As a rule, we believe that where hogs are kept in open lots without shelter, as most are, two bushels of corn will lay on more fat in October than three bushels in January. Feed through the summer and fatten early.

SOW EARLY.—It seems to be generally conceded that early-sown wheat invariably looks better when winter approaches than that sown late. What everybody says must be so, and from the time the wheat plants are established in the fall until the succeeding harvest the words are constantly heard: "Early-sown grain looks well." Therefore let the wheat be put in well and early. If one variety will not do so well when sown early, try the hardier Mediterranean; for it may be set down as a fact that the fine varieties of wheat are always more tender than the coarser kinds, and the white varieties are more tender as a rule than the red ones.

If much of an acreage is sown, sow at least three varieties that will ripen in succession, and let one of them be of the hardiest kind obtainable.

Another advantage of early sowing is that less seed will be required. The Manhattan Nationalist is pretty near right when it says:

"From one-third to one-half the small grain usually sown is wasted, or worse. Often it happens that the grain is so carelessly put in that much of it does not come up, and when it does all come up it is too thick to do well. We are confident that three pecks of good fall wheat, well drilled in, on well-prepared land, that is wet enough, will bring more bushels to the acre, and of a better quality of grain, than if a larger quantity is sown. In determining how much to sow, attention must be paid to the size of the berry, its conditions, how it is put in, the time of sowing, the condition of the soil, etc. But remember that the thicker it is the less it tillers, and vice versa; also that if put in early, so the plants become well rooted, they will tiller enough in the spring to convert what would appear to be a light stand into a heavy one. Then sow lightly, but do your work early and well."—Rural World.

EARLY PEACHES IN THE SOUTH.—I have seen fruit of the Amsden only as sent by Mr. Teas, of Missouri. It resembles the Early Beatrice very much in appearance, and the same texture, which is proof evident that both have similar origin. All the seedlings of Hale's Early resemble their parent in having flesh partly adhering to the stone by filaments which run through the flesh. Hiver's Early is here by far the best of Mr. Hiver's three early peaches, but its skin is so thin that the fruit bruises easily, and I fear will not carry well on that account. Otherwise it is of the best quality—not much color, however. Of the Alexander, I know of one place in Georgia where it fruited, ripening two or three days before the Beatrice. It shows high color, but there being but one specimen, it is hazardous to give an opinion as to quality, compared with the Beatrice. Our Thurber peach is also just ripe, also the improved varieties of Chinese Cling, which I find quite free from decay, to which the old Chinese Cling is much subject. Richmond peach just ripe, and much richer than Crawford. It can be grown in place of Late Crawford, which is too apt to decay here. But I have so many seedlings of the Crawford now ripe, and similar to the Richmond, that it is only a matter of two years or thereabouts for any one to raise a peach equal to the Richmond from Crawford fruit.—Extract from a letter of P. J. Berckmans, dated July 27, to F. K. Phœnix.

RIPENING FRUIT AT WILL.—A correspondent of the London Gazette mentions a vine on a portion of whose branches grapes were ripened by conducting them into a heated room, while other parts of the vine bore unripe fruit. This shows that the ripening of fruit is in part dependent on the temperature of the top of the tree or vine, as well as of the root. Many have doubtless noticed the same fact never have in grape vines whose hanging cluster over kitchen doors or windows will ripen several days earlier than on other portions of the same vines. We have observed this often, and it suggests a possible means of ripening early peaches, apples, grapes or other fruit by inclosing the specimens, while hanging on the tree or vine, in a glass case, admitting light and heat freely, and excluding cold air, especially in the night. Such an experiment is well worth trying. A common glass bee-box to admit the fruit will answer for the purpose.—Southern Farmer.

Little Willie having hunted in all the corners for his shoes, at last gave them up, and, climbing on a chair, betook himself to a big book on the table. His mother asked him what he was doing with the book. "It ith the dictionary," he replied; "papa lookth in the dictionary to find things, and I'm looking in it to thee if I can find my thoes."

There was a judiciously studied descent from the sublime to the ridiculous where a clergyman, preaching on the "ministry of angels," suddenly observed: "I hear a whisper!" The change of tone started one of the deacons, who sat below, from a drowsy mood, and, springing to his feet, he cried: "It's the boys in the gallery."

Strange, Moore and Wright, three notorious gamsters, met and dined together one day. After dinner Moore said: "There's only one fool among us three, and that's strange." "Oh," cried Wright, "there's one more." "Ah," said Strange, "that's right."

MR. ED. L. HALL—Sir: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polishing Powder left with me by you, with the following results:

I find it to contain no acids or alkalies, on which account it will be entirely free from corrosive action when applied to polished or painted surfaces. It equals in power its sales-agents in which many accident or injury could happen while using it. The particles of the Powder are all angular, and not rounded, as in most kinds of sands and in many other polishing agents. The particles are extremely small and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it especial value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP,

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial to all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially to those cases of Cholerine which, by want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure in truly extraordinary medicine has, over many pounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children. It requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottles contain more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever needed by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from one to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day in suitable quantities, at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

A. CARROTTE,
Agent for New Orleans, 39 Chartres st.
And by all druggists.

Scientific.

—Dr. Peterman, the great German geographer, expresses himself satisfied that the diamond fields at Zimbaye, Africa, are identical with the Ophir of the Bible, from which King Solomon is said to have conveyed gold and ivory and precious stones for the construction of the temple. The place now possesses ruins and extensive piles of buildings of unquestionably remote antiquity.

—A boiling lake has been discovered in the Island of Dominica, which excites the interest of geologists and scientists. It is about two thousand two hundred feet above the level of the ocean, and about two miles in circumference. When discovered by the explorer, clouds of sulphurous vapor covered the surface, and a mound of water ten feet higher than the general surface was seen, caused by boiling. The margin is formed by beds of sulphur, and the waters issue over a waterfall of considerable height.

—A new rain guage is described in Nature, which is the invention of M. Herve-Mangon, and is in action at his observatory at St. Marleo-Mont. The rain is caught in a funnel and conveyed to a cylinder, in which there is a float moving between guides. This float is connected with a pencil, which marks its height by a continuous line. The time is marked by an electro magnet, which is set in action at regular intervals by a clock. The record is taken on a paper stretched between two cylinders, also moved by the clock, and the scale is so chosen as to enable the same paper to take a rainfall of one meter for a year, which suffices for most of France.

—A French commission appointed to devise some means for disinfecting the river Seine at Paris, have recently reported. It appears that from where the Ligne sewer enters at Clichy the river gets into a very offensive state, which is considerably aggravated below that, as far as the Isle St. Denis, by impure water from new factories and from other sewers. It is only below Meulan and Mantes that the Seine water becomes fit for use again. The commission think the whole of the sewage of Paris (a hundred million cubic meters a year) might be employed on the surface of about two thousand hectares that has been devoted to this use on the peninsula of Gennevilliers; but they recommend to conveyance half of it to the domanial forest of St. Germain. They consider purification by chemical processes in particular by sulphate of aluminium too expensive and difficult to be applied to the whole of the sewage, and they urge strict enforcement of the law regarding pollution of rivers, the removal of infected deposits by dredging, etc.

—A monthless fish has been ascertained to occur in the Onachita river, by Dr. G. W. Lawrence. It is the mullet sucker—Catostomus latipinnis, Agassiz's. The specimen described is seven inches long, apparently in full condition, the curious malformation being evidently congenital—not a result of accident or injury. The principal bones of both jaws are present, and the skin is tightly extended over the place of the missing maxillaries. In the center of this expansion of skin there is a small oval aperture, one-fourth of an inch long by one eighth wide, sufficient to admit a current of water, for the purpose of respiration; but it is difficult to understand how such a fish could feed. Dr. Lawrence observes quite a few of these deformed fishes every year in the Onachita specimens with the oval orifice rather than as above described, or absent altogether. In this latter case the fish could only supply itself with food and with water for respiration through the branchial cleft by alternating outward and inward movements of the operculà.

A CARD.

To Our Friends and the Public.

[illegible] that we are charged with having obtained by some false pretenses [illegible] and having received from our customers throughout the South and West a number of letters of kindly interest and sympathy, we desire in this manner to correct any impressions that may be entertained by our customers, especially those outside [illegible] who are not advised of the exact nature of the charges made.

These charges embrace only technical irregularities in keeping of our books, and no such charge can be brought against any business house whose goods are subject to revenue tax.

We have not been charged with defrauding or attempting to defraud the government of its just dues.

At a proper time we will be able to vindicate ourselves and establish our entire innocence of all charges against us.

Ouachita river	1,146
Railroads	1,121
Mobile	175
Texas	1,116
Lake	12
Total	15,570

Wednesday.—Sales reported, 6,000 bales. Receipts, 6,927 bales. Quotations unchanged. Market quiet and firm. New York, firm for spots; futures quiet and steady. Liverpool, market strong and unchanged.

Thursday.—Sales, 6,000 bales. Receipts, 3,649, against 2,439 bales. The demand was good. Market quiet. New York, spots firm. Liverpool, firm. Sales of week, 86,000 bales.

Friday.—Quotations unchanged. Market firm. Sales reported, 6,500 bales. Receipts, 3,837 bales. New York, unchanged. Liverpool, steady. Havre, firm.

Saturday.—Sales foot up 10,950 bales. Our market, owing to more favorable news from New York and Liverpool, buoyant, and factors, upon learning the extent of the demand, advanced their prices from ⅛ to ¼c, which were fully maintained up to the close. New York, firm for spots, spinners buying more liberally; futures slightly advanced. Liverpool shows an improved demand, both from speculators and spinners.

Monday.—Sales, 1,400 bales. Receipts, 7,011 bales. Business partially suspended on account of severe storm. A moderate demand at the opening, and factors evinced a desire to sell, in some cases, at ¼c off from Saturday's figures, while others were firm. Quotations at Exchange were not altered.

FOLEY'S

Celebrated Gold Pens

AND PENCILS.

THE FINEST AND BEST.

CIRCULAR.—To those engaged in mercantile persuits, any inquiries that will facilitate their labor is highly worthy of notice, as well as of extensive patronage. One of the most important inventions of the present age is that of a pen that possesses the necessary qualities of firmness in work, and durability in use. Prominently such are those of JOHN FOLEY, manufacturer of Fine GOLD PENS AND PENCILS, No. 2 Astor House. Their superior value is tested by the long time he has been engaged in our city in their manufacture. We, the subscribers, who know the value of FOLEY'S PENS from constant use of them for a number of years, cheerfully recommend them to those who wish for the best and most perfect Gold Pen ever made.

JACKSON, Miss., March 29.—In consequence of the following letter, which was read during the session of the House of Representatives, the House adopted a resolution, by a vote of 75 yeas to 10 nays, instructing the managers of the Ames impeachment case to discontinue proceedings and withdraw articles:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Jackson, Miss., March 29, 1876.

Messrs. Bryant and Pryor:

Gentlemen—In reply to your suggestion, I beg to say that in consequence of the election of last November I found myself confronted with a hostile Legislature, and embarrassed and hampered in my endeavors to carry out my plans for the welfare of my State and of my party.

I resolved, therefore, to resign my office as Governor of the State of Mississippi; but meanwhile articles of impeachment were instituted against me, and of course I could not retire from my position under the imputation of any charge affecting my honor or integrity. For the reasons indicated, I still desire to escape burdens which are compensated by no public usefulness, and if the articles of impeachment presented against me were dismissed I should feel at liberty to carry out my desire and purpose of resignation. I am very truly yours,

ADELBERT AMES.

At three o'clock the impeachment court assembled, and Manager Fearnston presented the resolution and asked that impeachment articles against Gov. Ames be dismissed, which was done.

Mr. Durant, of Gov. Ames' counsel, then read as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Jackson, Miss., March 29, 1876.

To the people of the State of Mississippi:

I hereby respectfully resign my office as Governor of the State of Mississippi.

ADELBERT AMES.

Col. J. M. Stone, president pro tem. of the Senate, was installed as Governor at five P. M.

The resignation of the Governor was a complete surprise to all except a few who had agreed on the plan last night. The Republicans generally are quite indignant.

AUGUSTA, March 31.—The statements in the Washington Republican that two negroes were killed last week in Columbus, Ga., and that over a dozen were taken from their homes and severely whipped, four of them having been tortured by having hot sealing-wax dropped upon their bodies, are without a shadow of truth. No outrages have been committed on colored people in the counties of Burke, Jefferson and Chatham, and there is no truth in the further statement that in the vicinity of Macon three negroes were found hanging to trees in the neighborhood of a leading Democrat. The relations between the races are amicable and friendly.

The statements of outrages contained in the Republican are pure fabrications, manufactured for political effect. The following is from the proprietors of the Macon Telegraph, and is in answer to a dispatch asking if there were any grounds for the statement in the Washington Republican:

Macon, Ga., March 31.—To Patrick Walsh, agent Associated Press, Augusta: There is not one word of truth in the report of three negroes being hung, and not the shadow of any ground for it.

CLISBEY, JONES & REID.

WORCESTER, March 31.—Several mills and many houses were swept by the flood, which rushed down the ravine, twenty feet high, in a solid mass. The narrowness of the ravine emptied the reservoir gradually, requiring three hours to exhaust it. No lives were lost.

The loss to the city of Worcester by the dams and reservoir is $125,000, besides the summer supply of water. Other losses, $22,000. One man and two boys are missing. Travel is much impeded by the washed railroads.

GALVESTON, April 3.—A Galveston News special, dated Brownsville, April 2, says: This morning, at five o'clock, Gen. Toledo went out of Matamoras with one hundred men to reconnoiter. He was endeavoring to ascertain the position of the revolutionary forces, and, while so engaged a column of cavalry suddenly passed between him and Matamoras. He was completely isolated. The main body of Diaz's army marched boldly upon the works in the upper part of the city. Not a gun was fired from the works. The regular troops and the National Guard hurrahed for Diaz. Gen. Labarra discharged his revolver, and then retreated to the river bank with about twenty-five men. He asked permission to pass, which was granted on the condition of his becoming a prisoner and being disarmed. Another version is that Gen. Toledo had six hundred men, and that when outside they pronounced and joined Diaz. Gen. Diaz has more than one thousand men. He was received with great rejoicing by the people of Matamoras.

WASHINGTON, April 3.—The State Department has advices that England will not surrender Winslow except upon a guarantee that he shall only be tried for the offense set forth in the extradition paper.

The Navy Department has advices that the insurgents, under Porfirio Diaz, took possession of Matamoras with little opposition. Gen. Labarra, with about twenty men, escaped to Brownsville.

Capt. Johnson, of the Rio Bravo, can see no prospect of the Mexican government retaking Matamoras for some time, as its troops in that vicinity have either surrendered or joined the insurgents.

Maj. Merrill was examined by the Military Committee to-day, and acknowledged that he received over $21,000 for the conviction of Ku-Klux in South Carolina under Scott's proclamation. The affair will be fully ventilated. Custar charges that Merrill accepted a bribe while acting as judge advocate of the court-martial in Texas some time ago. He will be examined as to this charge—probably to-morrow.

MEMPHIS, April 3.—The effects of the flood are beginning to be felt on the Arkansas side. Numbers of families in Hopefield, immediately opposite this city, have been forced to leave their houses, and passengers who arrived by the Little Rock train this morning report the water over the track near Edmondson, but the train went out to-day.

The water is now ten inches below the extra high water, and about an inch below high water in May, 1874, when great damage was done in the neighborhood of Sunflower; Bolivar and Lake Providence. The crevasse reported this morning was at Dennis, nearly opposite Laconia, Ark., instead of at Davis', as first reported, and was caused by the bank caving. The water through this will run into Sunflower river, through Bayou Phillah.

MONTGOMERY, April 3.—A storm prevailed over nearly the entire State, coming from the east, lasting nineteen hours without intermission, accompanied by unusually heavy thunder, and continuous wind and lightning. It was considered the heaviest rain ever known, seven inches of water having fallen in the time. Great damage was done the planting interests.

The Alabama river has risen fifty feet, and is now rising at the rate of four and a half inches per hour. No deaths are reported, but many houses were blown down. No trains in motion since Saturday.

HARTFORD, April 3.—The election is progressing quietly. This is a disagreeable, rainy day. The greenback men are polling considerable of a vote here.

Seventy-one towns give Robinson 17,342, Ingersoll 19,540, Smith, 570, Atwater 420—a Republican gain of 1,155. Gov. Ingersoll is no doubt elected by the popular vote, and the Legislature is Democratic.

BATON ROUGE, LA., April 3.—At an election held here to-day for mayor, administrator of improvements and two councilmen, the Democratic ticket was elected by three hundred and forty-five majority, a large number of colored men voting openly the Democratic ticket.

FOREIGN.

HAVANA, March 29.—Mexican advices to the seventeenth instant state that the government troops at Jalapa had revolted, retaining the Governor as a prisoner. Judges, deputies and State officials had fled and taken refuge at Vera Cruz.

It was believed that the government would succeed in restoring order.

There had been considerable fighting. The revolutionists had all the important points in Hidalgo except Pachuca and Tulancira.

Foreigners generally favored the revolution, not because they hoped for a change for the better, but because they expected to bring the United States to establish a protectorate. Both parties were refraining from committing outrages. The levy was becoming obnoxious. The people were resisting it, and killing soldiers while attempting to force the conscription.

LONDON, March 30.—The Pall Mall Gazette's Berlin special says the proposed retirement of the Czar appears partially confirmed. It is stated that the Czarowitch will be intrusted with the regency during the summer, being temporarily invested with full sovereign power.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 2.—The programme of the Czar's journey is officially announced. His majesty goes to Ems at the end of April, sojourning at Berlin a few days. On his way from Ems he goes to Jugenheim, and afterward returns to Russia for the military maneuvers. During the summer he will go to Helsingfors, and next to Warsaw. After reviewing the troops in various places he will accompany the Empress to Livadia, whence he will return to St. Petersburg late in autumn. The Emperor of Brazil and King of Denmark will visit the imperial family during the summer.

BERLIN, April 3. The negotiations for the pacification of Herzegovina have fallen through. The powers seriously contemplate armed intervention to maintain the peace of Europe.

From the Work.

BLACK CREEK MISSION, MISS.—Mr. Editor: We are a little flock without representation by the ministry, in what is known as the Black Creek mission, in Perry county, Miss. Bro. Phillips, of the Enon circuit, has met with some difficulty in getting conveyance down to our little church to preach for us. He promised us that he would be with us, if possible, to do so. But he was then on his way up to his work, and did not know exactly whether he could preach for us or not. There seems to be something in the way, insomuch that we have had no preacher to represent us in our little church, known as the Garaway church. We are in quite a remote part of the world, and I think it would do honor to the next Conference to send some one on this wide, vast, populous mission. I can call to memory thirteen churches, that I know of, that are not represented, and there are others. I suppose in all there must be some thirty, and I do not suppose there are thirty sermons preached in the entire number in twelve months. We wish to devise some way of being represented. There are many souls here to save. Can you inform us how to get this thrown-out pasture brought back into culture? A few of us at our little church, as we cannot have preaching regularly, have formed ourselves into a Bible-reading class, though we are ignorant as to the regular system of conducting such a class as it should be. Will you please let us beg of you to give us the rules for the proper conducting of a regular Methodist Bible-reading class?

E. H. YELVERTON.

EUTAW, MISS.

Note by the Editor:—In order to obtain a preacher for the circuit, communicate with the presiding elder, and write to the Bishop who presides at the next session of the Annual Conference. In reference to Bible reading, the general practice is for the leader to select the subject and prepare a list of proof texts. These are read to the class, and each member, as the passages are announced, finds them, or part of them. After all are thus found, they are read in order, those reading who can turn most readily to the place. During the reading the leader and members of the class comment and exchange views on the meaning of the Scriptures under consideration.)

BRANDON DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: A duty performed by another often appears quite easy, but to go forward and perform the same duty yourself is frequently very difficult. Such has been my experience with the presiding eldership. To be called out from the quiet life of a station, with comfortable home and church, to travel over an extensive territory, exposed to winds and rains, crossing flood and mud, looking into new faces and performing new duties, is almost like beginning life anew. But it has its pleasures, and will, I doubt not, have its rewards. I have completed the first round on Brandon district, and report the outlook hopeful.

The thirteen pastoral charges are filled by faithful and efficient ministers, some of them men of large experience, who were early at their posts of duty, and are earnestly engaged in the work assigned them. They have, without exception, favor in the eyes of the people, and I predict for them a year of triumphant success.

The quarterly meetings have been, with few exceptions, times of deep religious interest, many presenting themselves at the altar for prayer, and an occasional shout of triumph rolling over the assemblies.

No special revivals have been reported—no efforts made—but such are the indications, at various points, that we look for a general awakening at no distant day.

The Sunday schools are beginning to awake from the usual torpor of winter.

Some of the collections ordered by the Annual Conference are being taken up early, so as to relieve, to some extent, the pressure at the end of the year.

Our District Conference will convene at Newton station, on the Vicksburg and Meridian railroad, June 30. Bishop Paine will preside. Can you not attend?

I am now on my second round.

I have never been an editor, like Bishop Keener, but I think this a good place to stop.

WILL H. LEITH.

BRANDON, MISS., March 28, 1876.

The Mississippi Valley Society.

The acceptance by Mr. Jefferson Davis of the office of president of the American Department of the International Chamber of Commerce and Mississippi Valley Society of London, England, invests that organization with fresh interest for all classes of our people, and will, no doubt, lead to its entrance upon a career of prosperity commensurate with our deservings of and applications for aid from English capitalists through it. The objects of the society, briefly stated, are to promote direct trade between the States and Territories of the valley of the Mississippi, and those of Europe and of Central and South America, to induce and facilitate immigration, to collect and transmit information in regard to the Mississippi valley, so as to lead to safe and profitable investments of European capital and labor in aid of the development of the varied sources of wealth and happiness with which this country is so bounteously endowed by nature, and to accomplish these purposes by co-operation with the International Chamber of Commerce and Mississippi Valley Society of London, England, or by such other means as may seem proper and advisable. The Branches at New Orleans, Vicksburg, Memphis (of which Mr. Brouson Bayliss is president, St. Louis and Chicago are expected to co-operate directly with the parent society by bringing to its notice, and through it to that of European capitalists, enterprises already established, or about to be established, in this section of country, whereby they will profit in interest payments or dividends, and our people by improvements, the establishment of manufactories, the construction of public works, and large accessions of population from among the skilled and enterprising laborers of Europe. Thus, if any number of well-known and reliable citizens of Memphis should establish a cotton factory, with say a capital of $100,000 paid up, and should, after a year, find it necessary to extend their works at a cost of a like additional sum, by the payment of a small fee to this society they could secure the amount at a rate of interest and on time that would not be a burden to them, or in any way hamper them. Their status and condition being vouched for by the Memphis society, and by the American branch at New Orleans, to the parent society at London, that organization would indorse the application to European investors, of whom there are, especially in England, always large numbers looking up such chances. Heretofore English capital has found its way to American investments through New York agencies, and, we regret to say, not always with bona fide results to the investor—as witness the Erie railroad and Emma mine, and kindred swindles. With the Mississippi Valley Society in existence as a helper to the investor and borrower, no such results can follow upon investments in the great valley, which teems with opportunities only needing capital to develop into gigantic schemes, productive of wealth to our own people and those who shall embark their wealth with us. Such a society should receive all the encouragement it stands in need of at the hands of our people. Every merchant, business man and banker in Memphis should be a member of it, and Mr. Bayliss should be, as Mr. Jefferson Davis will be in New Orleans, sustained by the united voice of the community. We have long and earnestly called for capital. Here is an opportunity to secure it.—Memphis Appeal.

A Worthy Enterprise.

We, the undersigned, having formed ourselves into a committee for the purpose of procuring a home for Dr. C. D. Elliott, earnestly solicit the co-operation of the pupils of the "Old Academy." We desire the gift to come from them. All donations to be sent to Mr. Edgar Jones, cashier Third National Bank, Nashville, Tenn., who will hold the same in trust until a sufficient amount is realized to purchase a home. The necessities of the case urge our immediate attention. Relying upon the affection and generosity of the pupils of the academy, we are

Seashore Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: Please inform your numerous readers that the trustees will meet on the camp ground on Wednesday, the twelfth of April next, on the arrival of the morning trains from New Orleans and Mobile. They will then lay out a new row of building lots on the western border of the camp ground, and be ready to assign lots for building tents.

All persons wishing to select choice lots for building, or desiring information on any points connected with the camp ground, are requested to be present then and there.

We give this week only such charges as belong to our Table No. 2—more excellent. It is not proposed to give any more charges belonging to either Table No. 1—excellent—paid assessments in full; or Table No. 2—more excellent—overpaid. Should any reports reach the office claiming precedence over those heretofore published in Table No. 3—most excellent—we will give them the honor due superior excellence by publishing them. Onancock, Eastern Shore district, Virginia Conference, Joseph F. Amiss, pastor, is most excellent in amount collected as compared with amount assessed.

Florida Conference, in this table, and in her printed minutes, presents facts well worthy of emulation. A weak Conference, poor in this world's goods, in a country especially impoverished, her zeal is admirable. I take from her published minutes two extracts which give the true ring, and deserve imitation: "The president of the Board of Missions was instructed by the board to notify the presiding elders to withhold the quarterly appropriations from the missionaries until their quarterly report had been furnished him." "At the Conference session, January, 1872, it was resolved that no preacher's character pass unless, when his name was called, he reported that the collections ordered had been taken up." Brave acts, these, and will tell on the destiny of any Conference which dare stand by them.

I greatly regret that the reports sent by pastors have not been more numerous, and that so few full or itemized reports from treasurers of Conference Boards of Missions have reached us. Will the Conference secretaries, where minutes have been published, please forward us copies? I want, in the next two weeks, to make up a table comparing leading churches in the various Conferences. We desire to present to the church the measure of the missionary spirit at the various centers of religious light and power. I have an idea, evolved by my studies thus far, to which I think this table will give emphasis. Please, pastors who are not ashamed of the results, send us, during this and next week, such figures as the following: Pastor's salary; missionary collections, foreign and domestic; number of members. We would like to have these figures from all charges numbering over two hundred and fifty members. Some of them we can get by a great deal of labor, out of scattered minutes—and the public shall have the benefit of the best information we can get.

D. C. KELLEY,
Associate Secretary.

The effects of the late heavy freeze turn out to be not so damaging as was at first thought. Still much harm and set-back has been experienced to all early-maturing fruits, vegetables and berries. All the peaches, which had passed blossoming and matured into forms, are killed. The Irish potatoes have fared likewise, while we regret to add that the crop of dewberries, which is an important and luxurious one here, is almost entirely destroyed. The gardens fared far better than these, and are in a fair state of preservation and progress.—Alexandria Democrat, March 29.

We see from the Marshall Herald that the people of that enterprising little city have determined to build and equip a branch railroad to the State line in the direction of Mansfield, and turn it over to the New Orleans Pacific for stock in that road. We understand they have informal if not positive assurances from the directory that they will meet them at the State line as soon as they can get there with their road.—Mansfield Reporter, March 25.

We often hate for one little reason when there are a thousand why we should love.

Centennial of North Carolina Methodism.

The Raleigh Christian Advocate of March 29 contains the five days' proceedings of the celebration. A grand time it was. The editor says:

"To say that it was a grand and glorious success, from its auspicious beginning to its happy consummation, is but the expressed utterance of the entire community. Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, Episcopalians, the citizens of Raleigh and the throng of visitors from abroad, the press, secular and religious, who were the delighted participators in the exercises, all united, as with the voice of one man, in saying that the Centennial of North Carolina Methodism held in this city, beginning on the twenty-first of March, 1876, was crowned with complete and glorious success. The spacious Metropolitan Hall, used for the occasion, was beautifully decorated by the hands of our fair ladies with graceful wreaths and lovely flowers.

The attendance on all the exercises was so large as to pack that spacious hall, numbering often times two thousand souls. And this large concourse of people seemed to be absorbed in hearing the charming music rendered by the choir, and the masterly addresses delivered by the chosen speakers.

The addresses were carefully prepared, full of historical instruction, chaste in language, able in argument, and deep in research. They were exceedingly edifying to the audience. Intelligent men said that they expected to hear a few masterpieces out of so many, but were surprised and delighted in hearing so many splendid productions. They were uniformly excellent, and eminently appropriate to the occasion. As these addresses are to be published in book form, so that all the people can read them, we will not take up time and space in describing their merits. But we think it due to the readers to say a few words about the addresses of our beloved Bishops, McTyeire, Doggett and Marvin, whose presence and labors have contributed much to the eminent success of the occasion. The theme of Bishop McTyeire was "The Founders of Methodism." And well and ably did he handle the subject. The address was remarkable for its clear statement, for its deep research, for its just discrimination, and practical bearing. It threw a flood of light on the fundamental principles of church organization. The speaker hewed right and left, cut and dissected, and set out the prominent characteristics of the founders of Methodism in a clear and convincing light. It made a profound impression, and elicited the admiration of all the hearers.

The subject of Bishop Doggett was "The Progress of Methodism in the Nineteenth Century." The range of his thoughts swept over the large track of Methodism, from its inception in England down to the widespread glory of its present status. He showed how it began as a single seed, grew, multiplied, and spread over the world until its golden harvest waves over the vast field of the wide world. It was universally conceded to be a grand prospection, and will stand as a monument of literary fame to its polished author.

The topic of Bishop Marvin was "The Relation of Methodism to Revivals." This production covered the whole field of Methodistic revivals. It was replete with the light of instruction, shedding clear radiance, warmth and beauty on the essential elements of spiritual religion. The Bishop's analysis of the natural, mental and spiritual characteristics of Mr. Wesley was a gem of perfection. Under the skillful touches of his hand the full-orbed glory of this apostolic man stood out in full view. The audience must have been fully convinced that, of all the grand men of modern Christianity, Mr. Wesley was immeasurably the grandest in the fruits of his labors.

DEATH OF MRS. VAUDA S. MAGEE.

Mr. Editor: Many of the readers of the ADVOCATE will be pained at the announcement of the death of our excellent and much-esteemed sister, Mrs. Vauda S. Magee, consort of Hon. William Magee, representative of Washington parish. She died in great peace on Sunday night, at seven o'clock. Pure spirit, thou art forever at rest! May God sustain the aged mother, husband and children under the bereavement! A suitable obituary will be furnished soon. Yours truly,

RUFFIN T. DAVIS.

FRANKLINTON, LA., March 6, 1876.

At an early hour on Monday morning, April 3, a dangerous break occurred in the Millikell's Bend levee, a few miles above Vicksburg, in Madison parish. Neither the members of the Levee Company nor the Board of Engineers apparently received full details of the catastrophe; but it is learned that the crevasse extended through the front and back levees. The stream is said to be about fifty feet wide and five feet in depth, but it is thought that the crevasse can be readily closed.

The Scottish committee of the Presbyterian Alliance has agreed to the postponement of the meeting of the council at Edinburg till next year.

Men find it more easy to flatter than to praise.—Richter.

MEDITATION IN PRAYER.

Ah, dearest Lord! I cannot pray
My fancy is not free
Obtaining distracting errantry
And breezily the ideas flee.

I cannot cry, Lord, Thou knowest
The heart it is for Thee
To have my every wayward thoughts
Thus borrowly to flee.

Prayer was not meant for words alone
Of solipsistic sweet
It is the prostrate soul's throne
At the Creator's feet.

Hold I dear Lord not my desire
But the thought that
Prayer would have of me, the higher
A truer liberty.

Yet though art oft most present, Lord
In weak, distracted prayer—
As sunset tinted hazy veil
Most often finds thee there.

For prayer, that hinders sets it free
From all illusions free
And teaches all how pray to Thee.
Dear Lord, it hangs on Thee.

My Savior, why should I complain,
And why fear and doubt sin?
Distractions are but outward things—
Thy peace dwells far within.

Those surface troubles come and go
Like ruffling of the sea
The deeper depth is out of reach
To all, my God, but Thee.

Christian Perfection. What Is It?

MR. EDITOR: I am pleased to learn from the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE that our Methodist people, both preachers and members, are concerned about Christian perfection. As this doctrine has been greatly mystified by the writings of polemic divines, and the Christian experience of wild fanatics, I have concluded that a short and plain scriptural account of this all-important doctrine would be useful to all who desire to know what Christian perfection is, and are seeking to obtain it.

Now, after all that has been said and written on Christian perfection, it is nothing more nor less than "perfect love." But what is "perfect love?" It is to "love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind;" and to love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."—Matthew xxii, 37, 38, 39, 40. This is Christian perfection, as plain as two and two make four. Every man and woman on earth that loves the Lord their God with all their heart, and with all their soul, and with all their mind, and love all mankind as they love themselves, is a "perfect Christian." If any man or woman ever felt in their heart, at any time during life, that he or she loved the Lord God with all the heart, soul, mind and strength, at that time he or she was a perfect Christian; for to love our neighbor as ourself flows from this supreme love to God as a necessary consequence. Now it matters not when the man or woman felt this supreme love to God, and love for all mankind as we love ourself, whether at what is called by divines our justification, our regeneration, sanctification or adoption, the moment he or she felt this love, he or she was a perfect Christian, although but a babe in Christ Jesus.

This love is progressive, and has its degrees in quantum, as the soul of man expands and becomes larger to hold it. This is St. John's view of the matter, and he illustrates it by the growth of a man: First, a child; second, a young man in the gospel; third, a father in Israel. First John ii, 13, 14. Our Savior illustrates it by the growth of corn: "First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." Mark iv, 28. St. Paul illustrates the same idea by the figure of a house: "Therefore, leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on to perfection; not laying again the foundation of repentance from dead works, and of faith toward God."—Hebrews vi, 1. In building a house there are degrees of progression. First, the foundation; second, the superstructure; third, the completion of the building. And so likewise it is in the progressive degrees of perfect love in the soul of a perfect Christian man or woman. They may be perfect babes in this love, they may be strong young men in this perfect love, or they may be matured fathers in this "perfect love that casteth out fear." First John iv, 18. Now it appears from the texts above quoted that Christian perfection is a growth in perfect love, or, as St. Peter has it, it is "to grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." Second Peter iii, 18. This same apostle gives us the gospel rule by which this is done. It is the simple rule of addition, for the apostle saith: "Add to your faith virtue, and to virtue knowledge, and to knowledge temperance, and to temperance patience, and to patience godliness, and to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness charity; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall."—Second Peter, first chapter.

Our Lord teaches the same doctrine: "For unto every one that hath shall be given, and he shall have abundance; but from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."—Matthew xxv, 29. This is the rule of God's moral government in the Christian dispensation: He that improves the grace or love that God has given shall have abundance, but from him that hath not improved this perfect love that God has given him shall be taken away even that which he hath.

Now I will notice what I believe to be a great error that has bewildered and confused the minds of Christians so much and so long on the doctrine of Christian perfection or sanctification. The error is this: We have been taught to believe that it is Christian perfection, or our love to God and all mankind, that cleanseth the soul from indwelling sin, when it is the blood of Jesus Christ that does this, and not our own perfect love. St. John says: "The blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, cleanseth us from all sin."—First John i, 7. I believe the truth is this: The believing sinner's soul is emptied of all sin, indwelling sin and outward sin, by "the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, that cleanseth us from all sin;" and after this is done God fills the soul brimful of his love. This idea of the matter seems to be agreeable to that great promise, Ezekiel xxxvi, 25, 26: "From all your filthiness will I cleanse you; a new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." Hence I think it is clearly evinced by the word of God, and the very nature of the case, that perfect love or sanctification has nothing at all to do with cleansing the soul from indwelling sin. It is the blood of Jesus Christ, his Son, that does this, and then the soul is filled with perfect love. Therefore let all who desire the blessing of perfect love pray to God in the language of David: "Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me."—Psalms li, 10. When the Lord does this the soul will be filled with perfect love as a consequence. "Then will we teach transgressors thy ways, and sinners shall be converted unto thee." This is what we need as a church, and we are praying for it, but I fear many of our prayers are improperly directed. Instead of praying God to cleanse our own hearts from all sin, and continuing to pray the same prayer until he does it, and fills our souls with perfect love, we are praying him to fill our souls with perfect love just as they are, full of sin—to purge out and cleanse them from indwelling sin. The consequence is that our prayers are not answered, because they are improperly directed, and we pray not according to God's will. The properties and fruits of this perfect love are defined and made so plain by St. Paul, in the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, that no unprejudiced mind can be deceived or at a loss to know what perfect love is, and whether he is made perfect in love or not. He says: "Love suffereth long and is kind; love envieth not; love vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up; doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things. Love never faileth."

By what fruit of the Spirit may we know that we love God in the highest sense of Christian love? I answer: "By love, joy and peace always abiding in the soul; by invariable long-suffering, patience, resignation; by gentleness triumphing over all provocation; by goodness, mildness, sweetness, tenderness of spirit; by fidelity, simplicity, godly sincerity; by meekness, calmness, evenness of spirit; by temperance not only in food and sleep, but in all things, natural and spiritual."—Galatians v, 22, 23. "But is it God's will for us Christians to be filled with this love of God in this life, so as to be sanctified throughout, soul, body and spirit, and rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in everything give thanks? Certainly it is; for thus saith the Apostle Paul: "Rejoice evermore: pray without ceasing; in everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." "And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly; and I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ."—First Thessalonians v, 16, 17, 18, 23. Perfect love, in principle, is to be cleansed from all sin—outward sin and indwelling sin—by the blood of Jesus Christ; and this is done through our own personal faith in his blood, that cleanses us from all sin. In practice it is to keep from committing sin by obeying all God's commandments. Now, if this is done through our own personal faith in the blood of Christ, it must be done in this life, and not in death, as Calvinism teaches, nor in the fire of purgatory in the future state, as the Roman Catholics teach. Now, as regards the practical working of this perfect love, you say that there is not a Christian man on earth that does not commit sin every day of his life. St. John says: "He that committeth sin is of the devil, for the devil sinneth from the beginning."—First John 3, 8. Hence it is clear that he that committeth sin is a child of the devil, and not a child of God. Now it is asked: Are not our frail infirmities, that cause us to err in ten thousand ways and instances, sinful? I answer: No; because we can no more help our frail infirmities than we can help dying; because our frailty, infirmities and death were all entailed on us without our will or consent, and therefore they are not sins to us, but the effects of sin entailed on us, for which we are not accountable to God. Therefore I conclude that a man must in this life be cleansed from all sin, through faith in the blood of Jesus Christ, and filled with the perfect love of God, and keep himself unspotted from the world, the flesh and the devil, in order to live and die a perfect Christian. As Christian perfection is the only qualification for heaven, we all ought to examine ourselves closely, and feel interested in this matter—"For it is written, Be ye holy, for I am holy."—First Peter i, 15. Again: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect."—Matthew v, 48. And again: "Follow peace with all men, and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."—Hebrews xii, 14.

JAMES SHANKS.

Origin of Evil in Man.

The origin of evil is a subject that has perplexed the mind so little; so much so that many well-meaning people have thought that it was not only a useless waste of time, but absolutely wrong to attempt to look into what they imagine to be God's "secrets." With all due respect to their opinions, I will nevertheless venture to give my thoughts upon this difficult question. I do not speak of the origin of evil with the angels, but with man—that particular sin that doomed the human race. Who were the actors, and what was the nature of that sin? There was a period in the history of this world when there was no sin, no evil. God pronounced everything which he had created "very good." Up to this time there was no evil in this world. God could not sin. Man was pure—all was good. How, did sin come? How came evil into the world at all? This is the question. Now I say: 1. It was not the work of God. 2. It was not the work of man, in the abstract—man alone. 3. It was not the work of the devil—the devil alone. What then? It was the work of two—the devil and man conjointly. There were wondrous powers in both; but so far as the sin in question—the sin that damned the human race—is concerned, each one as yet was innocent. Not only so, but, without the co-operation of both, each one was utterly incapable of committing that sin at all. It is true that prior to this the devil had originated evil, and thereby created his own hell, from which, for the best of reasons, there was no redemption. But that was very different from the sin of man. And possibly man might have had and I believe he did—the same awful capability to have committed a sin, similar to the sin of satan, without temptations or any outside pressure. In that event he too would have created a hell, from which there could have been no redemption. But we speak of evil or sin as it is in man an evil from which it was possible to redeem him "with the precious blood of Christ." This sin was the conjoint work of the devil and man; hence the culpability and punishment of both; for it is clear that both did suffer punishment for that particular sin. Man fell from his high and holy estate, and the devil added to his former punishment, and will never know the full extent of that awful punishment until the great day of judgment, when he shall be cast into the lake of fire, and receive his just deserts for all the evil that the universe has sustained from that sin, and also all the efforts he has made for the ruin of every individual soul from that day to the end of the world—even those he failed to destroy. It was, then, the work of both. But how?

To illustrate: There is something in nature which we call law. One atom of matter attracts another, but not without being itself attracted. The action of both is essential. Without this there is no result. A stone, for instance, will remain at rest forever, unless it be acted upon by some other force. No motion, no result. Light is said to produce color; but it does not of itself. It cannot. To produce color, the rays of light must fall upon the surface of some material substance, and color is the result of the rays and the peculiar texture of that surface. The frost nips the tender weed, but it must be remembered that the juices or vital properties of the weed are essential agents to produce this effect; for there are other vegetables that no amount of frost affects. It takes the united action of two or more substances to produce an effect. So it was in this case. Man was a being of wonderful powers of intellect and heart. If these remain dormant, no effect is produced. If they move, and move toward God, good is the result. No sin, no evil. The devil is also a being of tremendous powers; but if they lie inactive nothing is effected. If they move toward himself, or in any direction away from man, if there be an effect at all, it will not be the sin of man. So far as man is concerned, there is no sin, no evil yet. But let these awful powers of the devil be turned toward man, and let the wonderfully delicate and sensitive susceptibilities of man reciprocate—let man assent, believe, submit, and accept the authority of the devil—then there is an effect, and that is the sin of man. This is the origin of evil in this world, and that is the gate through which it entered. It was a sin in which both were actors—both guilty, with no palliation on the side of satan; hence no redemption for him. But somewhat on the side of man; hence redemption for him. SALATHIEL.

WILLIAMS, ALA., Feb. 1, 1876.

TRINITY CHURCH PROPERTY.—The following is from a letter of Ex-Gov. John A. Dix to President Grant, suggested by a reference reported to have been made by the latter to the enormous wealth of the Trinity Church corporation, New York:

"The fact is that the coporation of Trinity church is taxed, under the laws of this State, precisely in accordance with the suggestions in your message to Congress. Its property consists of church edifices, cemeteries, school-houses, an infirmary, a rectory, and several hundred lots of ground—which, with the exception of a few used for parochial purposes, are leased, partly for short and partly for long periods. On the short leases the corporation pays the taxes; on the long leases the taxes are paid by the lessees. I paid in September last, as controller of the corporation, on the former, $16,943.91, and we estimate the amount paid on the latter at $60,000—making over $100,000 paid to the city this year for taxes, besides a considerable sum for assessments. We pay taxes on every foot of ground used for secular purposes. We pay on our rectory in which the rector resides; on the office in which the business of the corporation is transacted, although it is within the boundaries of St. Paul's cemetery. In fact nothing is exempt except the church edifices, the cemeteries, four school-houses, in which free schools are kept, and an infirmary, in which the sick receive gratuitous treatment.

"I know you will be glad to have this information. I have always been of opinion that the several States should tax all secular property belonging to churches within their respective limits. Cemeteries are exempt by universal consent. I think church edifices should be, as I believe they always have been in Christian communities. To tax them would seem like making the Creator and Sovereign ruler of the universe pay tribute to us for allowing a part of his footstool to be used for the worship which is his due."

SUCH AS I HAVE.—At the installation of Rev. William Carruthers over a church in Calais, Me., the other day, Rev. S. P. Fay, of Bangor, delivered the charge to the people. Among other things he urged them to be considerate of their pastor, saying that there were many little kindnesses that would comfort and encourage him. He spoke of his own experience, at one time receiving a pumpkin from one of his parishioners, given with such kind words and intention that he felt happier for a week after. The next morning the newly-installed pastor found at his door two squashes, with a note in which was written: "Such as I have I give unto thee. We did not raise pumpkins this year."

The presence of God is no abstract truth, no mere presence of a sun to whose light we may lay open our souls as the flowers, the leaves, and be transfigured; but the communion of spirit with spirit; no mere presence of an angel watching us and loving us in silence. It is the presence of One with whom we may have intercourse, as a man with his friend; to whom we may speak.—speak of everything that interests us, make requests and have them granted, ask questions and have them answered; One who is not silent toward us. Oh! let us bathe our souls in this joy, drink, yea, drink abundantly and be refreshed.—Mrs. Charles.

"Transfiguration did not so change Christ, nor shall glorification so change us, as that we shall not be known. There is nothing to convince a man of error—nothing in nature, nothing in Scripture—if he believe that he shall know those persons in heaven whom he knew upon earth; and if he conceive soberly that it were a less degree of blessedness not to know them than to know them, he is bound to believe that he shall know them; for he is bound to believe that all that conduces to blessedness shall be given him.—Dr. Donne.

Among the many good stories told of Mr. Finney is this: He had been preaching for some time in one of the cities of the States, and had been much hindered in his work by a man whose zeal was far greater than his intelligence or stability. One evening, at the close of a social meeting in the pastor's house, being invited to offer the closing prayer, he took occasion to mention this brother by name, saying: "O Lord, we entreat thee to bless Brother B., and to fix him somewhere, so that we may know where to find him."

A man's action is only a picture book of his creed. He does after what he believes.

OBITUARIES.

IN MEMORIAM.

At a called meeting of Santa Rosa Lodge, No. 16, F. A. M., a committee was appointed to draw up suitable resolutions with reference to the death of Bro. BENJAMIN W. THOMPSON. At a subsequent meeting the committee submitted the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

Bro. Benjamin W. Thompson was born in Butler county, Ky., in November, 1810; moved to this county in 1839. He was initiated in this lodge February 5, 1851, passed February 17, 1851, raised April 1, 1851, and died in full fellowship, at his residence in Bagdad, on Monday, January 24, 1876.

We do not claim for him perfection, but the catalogue of his faults was shorter than that of most of us. He was a man of a warm, generous nature—a man whose heart always throbbed responsive to the cry of distress, and whose hand was always open to the needy.

Masonry was to him more than a gorgeous symbolism, applicable only to the ceremonies of the lodge-room. For him there spoke through it all those vital principles which, carried into practice in his life and governing his relations with other men, made him a useful citizen, a kind neighbor, a faithful friend, an honest man. But nowhere did the loveliness of his character shine out so conspicuously as around his own fireside, and in the sacred circle of his home life. He was pre-eminently an affectionate father, a tender and devoted husband. As a Free and Accepted Mason his work was "good work, true work, square work." He wrought through the burden and heat of the day, through the twilight of declining years, till his day of labor closed. For him "the twelfth hour of refreshment" has sounded, and he has gone into the presence of the Supreme Grand Master to receive his reward. He was a member of the Methodist Church, and died "trusting in Jesus."

We have placed a sprig of cassia upon his tomb as an emblem of our faith in his immortality. We would, if possible, keep the memory of his life fresh and green among the future members of this lodge, and we therefore offer the following preamble and resolutions:

Whereas, It hath pleased almighty God in his wise providence, to remove to another and higher sphere of action our beloved brother, Benjamin W. Thompson; therefore, be it

Resolved, That in his death Santa Rosa Lodge has lost one of its strongest stays, the community a valuable citizen, the poor a friend, the church of Christ a useful member.

That while we mourn his loss, and miss his counsel and association, we bow with submission to the will of him who doeth all things well.

That we cherish his memory, and commend to the emulation of the brotherhood the virtues that adorned his life.

That we extend to the bereaved family our heartfelt sympathies, praying upon them the guidance and protection of the widow's God and the orphan's Father.

That a copy of this memorial be furnished to the afflicted family, and that copies be forwarded to the Pensacola Gazette and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication. Fraternally submitted.

DIED, at the residence of her son-in-law Bryant, in Carroll county, Miss., January 30, A. D. 1876, Mrs. RACHEL BARD, widow of the late John L. G. Byrd, of the North Mississippi Conference, in the seventy-eighth year of her age. She was for a quarter of a century his wife, and survived him only a few years.

Another link that joined us to the Methodism of the past is broken. Very few early Mississippi Methodists survive to represent the fathers and mothers in Israel, who counted all things loss that they might win Christ and be found in him. Sister Byrd's maiden name was Rachel Eastman. She was born in Claiborne county, Miss., May 21, 1798, when Mississippi was a Territory.

She was married to her first husband, Reuben Marshall, in 1815. This union was blessed with thirteen children, whom she trained in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Nine of them survive her. Some of those who preceded her to the spirit world, we have reason to know, fought the good fight and laid hold on eternal life. Some of those who survive her are pressing joyfully for the crown, children and grandchildren prove with her the power of grace in their hearts, and prove with her the joys of heaven. She joined the Methodist Church in 1826, and remained to the day of her death a most worthy member. In 1827 she was converted at a camp meeting near Vicksburg. For forty-nine years she enjoyed the peace of God that passeth all understanding; for forty-nine years she had the victory over sin through faith. Hers was a joyful religion. How often did her triumphant spirit shout aloud the praises of a Savior's love!

What a long time in the annals of man what a short time in the annals of God for one to march over life's toilsome journey, so strewed with the wrecks of human hopes and human follies! She saw wars and peace, changes in government, changes in fortunes. She saw two generations of men come and go, and could exclaim, in view of the disappointments of the world, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity;" while in her long experience she could exclaim, "Goodness and mercy have followed me all my days. I have seen no end to God's goodness." Hence when in old age, greatly enfeebled in body and mind, she scarce knew anything else. She retained to the last a sense of God's love. She has fought the good fight and laid hold on eternal life.

W. P. BARRON.

CYNTHIA CALLAWAY was born April 2, 1805; was married to Thomas D. Johnson, in Montgomery county, N. C., August 28, 1824; died February 19, 1876, in Pickens county, Ala., in her seventy-first year of life.

Sister Johnson moved with her husband to Tennessee in 1826, to Mississippi in 1832, and to Alabama in 1844. She united with the Methodists in her fifteenth year, and was a faithful adherent to all the usages of her church for fifty-six years. In all her immigrations she took her church letters, had her name placed on the church book, and herself kept under the watch-care of Christ's kingdom. Her devoted piety and constant attention to the duties of religion not only shielded her from church censure, but constituted her a model Christian, worthy of imitation. Two of her children died while infants. Two sons died in the faith, one of whom—John R. G. Johnson—was for some years a most promising and successful local preacher in our church. All her other children are pious, earnest Christians in the church, of their sainted mother—one of them once a member of the Alabama Conference. How gracious and fragrant the life of a Christian wife and mother! Her house has always been a home for the preachers. Now they miss her, but find her Christian husband and widowed daughter always ready to give them good cheer and holy welcome. For some months before death Sister Johnson had been declining. Just a few days before her departure, on returning home from her daughter's, she asked her husband how long it was since their marriage, and on being told that it was fifty-two years she remarked: "That's a long time; but we will part soon. I am going home." She died in great peace, and we buried her at the old Tabernacle church, confident of seeing her that morning."

A. G. COPELAND.

BENJAMIN H. TOOMER was born September 14, 1842, and died at his home, Bayou Cowsette, February 28, 1876. While at school in Summerfield, Ala., in 1860, he professed conversion. He was a faithful Confederate soldier, but in the midst of temptations incident to the service he, like many of our noble youths, suffered his religious life to decline.

In November, 1867, he was married to Miss R. A. Donahan, whom he leaves bereaved and sad indeed. Kind friends will sympathize and pray for her, but none but God can comfort and console, and all her trials and raise her three little children to his glory. Benjamin, after his marriage, connected himself with the Franklin Street church, Mobile, Ala., and when he moved to a home of his own erected the family altar, and on it daily offered the sacrifice of prayer and praise.

He was not particularly demonstrative; his religious life, but strict integrity and veracity, were marked characteristics of his daily so. He ever manifested respect and filial reverence to his parents, and was a kind and lovingly affectionate husband to his wife, little children, evincing in all the relations of life a mind and heart imbued with the Spirit of the blessed Jesus, and a life controlled by the teachings of his holy word. One deeply versed in the things of God possessed great satisfaction at the evidences of genuine piety given in a conversation with him during his last weeks of life. Being conscious in his last moments, no vague assurance were given, but no doubt entertained of his blissful immortality. To the loved ones left behind may stand the film, justified and saved, in that last day, is now and shall continue to be the prayer of the writer.

MARY ANN REBECCA, only daughter of Joseph and Fannie Reynolds, was born January 21, 1873, and died at Walnut Hill, Escambia county, Fla., January 26, 1876, from the effects of burns, received on the day. A servant saw her clothing on fire, immediately the household ran to her rescue. Everything was done by the loved ones to relieve the little sufferer, but all in vain.

Although near the door of death for fifteen hours, charred as were her little limbs by the devouring element, and consuming everything around her, not a murmur escaped her lips.

A short time before she closed her eyes upon earth she was asked if she knew a relative who had just come. Instantly recognizing him, she exclaimed: "Oh, yes; that is Uncle Taylor!" She thirsted in death, as do those who suffer death from fire. Her mother would quiet her, and try to induce her to sleep. "Give me some more water, mamma," said she, "and then I'll go to sleep;" and she slept—slept in Jesus.

Precious jewel! He who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me," has called for thee. "May God's grace enable us to meet Mamie's loved ones to meet her where sorrow is no more.

W. P. B.

THOMAS H. MELTON was born in the State of Georgia, November 1, 1806. We know nothing of his parentage nor of his youth. We find him in Perry county, Ala., where he was married to Miss Mary Gardner in 1829 or 1830. Soon after his marriage he attached himself to Shiloh Missionary Baptist Church, in Perry county. Not long after this he removed to Pickens county, Ala.; thence to Clark county, Miss., and located near Enterprise. There he helped to organize the Masonic lodge, was elected, initiated, passed and raised. Some time after this he removed to Jasper county, Miss.; thence to Scott county, Miss., where he united at Homewood, where he died, January 19, 1876, and was buried with Masonic honors. He was in his sixty-ninth year when he died. Bro. Melton was deacon of the Homewood church at his death. He was a kind and good neighbor. In the death of Bro. Melton his church has lost a pillar, the Masonic fraternity one of its most devoted and zealous members, and the vicinity a good citizen. He leaves a widow and two unmarried daughters, with other children and friends, to mourn their loss. He has gone from labor to refreshment.

R. A. SMITH.

L. B. PLATT was born in Lawrence county, Miss., in 1811; emigrated to Bossier parish, La., in 1848; was married to Miss Sallie Sugg in 1861, who, with two children, still survive him. He was a good citizen, a kind husband and an affectionate father. Though afflicted for some time, he neglected the one thing needful till late in life. On the fourteenth of February he professed religion and exhorted his friends of the great importance of their speedy return to God. Some days after, at his request, we received him into the church. From the time he professed religion till the day of his death, which took place February 26, 1876, he never seemed to entertain a doubt of his acceptance. So by the school of affliction God doth wean us from earth and prepare us for heaven. All praise to his glorious grace and such exhibitions of his love and willingness to save those who call upon him!

IDLE WORDS.

BY WM. WALLACE HARNEY.

Oh! say not idle words are like
A zephyr on the sea;
For oft a wondering chord will strike
The heart's deep mystery.
And tears that prayers could not elicit up
Flow as if strangely stirred,
The waters to the heart's full cup
Gushed over with the word.

And idle words that fell unwatched
May rise in after years,
With feeling speech hath never matched,
And eloquence of tears—
May breathe a thought whose lightest tone
For coldness or the grave
Wins one whose life or love is alone
We would have called to save.

Then think not idle words are lost:
For oft they may return
With feeling Hope hath guarded most
Within her sacred urn;
They fall like Pardise's careless tears
Among the Peribanke's whirls,
To be regained in other years
A diadem of pearls.

Appleton's Journal.

Cardinal Manning on Persecution and Freedom.

Cardinal Manning has been preaching to the good people of Peckham the cruel and unchristian spirit which the Church of Rome has shown and is being now persecuted by those who differ from her dogmas, not only in Prussia, but in England. The text on which the cardinal based his fierce philippic against the persecutors is contained in the words recorded in St. John xv, 19: "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." The hatred of the world to the Church of Rome the cardinal accepts as an infallible mark of God's favor, and an unerring attestation of the claim of the Catholic Church," which, to quote the cardinal's own words, "is the teacher of the way of salvation—the spiritual guide of the flock of Jesus Christ; but this world rebels; and calls it tyrannous, and treats the Church as it did its divine Master. I am not, therefore, surprised that, in every country where men teach that the civil power is supreme, they should be at enmity against the Catholic Church." Men say: You claim to teach infallibility. That is false. But they say: You thereby take away the liberty of the intellect of man. Very true. They say: You tyrannize over the human mind, and take away its freedom of judgment. I would ask you, Does the truth that two and two make four take away my liberty of intellect? Am I free to dispute whether or not two and two make four or five or three? Am I free to dispute the plain rules of arithmetic, astronomy, or any science? Every demonstration of science fetters and binds the intellect of man directly he knows it. When science has proved a thing, no man thinks of disputing it afterwards; he would be an unreasonable man if he did it; and why? Because he knows the thing is true. Truth once known throws itself upon the reason. Well, then, how can I lose my liberty of intellect when I know that God is one, and that there are three persons in the godhead? How can I lose my intellectual liberty by knowing the revelation that the Son of God was made man? Why am I not intellectually free because I know that this is our church on earth, against which the devil shall never prevail? What liberty have I lost? Every divine truth that I know so far takes away my intellectual freedom that I shall never dispute them. Furthermore, we are told that the church upholds the freedom of the will. Yes, she does. It tells us: "Thou shalt not steal," "Thou shalt do no murder," "Thou shalt not blaspheme," "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." No doubt these are all commandments, and when they are once known they bind the will. And I ask: Suppose I said to a child, that is poison; do not take it; and, that is wholesome bread; eat it—am I inflicting an injury on that child for depriving it of the liberty of will while preventing it from poisoning itself, and am bidding it to eat wholesome bread? That is just what the church commands. It says: "You shall not commit any injustice, you shall believe all that is true, thou shalt do no wrong to thy neighbor, you shall serve the Lord thy God," and, I ask, is that depriving a man of liberty of mind? Does it take away any but the liberty to do wrong? That is, we must confess, not a little startling to find a prince of the Church of Rome indulging in an invective against the cruel persecution undergone by Roman Catholics. But in sooth, the seditious Gracchus is once more whining of sedition. If ever there was a church whose history is the history of systematic persecution of the church of Christ, and deeply stained with the blood of the martyrs, as it was predicted of her, it is beyond all doubt that of the Church of Rome. In other churches persecution of other creeds has been the accident of time and place; but in the Church of Rome persecution has been elevated into a principle; it has reached the rank of a law of the church, promulgated by those who legislate for it, and carried out to the letter by all who are subject to the ruling powers of the church. The persecuting syllabus of the present Pope is in harmony with the persecuting decrees and practices of his predecessors, and we find his syllabus censures all decrees of monarchs, States, parliaments and peoples which do not accept the ecclesiastical policy of Rome, and declares them to be "void of all rightful authority." Toleration of other religions is here branded as a crime against society—a sin against Heaven; all sovereigns who are Protestants are to be deposed because of their heresy, and it assumes the position beginning to end that there is no other true form of saving Christianity but that of Rome, and no other faith, even no other form of the same faith, is to be held or allowed by those who have the power to crush it out of existence. The cardinal is usually inconsistent and fallacious when he appeals to analogy to demonstrate that the Church of Rome does not tyrannize over our freedom of the intellect or the conscience when she insists upon the acceptance of her dogmas. Now, when we accept the truth of two and two making four, we admit that we are "not free to dispute the plain rules of arithmetic." But what does this case and others like it prove? It shows that, after all, we do act on private judgment, that we accept as true what commends itself as true to our own mind, and all the more so when we find it impossible to reject such a truth, for instance, as that two and two make four, without ignoring the very first principles of our reasoning faculties. So, again, with the intuitive axioms of the conscience, we acknowledge at once the truth of the moral command: "Thou shalt not steal." We do not feel ourselves free to dispute it or reject it, simply because it instantly commends itself to our right reason, and to our moral sense and fitness of things.

The simple truth of the matter is that we assent to such truths at once because they carry with them their own evidences, self-evident as they are, and their own reasonableness, which our reason at once recognizes, inasmuch as they are the purest and clearest of appeals to reason and to common sense. But can this be said of any distinctive doctrine of the Church of Rome? Can it be said of the doctrine of the Pope's infallibility that it is so self-evident, so acceptable to the laws of our understanding, that to reject it would be to ignore those very laws and first principles, and that we believe it, and accept it the moment it is enunciated? When we accept the truth that two and two make four we are most certainly acting in harmony with the dictates of our reason, which forbid us to dispute a self-evident truth. On the contrary, when the dogma of papal infallibility is presented to our minds to be accepted as a truth, we find not only that it is not in harmony with the dictates of our reason, but that it is in clearest antagonism to the dictates of our reason, which intimates that such a claim on the part of any man is irreconcilable with the spirit of the gospel, opposed to the uniform tradition and teaching of the Catholic Church, and virtually establishes in the world, in the name of Christ's vicegerent, the very kingdom Christ rejected. It has been the special misfortune of the Church of Rome especially in late years, to tyrannize over the judgment and intellect, learning and conscience of her best and wisest children by endeavoring to force upon them the acceptance, as if divine truths, of the dogmas of the immaculate conception and papal infallibility, which Dr. Döllinger and the Old Catholics have rejected as conflicting not merely with their own reason, but as conflicting with the teaching of the Roman Catholic Church herself, of other ages, and under other popes and councils. To justify such a tyranny, which tramples on the conscience of man, by an attempt to show that our intellect and our conscience lose their freedom, and are bound to accept certain truths, is, we must confess, the boldest and most extraordinary defense of persecution yet known, in which the cardinal seems utterly to forget that it is one thing for the mind of man to accept without proof that which needs no proof from its own self-evidence, and quite another thing to accept without proof that which needs the most rigorous demonstration, because it is not only not self-evident, but utterly in contradiction to truths already accepted as divine; and to those very intuitions of the mind according to which we accept the moral and mathematical axiom mentioned by the cardinal without demonstration, and without doubt or cavil. English Churchman.

Mental Peculiarities.

There are few people who do not have their eccentricities. These are frequently of gesture, expression or action; but as often they are wholly mental, and for that reason not known to any but themselves. Being somewhat curious to find out if others had as singular fancies, whims and ideas as we had experienced, we once made the question a subject of study, and obtained from various individuals the following information, which we have no hesitation in presenting as absolutely true. A jeweler, who in his boyhood had been apprenticed to his trade, slept in his employer's store. A regulator occupied a niche in the wall, and its regular tick-tock, without the variation of the sixteenth part of a second, sounded through the darkness with a soothing, drowsy effect. The boy went to sleep by it, and seemed to be swung by its uniform movement into dreamland. Fourteen years have passed, and still the memory of the precise old regulator puts him to sleep. When anxious, nervous and restless, the thought of the tick-tock which gave its aid to slumber so many years ago will bring back the old influence. Hearing the same regular sound in his imagination, he is quieted as with the actual proximity of the clock.

Another gentleman invariably associated words with colors. When introduced to persons, the sound of their names instantly determines in his mind what is their appropriate hue. Abstract words also have their own shade. For instance, Boston, to him, is always bright orange. Each day of the week has its peculiar color in his mind. Monday is sky blue; Tuesday, pure white; Wednesday, scarlet; Thursday black; Friday, a dead cream white; Saturday, jet black; and Sunday, a changeable, or rather indescribable hue. These colors once attached to a word are never altered. He says language has been a variety of shades to him from earliest childhood.

The control exercised over itself by the mind is illustrated by the person who says "one, two, three," and then instantly sets about a dreaded task. We were told that if that stern rule were once disobeyed or neglected, that it was the firm belief of the old person who thus drove himself to irksome duty that his will-power would henceforth be gone, and that a complete derangement of his whole life would ensue.

A lady, somewhat advanced in years, has a singular idea about the months. She always sees them in the shape of little squares, or ranged in the form of an oblong. She always commences her year with June, which she locates in the upper right-hand corner of the square. From June she passes to July down the right-hand side of the square, and backward toward the left, until she comes round to June again. She always imagines herself in the little square which indicates the month really in order, and says that if she ever gets mixed in her data, or does not know whether it is the last day of one month or the first of another, she can hardly control herself until she sets it right and knows how she stands.

It is related of Dr. Johnson that he would never enter a house without stepping with his right foot first upon the threshold, and that if, in his approach, he made a mistake, and was about to step up with his left foot, he would turn around, measure a yard or so with his eye, and try it again. He would never risk the calamity that would undoubtedly befall him if he made so terrible a misstep.

A genial old lady who has reached her eighty-fourth year, and who has led a pleasant, comfortable life, who is tolerably educated, and in no other particular than one eccentric, who is religious and of an excellent temper, says that she does not know of anything that gives her more real enjoyment than to look at a corpse, as it is decked with flowers for the grave. This eccentricity would not be so striking, but it becomes alarming and horrible when she adds that she frequently has entered tombs and opened coffins, as her near neighbor was sexton, to watch with eager curiosity the process of decay. This state of mind, in one so thoroughly human otherwise, is inexplicable, indeed.

Although these idiosyncrasies are exceptional in themselves, they are probably, in one sense, common to all. We are all more or less singular and odd. We are none of us entirely free from original methods of thought and peculiar attitudes of the mind. It would no doubt prove an amusing and instructive employment to gather from all available sources a more thorough exposition of mental characteristics.—Golden Rule.

THE SIMPLICITY OF GREATNESS.—Many years ago the Seminaries of Princeton Seminary were in the habit of preaching at a station some distance from that place. Among their habitual hearers was a sincere and humble but uneducated Christian slave, called Uncle Sam, who on his return home would try to tell his mistress what he could remember of the sermon, but complained that the students were too deep and learned for him. One day, however, he came home in great good humor, saying that a poor, unlearned old man, just like himself, had preached that day, who he supposed was hardly fit to preach to the white people; but he was glad he came, for his sake, for he could remember everything he had said. On inquiry it was found that Uncle Sam's "unlearnt" old preacher was Rev. Dr. Archibald Alexander, who, when he heard the criticism, said it was the highest compliment ever paid to his preaching.

Therefore, if you aspire to be a son of consolation—if you would partake of the priestly gift of sympathy—if you would pour something beyond commonplace consolation into a tempted heart if you would pass through the intercourse of daily life with the delicate tact which never inflicts pain—if, to that most acute of human ailments, mental doubt, you are ever to give effectual succor, you must be content to pay the price of the costly education. Like him, you must suffer—being, tempted.—F. W. Robertson.

FEIGNED HUMILITY.—Dr. R. Newton tells the following amusing anecdote: One of the members of the church was indulging freely in this strain: "What a poor, shortcoming creature I am!" The minister sighed, and said: "Indeed you have long given me painful reason to believe you." Whereupon the member, being taken at his word, replied in a tone of anger: "Who told you anything about me? I am as good as you. I will not come to hear you any more: I will go somewhere else." And so he did.

A man of weak intellect having come into a house after dinner; the guidwife thereof asked him if he would take a share of what was left, and set down a plate with something on it, to which he was about to apply with speed, when she said: "Are ye no gaun to ask a blessing on it?" and was about to take it away if he would not. Then he said: "O Lord, bless thae lame, and put mair meat on't."

Have you never observed how free the Lord's Prayer is of any material that can tempt to this subtle self-inspection in the art of devotion? It is full of an outthrowing of thought and emotion toward great objects of desire, great necessities and great perils. After this manner, therefore, pray ye.—Prof. Austin Phelps.

"As to opening oysters," said old Hurricane, "why nothing's easier; if you only know how." "And how's how?" inquired Straight. "Scotch snuff!" answered old Hurricane, very sententiously. "Scotch snuff; bring a little of it ever so near their noses, and they'll sneeze their lids off."

In a country church-yard there is the following epitaph: "Here lies the body of James Robertson, and Ruth, his wife;" and underneath this text: "Their warfare is accomplished."

The daughter of a noted divine once said to me: "My dear father used to tell us that he prayed daily for grace to be patient with stupid people."

Religious Intelligence.

—The grand total of the Sabbath school army of this continent is 6,850,869.

—The Rev. W. R. Nicholson, D. D., was consecrated a Bishop of the Reformed Episcopal Church, at Philadelphia. Bishop Cheney preached the sermon.

—The British government has definitely declined to interfere with the common schools act of New Brunswick. The interference was asked by the Roman Catholics.

—The correspondent of the London Methodist notices the growing disposition of the Primitive Wesleyans of Ireland to cut loose from the Established Church. Notice has been given that one of their churches in Dublin has been duly registered for solemnizing marriages. This act cuts them off from dependence upon the Established Church.

A NOBLE EXAMPLE.—The daughter of the late Archbishop Whately, of Dublin, has for several years been engaged in missionary labors in Egypt. Living in a most delightful Christian home, she forsook all, and gave herself up to labor for the degraded heathen. For several years she toiled on under great difficulties and persecutions, but she persevered and triumphed. She has now schools at Cairo, where nearly four hundred children are taught, and is directing numerous agencies for enlightening and saving the people.

—The London Christian World says of the request of American Presbyterians for a postponement of the Presbyterian Council: "It is a pity that America cannot spare some dozen of her leading Presbyterians to inaugurate a movement in this country of far more importance to the church at large than the Centennial celebration. Many delegates from various parts of the world have intimated their intention of being in Edinburg in July, when the meeting should take place, as arranged, or it may fall through altogether."

—At the last meeting of the Foochow Methodist mission, says the Heathen Woman's Friend, at which 7 missionaries, 11 ordained and 47 unordained native preachers were present, it was resolved to forbid altogether the practice of binding the feet of girls in families connected with the church. As the meeting represented a native Chinese membership of 2300 souls, the action is one of no little present and prospective importance. The presiding elders were made a committee to prepare a paper setting forth what native usages are allowable and what forbidden to Christians in connection with marriage and burial ceremonies.

—Mr. Narayan Sheshadri has succeeded in making his mission congregations at Ilam and Bethel among the most progressive in India. He not only works hard himself, but has the faculty of rousing those around him to do the same. Two bodies of workers are engaged in evangelistic labors. The one confines itself to Ilam and the neighboring villages, going over the ground again and again. The other body of laborers carries the gospel over a circuit of a hundred miles. Since his return from Europe upward of fifty converts have been added to the church. His people, formed into a home missionary society, support an evangelist of their own. The young converts, banded into a young men's Christian association, also send out an evangelist among those of their own age.

—Dr. Wilson, the great Free Church missionary, died at Bombay, the scene of his devoted and successful life-work, December 1. He entered the field in 1827, when only twenty-three years of age, in the service of the Scottish Missionary Society. "When, in 1843, that organization was broken up," says the London Evangelist, "he joined the mission presented at Bombay in connection with the Church of Scotland, and, as one of its agents, continued to labor till the disruption, when he threw in his lot with the Free Church. Dr. Wilson, in conjunction with some kindred spirits, founded the Free Church mission, of which he has ever since continued to be the head. Dr. Wilson was a voluminous author. He wrote many works specially conceived for the enlightenment of the followers of Zoroaster, and also various political and philological treatises."

During the month of January the contributions received by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions were nearly $100,000, and it is now hoped that the debt at the close of the year will not exceed $50,000. Dr. John Hall's church in this city gave over $30,000, the largest contribution ever given to that cause by a single church, and more than was received during the three summer months from all the churches. But that church has three very wealthy and liberal members, who give the larger portion of this amount. Two brothers gave $10,000 apiece; and Robert Bonner put down $5,000, saying that his first subscription was $5, and that he now felt a thousand times as able to give. We warrant that when Mr. Bonner gave that $5 he felt it. We remember his once saying, while driving a thirty thousand dollar team, that one of the greatest disappointments of his life was to be informed, when wishing to deposit $75 in a savings bank, that a two-dollar bill was counterfeit, which he had to go to work and make up by setting type. This same church has contributed this year some $25,000 to the Board of Home Missions, of which the two brothers above referred to gave another $10,000 each. Dr. Paxton's church, in this city, gave over $8,000 in its contribution to foreign missions, which should be doubled if, as is surmised, but not certainly known, a gift of some $30,000, divided between the several boards, came from a member of that church. The Board of Home Missions ended its last year with a debt; but that will in all probability be entirely avoided this year by shrinking to the amount of about $60,000 the appropriations made to the churches.—Independent.

Our Young People.

A LULLABY.

BY J. G. HOLLAND.

Rockaby, lullaby, bees in the clover
Crooning so drowsily, crying so low;
Rockaby, lullaby, dear little rover!
Down into wonderland—
Down to the wonderland—
Go, O go!
Down into wonderland go!

Rockaby, lullaby, rain on the clover
Tears on the eyelids bow over and weep
Rockaby, lullaby—beating heaven
Down on the mother world,
Down on the other world
Sleep, O sleep!
Down on the mother world sleep!

Rockaby, lullaby, dew on the clover
Dew on the eyes that will sparkle at dawn
Rockaby, lullaby, dear little rover!
Into the stilly world,
Into the lily world,
Gone, O gone!
Into the lily world gone!

Faith, Hope and Love.

FAITH.

I tell of faith? There was once a great storm, when for forty days the rain fell, beating out the life of plants and beasts and men; swelling the great sea till in pride it licked the sides of hills and swallowed mountains; yes, swallowed everything save the boat that floated safely on its bosom, because its rudder was God's hand. You know the story—how the dove was sent out upon the wide, wide waste of waters, and came faithfully back with the olive leaf, that token of fresh life and growth. You know the story—black and stormy at its beginning, and spanned with a rainbow at its close.

Well, as the dove was in the story, so is faith! Shut up in the ark of life we are, and God has closed the door that opens upon eternity. We hear its waves, dashing against the sides of the vessel, but they bear no knowledge of the great hereafter.

But the dove faith is within! Open the window—let it fly! With tireless wings it will go and come, bearing to us olive leaves from the trees of God's own purpose—leaves that are an earnest of a new and fresh creation that will rise from the waves, upon which we will step when God opens the door of our ark—the new earth of eternal life.

HOPE.

Let me tell of hope! Once there flowed a stream. Many mightier and clearer have flowed on to the ocean, yet none have ever performed so grand a function as this I tell of.

By its stood a man clothed in a robe of camel's hair. With solemn and grand look he stood, crying: "Repent ye, for the kingdom is at hand!" and baptizing those who came repenting of their sins. Multitudes were there, and among them came one to be baptized. He was clad in quiet dress, yet there was something about him that caused a strange feeling to pass through the hearts of at least two men who stood there; for one said to the other: "Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world!"

Meekly he stepped before the prophet whose trembling hands performed his office. You know this story too—how the voice was heard and the dove come down in radiance on his head. From that radiance hope was born. From the banks of that little stream it has floated on, mingling with every sunlight of every day, since then, baptizing every tree and flower and branch; gleaming in the icy bosoms of the Northern Pole, and making brighter, brighter the glory of the Southern Cross. It has gone to nations that sat in darkness, and they see great light. Hope! that hope that maketh not ashamed, for it has come to us from the radiance that rested on the brow of our Redeemer.

LOVE.

I tell a story of love. One day and that day came as all others the sun rose strong and glorious to begin his race; and at his coming flowers smiled, the cedars of Lebanon clapped their hands in praise to him whose mercy had given them another morning, while bird and beast went forth to receive food from the Hand that feedeth all. Not a quiver in nature told of any unusual pain.

The sun ran smiling on. His rays fell on the temple in Jerusalem, the Pharisee at the street corner, and the publican in prayer. He smiled on everything on the throng of people passing through the city gates, bearing One to be crucified. "Jesus" they called him a man who for three years had passed up and down the land doing good, and whose wondrous words and works well proved his assertion that he was the "Son of God." The sun still smiled as they lifted him, writhing, between the two sinners. His rays kissed the hair of the woman bowed low at the cross, the helmet of the soldier, and the robe of mocking Priest. He smiled on till the last cry cut the air and Christ was dead.

Then nature burst the bands of order, and broke into mourning at the death of her Lord!

Sun, well might your smiles blacken into frownings! And veil of the temple, well might you rend in twain! You had henceforth nothing to hide—the "Holy of Holies" lay dead on the cross.

From that riven side flowed, and still is flowing, love forever more.

When we reach heaven, I think, some day, while standing on the happy hills, God will cause the history of the world to pass in panoramic view before us; and as the various scenes pass suddenly will a cry arise from every soul: "O look! That is my day—the one marked with a cross—the day that taught the world what love was!"

Then, if anything like pain arise at the thought of what he suffered, it will be quickly dissipated as we turn to dwell in the smilings of his love eternal.

GOODWYN.

From Our Little Friends.

HENRYTOWN, LA., March 21, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: In reading the ADVOCATE I have noticed letters written by little children; and, thinking that you would like to hear from another little friend, I thought I would write. Well, I am kept busy most of the time studying and practicing my music lessons, working my flowers and attending to my chickens. We haven't any preacher this year, as this place was to be supplied, and you don't know how much I miss going to church. We had a very good preacher last year—Mr. Harper—and he was liked by every one. I was so in hopes that they would send him back this year. I hope that they will not forget us entirely, and that they will yet send us a preacher. Well, I reckon I have written enough for this time, so I will tell you good-by.

Your little friend,

NETTIE HAMMOND.

He Died for Me.

A traveler in one of the Southern States of America came one day to a newly-made grave. He saw a man smoothing the turf and planting flowers, while tears flowed freely from his eyes.

"You have lost, I suppose, a beloved wife?" said the traveler, accosting him.

"No," said he, "I have not lost a wife."

"Perhaps it is a dear child who lies buried there," said the stranger again.

"No," said the mourner, "I have lost no wife and no child."

"Why, then, are you planting these flowers on that grave, and weeping as you plant them?"

"I am doing this for one who died for me."

"But how was this?" said the traveler.

"I was called," said the mourner, "to serve as a soldier. I had a wife and children. A friend came forward; he said: 'I have no wife and no child. I will go instead of you.' He went, and was mortally wounded. Hearing of this, I went to the hospital where he lay. Ere I reached it he was gone; and here he lies buried. He died for me, and I plant these flowers in memory of his love."

Afterward a tombstone was set up, and on it were carved the simple words:

"HE DIED FOR ME."

Such is the love of man to man, of friend to friend. "Greater love hath no man than this: that a man lay down his life for his friend; but God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us." "Romans v, 8.

What will prove that Christ died for my reader? His quitting both his sins and his righteousness, and going to Jesus.

"The ransomed of the Lord shall return and come." Remember, reader, you must here be led to Jesus, or hereafter perish in your sins. Life Witness.

THE FOX IN THE WELL.—A wolf one day heard a strange noise in a well. He went to see what was the cause of it. He soon found out the cause, for there, deep down, was his old friend, the fox.

"Oh, my good friend," said the fox, "how glad I am to see you! I know you will do your best to help me out. You can soon get a rope or find out some way by which to save me."

"Poor fox! poor fox!" said the wolf. "It grieves me much to see you there. Pray, how did you get in? You were not so wise as you might have been, I think. Have you been down there a long time? I hope things are not quite so bad with you as you seem to fear they are. From my heart I wish you well, and hope to see you all right ere long."

"Nay, friend wolf, do not stand there and tease me with soft words when I am in so much need of help. Talk is cheap. Can you find means to get me out of the well? If so, will you? If you can and will, there is no time to be lost. If you can and will not, leave me. I may have done wrong, but you have no right to tell me so till you prove that you are my friend, by deeds as well as by words. If you wish me well, use me well. Were you in my place and I in yours, you would not thank me for kind words if my acts were not kind too."

Let us show our good will by helpful deeds rather than cheap words alone.

The crown of man's manhood is some insight or authority or knowledge that puts him above the ordinary plane of every-day things; he must take hold somewhere, spiritually or intellectually, upon the things of God.

"Why, Jennie, you look good enough to eat!" said a loving husband to his wife one morning at breakfast. "Well, I'm eating as fast as I can, ain't I?"

A Good Exercise.

Writers on health insist on exercise as one of the important means of restoring and of maintaining bodily vigor. Feeble women should walk much, dig in the garden, and keep the system stirred and braced by activity in the open air. Men condemned to desk-work and other sedeutary employments must ride or walk or row, or use the hoe and spade, if they would avoid sudden and premature breaking down. For people who have neither time nor opportunity for the development of muscle in practical and useful pursuits there are gymnasiums, the health lift, dumb bells, Indian war clubs, and a great many calisthenic devices. The ancients, especially the ancient Greeks, bestowed far more attention upon the subject of bodily exercise than the moderns. Physical education with them was a well-studied science, and its results were portrayed and made immortal in works of art. From bodily exercise we very naturally pass to the discipline of the mind, and then reach the climax in the moral and spiritual training of the soul. Exercise is the law of health and the condition of perfection in all.

To this last and highest kind of exercise the apostle refers when he declares in the presence of Felix and before his accusers: "And herein do I exercise myself: to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." A robust and healthy conscience is a most rare and desirable thing, and its possession is to be secured by careful and persistent training. Duties to God are first and supreme. His will is the star that guides, and every thought, purpose and action is determined by the single consideration of the divine approval. Duties to man fall in harmoniously with those we owe to God, and are comprehended in the rule of practice laid down by Christ: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets." There can be no good conscience where the practice does not come up to this precept. To be void of offense toward men there must be conformity to the golden rule. A life without offense of conscience is perhaps not to be found, and probably few, in the best periods of their religious profession and experience, would claim so much as entire freedom from self-condemnation. However this may be, the aim is thus high, and the effort constantly looks to this exalted standard.

The Christian certainly must drill himself in this manual, and continually strive to reach this goal of excellence. Paul seems to speak of himself as actually living with a conscience without offense. His words to the council were: "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day." The blood of Christ is represented as purging "the conscience from dead works to serve the living God;" and believers are exhorted to draw near, having their hearts "sprinkled from an evil conscience." "The end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned." Is not the attainment a possibility in view of such inspired declarations as these? Do not pardon and regeneration and a living faith put us in a state wherein we can make Paul's words our own, and even that more pointed and searching testimony which appears to be the utterance of all true Christians: "For our rejoicing is this, the testimony of our conscience: that in simplicity and godly sincerity, not with fleshly wisdom, but by the grace of God, we have had our conversation in the world." If religion does not rectify the conscience, and afford the grace to keep it good, what does it do for us? To have the heart sprinkled from an evil conscience must make it pure and good. The exercise which Paul declares—the discipline of self, the vigorous endeavor—this is the hint that explains the matter. He was ever careful of his conscience, he schooled himself to implicit obedience to God, and to the fulfillment of the law of love toward men. In order to do this, self must be crucified and many a rugged cross must be borne. There must be not so much as a shade of falsehood or dishonesty, nor a willing approach to the idolatry of covetousness.

When conscience gives way in the Christian, in ever so slight a degree, he is in danger of utter ruin. This is the beginning and the cause of the final downfall. The breach has been made in the neglect of religious duties, in the indulgence in sinful or questionable amusements, in seeking to save or gain by some slight departure from honesty. It is not long after the dyke begins to crumble before the entire barrier is gone, and the overwhelming flood sweeps everything in its course. The warning to Timothy is a warning to all Christians on this vital point: "Holding faith, and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith, have made shipwreck." Hymeneus and Alexander had gone to pieces on this rock, and thousands are ever drifting upon the same fearful and perilous breakers. Faith and a good conscience go together, and he who trifles with the tender and enlightened conscience which God has given him through the blood of Christ, and by the operations of the Holy Ghost, is already in the neighborhood of total spiritual shipwreck. It behooves Christian men and women to be careful in their business, in their recreations, in the use of their money, and in their tongues and tempers, lest this conservator and safeguard of their faith be crippled, and finally banished from the soul.

Does the care of conscience in our religious communities assume that prominence which the apostle gives it? Do they exercise themselves herein: to have a conscience always void of offense toward God and toward men? If conscience is at a low ebb in the world, perverted, and seared as with a hot iron, is it not also true that it has become enfeebled in the church, and as a distinctive function in the experience and conduct of the professed children of God? Here is a health lift for the soul which we would freely commend, because vouched for by inspired authority, and illustrated in one of the noblest Christian lives. Bodily exercise profits little—a little. It is well to run, wrestle, walk, ride and work, to quicken the circulation and to develop the muscle. But here is a gymnasium for the spiritual part, an exercise for the health of our faith, and to secure vigor and power in religion. He who would have a conscience void of offense in these days, and, for that matter, at any time since the father of lies has invaded our world, must exercise himself herein. He must wrestle with temptation and overcome it, he must deny himself at every step, and fight uncompromisingly against inward betrayal and outward assault. We would, if possible, turn the serious attention of Christian people in this direction. Let them exercise themselves—let them train themselves, let them practice and develop this element of conscience in their religious character. It will prove a tonic of wonderful effect, tracing and exhilarating especially to worldly and pleasure-loving professors, and to several other classes of the spiritually feeble and sickly.

Here and There a Gem.

Rev. Mr. Joyce, writing of New Orleans to the Western Christian Advocate, says:

Through the kindness of Dr. Daily, presiding elder of the Upper Coast district, I became acquainted with Ex-Gov. Warmoth, Gov. W. P. Kellogg and Lieut. Gov. Antoine, also Col. Field, the Attorney General, and Rev. M. Ample, secretary of the State Board of Education. Personally they are courteous, and in every way very pleasant gentlemen. I shall ever carry a sweet memory of the time I spent in their company. I knew that I utter the prayer of every Christian and true American citizen throughout the nation when I say: God hasten the time when all caste, social oppression and bitterness of feeling shall be driven from the land, and when peace, prosperity and harmony shall everywhere prevail, and men be loved, honored and promoted not because of position or color, but because of the very best quality of brains and heart.

Those of our readers who are acquainted with the character and record of some of the above-named bright and shining lights in the Radical firmament will appreciate the "sweet memory" which the writer carried away with him.

The Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at its recent session in Washington, was honored as follows:

On the evening of March 5 the President of the United States and Mrs. Grant entertained the Conference. The executive mansion was thrown open to them, and about two hundred preachers were present. Rev. James H. Brown, one of the old members of the Conference, addressed the President in a few eloquent remarks. Bishop Bowman offered a fervent prayer, and the preachers sang in good earnest, "All hail, the power of Jesus' name!"

Babcock, who was at the President's side at Round Lake, and at the Sunday school convention at Chautauque, and on almost all other devout occasions hitherto, is not alluded to, but he was probably about during the reception. It is not said that any mention of the third term was made in the Bishop's prayer. The prospect of re-election has not brightened since Bishop Haven exhorted the faithful to pray for it, and now the brethren may regard the desired consummation as past praying for.

Rev. Dr. Dashiell, missionary secretary, after his return from the South, spoke at the Preachers' Meeting in New York, in February. The Methodist reports:

The Rev. R. L. Dashiell, D. D., missionary secretary, addressed the Preachers' Meeting, January 31, concerning his visit to the Southern Methodist Episcopal Conferences. He represented the German work in the South as full of promise, and gravitating to the Methodist Episcopal Church throughout Texas and Louisiana. He pronounced the union of our white and colored work throughout the South as a serious mistake in policy. The colored people would prefer a separation of the work.

The doctor is sound on the color line. The fanatics may butt their heads against this wall for half a generation more, but the question will solve itself in time, and vindicate Dr. Dashiell's position, and of all who understand the subject.

German gravitation is another thing. The Western Methodist has a truthful comment on this:

This is putting it mildly—"gravitating." We have heard complaint from our officials about the fraternal manner in which Northern Methodists—Bishops and connectional secretaries—were dealing with our German members and churches. For ten years they have been making special efforts to tear our German work to pieces.

What gravitating there is is not much; but if money and all sorts of proselyting devices could have effected it, the disintegration and absorption would have been complete before this. If the good doctor had said, "We of the Methodist Episcopal Church are doing our best to break up the German societies of the Southern Church, and to tole them into our communion," he would not have been far from the truth.

Bishop Haven, writing to the New York Christian Advocate about New Orleans and the Conference over which he presided, relates this:

A presiding elder, known throughout the church, described the danger of traveling his district—told how his people did not expect him on account of the peril, but gladly welcomed his coming. Tears fell as he described these frequent massacres. A good man, formerly a leading member of the Legislature, was taken by masked murderers, and ordered to dismount, after they had carried him whither they planned. He knelt upon the roadside, prayed for his family, himself and his murderers. They filled his body with bullets, and for several days no one dared go near the corpse. At length several colored women and a man dug a grave where he lay, and covered him in. "Yet," said a white man and a political enemy—for this enmity is all political—"there was not a man in this county, white or colored, the equal of that man." This only happened last fall. That shirt is wet with fresh blood. While at Conference tidings came of like events occurring in that same locality, and this day I have received a letter saying one of our preachers dare not go to his work. The writer adds: "The parish to which I go to-day is fearfully disturbed. Still I shall go."

There is heroism for you: "Still I shall go." It is enough to say of this story that Bishop Haven vouches for it, and that a General Conference and a presidential election are at hand. We may look for a large increase of such items during the coming six months. Northern preachers and politicians cannot spare the bloody shirt. It is a necessary element in their appeals to the Northern public.

Letters to a Young Preacher.

MY DEAR NEPHEW: It is hardly necessary for me to declare the fact that my interest has grown in you since you took the solemn vows of a minister of the gospel of our Lord Jesus. It has been said that "blood is thicker than water," but there is something stronger even than blood. The sympathies begotten by the common hopes and fears, struggles and triumphs, sacrifices and toils of this ministry are more powerful than all the bonds of friendship and kindred. And because this is so I feel strongly moved to write you on certain matters that will greatly affect your success in your calling. As to your call to preach, and the determination to obey it through life, the duties of prayer, Bible reading and general study, of visitation and retirement, prudence with wicked men and females, the management of your own money, and that of the church—about these things, which make up the bulk of a preacher's conduct, I expect to say but little; if anything, because any man with a very small amount of common sense and an ordinary stock of intelligence can but have notions in the main correct on all these subjects. But most young men do not sufficiently understand that while these things, properly done, are indispensable to success, yet that they are not enough. Many a youth, as clearly distinguished by these marks of a general good character as you are, has entered this work with high hope, and been forced, after a few years, to retire, oppressed with the painful consciousness of having miserably failed. And yet he may not have seen that the cause of failure was not in the neglect of great things, but in inattention to small ones. I will not attempt to arrange these little things in any philosophical order, for I do not know that there is any such order in them. I do know, however, that common-sense people, in the church and out of it, believe they are all rooted in the spiritual nature and grow out of the inner life, and in valuing character very constantly and justly take them into consideration.

The first little thing to which your attention is called is your dress—by which is meant all your appearance as you are seen by the people. Now you may think the trimming of your beard and nails, the way you cut and comb your hair, the color of your pantaloons or cravat, are mere matters of personal taste, which can in no proper sense be regarded as exponents of character, and which, consequently, nobody has any right to interfere with. If this is your opinion, let me say that you are sadly mistaken; for they are in fact looked upon, by very sensible people too, as very truthful exponents of character. I know it is quite common, in these days, for young preachers of a certain class to deride, after the beecherizing style, "a decent regard to the opinions of mankind" as a cowardly cringing to power, and to talk largely about "the manhood of free thought," "the spontaneousness and liberty of the soul-life," "the natural, unrestrained expression of one's self," and the like—all of which, under the merest sophistry of glittering words, does nothing but give the widest range to meanness, vanity and corruption. Do not be imposed upon by this high-flown twaddle, nor imitate any one so brainless as to embody such stuff in his conduct.

Once a certain preacher said to another: "Bro. ——, I fear you are sending more souls to hell by your slovenliness than you are taking to heaven by your sermons." A severe speech, which seemed at first both cruel and false. But, knowing the man well to whom and of whom it was made, on mature reflection I concluded it was probably true; and yet he was the most profound and eloquent Christian philosopher I ever knew. When you see a young man with only his mustache or imperial growing, with his hair parted in the middle behind and before, or frizzed on his forehead after the fashion of foolish girls, making him look more like the inmate of a lunatic asylum than the occupant of a pulpit, a gold chain on his vest, big sleeve buttons on his wrists, his pantaloons and coat of many colors, like Joseph's, a cigar in his mouth, and a little stick in his hand—what do you think of such a specimen of spontaneous individual expression and liberated manhood? What does the world say of him? Why, the verdict of ninety-nine out of one hundred is that he is an individual spontaneous coxcomb, who, by often "beholding his natural face in a glass," is by that operation unfitted for "visiting the fatherless and widow in their affliction," and "converting sinners from the error of their ways." Foppishness, my dear nephew, like smallpox, is a disease of degrees, and like it, too, is loathsome in every degree. The case above described is of the confluent type, and cannot be mistaken; but, alas! there are many who inwardly are just as sick, though the outward marks are neither so numerous nor so well defined. Once at a Conference my eye happened to fall on a young man who had just joined (I will not say who he was, only he was not you.) His dress was plain black—altogether faultless; but his upper lip had just become fertile enough to sprout a delicate beard, the careful cultivation of which so entirely absorbed his mind as to leave no room for the grave matter at that moment before the body, under discussion. With his eyes raised about fifty degrees he sat, "rapt in the rage of his own ravished thought," as perfect a picture of self-satisfaction as you could wish to study. That darling mustache he stroked as tenderly as a young mother caresses her first-born, now on one side of the lip, now on the other, first with the right hand, then with the left, apparently indulging in a most delightful mental soliloquy on the subject of this expressive symbol of manliness, and so perfectly satisfied with the priceless wealth of this new possession as to be oblivious to every other interest.

"Not a wave of trouble rolled across his peaceful breast," "nor did he envy Elijah his seat." My eye is on that young man, and I have predicted (to myself) his failure unless he gets more sense about his dress. For, my dear boy, no sloven nor fop can see the kingdom of God. (That is not Scripture, but you can write it on the fly-leaf of your Bible, if you choose.)

Affectionately, etc.,

YOUR UNCLE JOHN.

Encouraging.

Bishop Pierce, writing to the Southern Christian Advocate, about his tour in Texas, says:

To encourage my brethren to preach at odd times, and in out-of-the-way places, I will relate an interesting incident: As I went to the Conference room the next morning I met a man on the sidewalk, who addressed me and said: "Did you ever see me before?" "I think not," said I. "Do you remember a man who asked you to preach one night at Uraldi?" "I recollect preaching there on somebody's invitation, but have forgotten who he was." "Well, I am the man. I was the leader of an infidel club; we met weekly to discuss religion and confirm each other in unbelief, and I asked you to preach, expecting to get something new and fresh for entertainment at our next meeting. The word you preached went through me like an arrow. I went to scoff, but left to pray, and found no rest till I was converted; and now I am a preacher and a member of this Conference, and have been for several years. I have longed to see you and to tell you this. I was wicked, dissipated and reckless, and would have been dead and lost but for the change begun that night."

The case was this: The stage stopped at Uraldi—a little frontier village—about sundown. I was asked to preach, and agreed to do so. We assembled in a small "upper chamber," about fifteen feet square, and it was full of people. I knew they seldom heard a sermon, and felt deeply interested to show them the way of salvation; but my main thought was to relieve myself of responsibility, and I hardly hoped for a gracious result as to others. The time, place and surroundings were all unpropitious. This was in 1859. Thank God, one soul was won to Christ and is now working in his vineyard. This man's story recalled another incident of the occasion. After service I sat down in the dark, on a bench under a large liveoak. Presently three young men came and sat down on another bench on the opposite side of the tree and began a conversation. One said: "Well, boys, I never expect to hear another sermon." The others expressed surprise. Said one: "Don't you like to hear preaching?" "Yes, I have liked it very much, but I am done." The rest remonstrated with him and demanded a reason. "Well," said he, "that fellow made it so plain to-night—I can see all the way through—I am afraid if I hear any of the rest of them I will get confused." He vowed he would try the journey with the light he had.

Pardon me—I have digressed. The Conference was a pleasant one and the reports of the work encouraging. The presence of three Mexican preachers added very much to the interest of the occasion. The Mexican Border district is full of promise. A genuine work of grace is in progress there. The field is white unto the harvest. More laborers are needed to enter the open doors. If the missionary treasury could respond to my call, two years' labor would make a grand report. This work on the circumference is yielding more converts than the work at the center from local and social causes. In the one there is a revolt from Catholicism, and Protestantism is embraced as another theory of religion; in the other the people become Protestants by a personal experience of converting grace. Both fields must be occupied—the ground broken, "the good seed" sown—the harvest will come.

On the Disruption.

The Richmond Christian Advocate contains an excellent notice of Dr. Myers' book. We quote from the article as follows:

We regret to see in Judge Fancher's review of Dr. Myers, in the New York Advocate, such stress laid upon terms in their merely formal relations. "Contract" there certainly was; if not in legal competence, in moral force. The South did not originate the movement. Delegates from Southern Conferences, helpless, at the mercy of an inexorable majority, plead for the salvation of Methodism in their territory. They asked for relief from the effect of Northern action. Northern men proposed this way of relief. It was accepted; and from the day of action upon the authority of the plan it became, before God and men, a "contract," with all the binding effect thereof, and between competent parties; and in the absence of either party the other had no power to dismiss or add thereto. Why did not the General Conference of 1848 take this position? Why did it repudiate the act of 1844, after the results of that act were irrevocably determined? Why assume the attitude of antagonism, rejecting fraternal relations and refusing compromise? Was it the dollars and cents involved? Probudor! We will not say it. Let them hold to their "constitutional" defenses, and explain for themselves the "difficulties existing between the two bodies" which prevented the reception of Dr. Pierce as fraternal delegate in 1848.

We are now asked to bury all these things. Did ever a nation or a church bury its history, except under compulsion of conquest and at the cost of its existence? These are the roots of the Church South as a distinct organization, and the only true and living links of connection with the Church North. Destroy them and what relations have we to the Northern Church? If we have any origin, what is it and where does it come into light? If we may not date back to a lawful and Christian severance of organic unity of Methodism in 1844, let those who, through their delegates at Louisville, proposed fraternal relations upon terms "equally honorable to both churches," show us our historic beginnings. We are not quite ready for relations which hold us to the attitude of criminals suing for pardon. We want nothing of our Northern brethren that will dishonor or humiliate them; we will concede nothing that involves our own dishonor.

We do not hesitate, in face of all this, to say that we regard the difficulties now existing in the way of fraternal relations as by no means insuperable. Wise, Christian treatment of the case by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, soon to hold its session in Baltimore, will result in satisfactory settlement, without impeachment of the honor of either church.

We are glad that Dr. Myers has brought together the entire action of our General Conference at Louisville upon the matter of fraternity. In all the discussions of the question we have seen no reference to the passage of the paper given on pages 201 11 of the "Disruption." Probably some acerbity of feeling and expression between the disputants and some misunderstanding among our Northern brethren would have been avoided had due attention been given to that proceeding.

The Norfolk Virginian says of the revival at Cumberland Street church:

One of the most extensive revivals of religion known for years in this city is now progressing at the Cumberland Street Methodist Episcopal church, under the ministrations of the pastor, Rev. E. M. Peterson. The meeting has only been in progress about two weeks, and for the past ten nights the altar and front pews have been crowded with penitents. The result, so far, has been the conversion of some forty persons, mostly from the average age of sixteen to twenty-five years. On last Sunday morning twenty-five of this number were admitted into church fellowship, some ten of whom received the ordinance of baptism by pouring. On Sunday night one of the largest congregations we have ever witnessed on the occasion of a revival assembled in the audience room of the church, the estimated number being from twelve to fifteen hundred persons. Many persons were compelled to leave, being unable to get even standing room. Rev. R. M. Saunders occupied the pulpit, preaching an earnest discourse from the text: "Behold, now is the accepted time! Behold, now is the day of salvation!" When the invitation was given for all those who desired salvation to come, large numbers from all parts of the spacious edifice pressed forward, and in a few moments the altar was crowded with penitents. Throughout the entire congregation a feeling of solemnity was manifested. This revival will probably last for some time.

Nelson & Phillips (Methodist Book Concern, New York) will publish a Daily Christian Advocate during the session of the General Conference in Baltimore, in May. The publishers in their announcement say: "It will furnish ample and reliable reports of every item of interest in the doings of the General Conference; also of the sermons and addresses of the distinguished fraternal representatives and visitors. It will print numerous pen-and-ink sketches of distinguished delegates, lay and clerical, and of fraternal representatives and visitors present; and will give a summary of the latest telegraphic news from all parts of the world received up to the hour of going to press.

"The first number of the Daily Christian Advocate will be issued at Baltimore on Monday morning, May 1, and the volume will close with the number issued on the day following the close of the session. The price will be $1.25, postage prepaid by the publishers. Address Nelson & Phillips, publishers of the Daily Christian Advocate, Baltimore, Md."

A GOOD SIGN.—Making restitution is one of the best evidences of repentance, and it is one that seems to be rare. The New York Observer says:

Five instances are known already of persons who, having been led by the influence of the meetings at the Hippodrome, are making restitution of what they have unlawfully taken from others. These are fruits meet for repentance, and there are many more that need repentance.

Fear is the mother of foresight.—Henry Taylor.

Books and Periodicals.

SERMONS PREACHED BEFORE THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD, CHIEFLY DURING TEN YEARS 1863-73. By H. P. Liddon, M. A. Boston: E. P. Dutton & Co., 1868.

We believe the third English edition of these sermons, published by Rivingtons, was noticed by us years ago. Like everything from the pen of Canon Liddon, these sermons are pure gold, and will live a long time in the religious literature of the English tongue. Among the topics discourse are: God and the Soul, The Law of Progress, The Freedom of the Spirit, Immortality, The Conflict of Faith with Undue Exaltation of Intellect, The Divine Victim. In all, ten sermons.

THE AUTOBIOGRAPHY OF A CRYSTAL IN THE FORMATION OF THE SOLAR SYSTEM. By Cyrus George Hamlin. Published for the author by J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, 1876.

The title page explains: "From the incremation of the sphere of purity in the heavens—the fall of Lucifer—dissolving of chaos and beginning of this resurrection, commonly called the creation of heaven and earth, to the expulsion of Adam from Eden." The autobiography of a crystal is far from being transparent, the story is anything but clear and intelligible to plain readers, and those who will may explore it for themselves. The volume is a large duodecimo, and contains only 383 pages of blank verse. For sale by Eyrich, New Orleans.

MOODY AND SANKEY. An authentic account of their lives and services. By Frank S. Reader. New York: E. J. Hale & Son, publishers, 1876.

This little volume gives an account of these noted evangelists down to their return from England. It gives their early history and late career, and makes a very readable and interesting work.

SERMONS, TRACTS AND DISCOURSES, by D. L. Moody. By Althe Clemens Morrow. New York: N. Tibbals & Sons, publishers, 1876.

A brief sketch is given of Mr. Moody's early associations and first missionary efforts, and of the tour of Moody and Sankey in Great Britain. The greater part of the volume is taken up with discourses and fragments. The work gives a very good idea of the character and labors of the noted evangelist. The frontispiece contains very handsome portraits on steel of Moody and Sankey.

On the Road to Riches is the title of a small volume by W. H. Baker. T. J. Brown, Eager & Co., publishers, Toledo. It contains hints to clerks and young business men, and abounds in sagacious counsel and advice.

The Southern Review, January, has but just reached us. Contents: 1. History of the Late War. 2. Mohammed and Mohammedanism. 3. Life and Times of John of Nepveld. 4. Heathen Persecutions of the Primitive Christians. 5. Niniemah's Greatest Artist. 6. The Perseverance of the Elect. 7. The Sun of Righteousness—a sermon. 8. Moody and Sankey. 9. True Greatness. 10. Notices of Books. 11. Miscellany. We have not had opportunity to do more than glance at the several articles. Our impression is that in the variety and interest of its topics and the manner of their treatment no prior number of the Southern Review has yet appeared.

We are in receipt of our Sunday School periodicals for May. Our Little People looks as bright and fresh as the first buds of spring; the Visitor is cheery and fragrant as flowers in bloom; and the Magazine is rich with the ripened fruit of thought and learning. The May numbers of these publications are excellent. Our schools and families should be liberally supplied with them.

The Aldine for April has the following beautiful engravings: Neuhausen, on the Elbe; Eve; Folding the Flock; A Park Scene; The Dolomite Mountain, Monte Christallo; Castle Weierberg; Austrian Tyrol; Girl in Bohemian Glass; The Virgin; The Infant Jesus and St. John the Baptist.

Favorite Songs is a new collection of music for congregations, Sunday schools, singing classes and conventions, with a complete elementary department. By H. R. Christie, assisted by T. H. R. Christie. R. M. Carroll & Co., publishers, Cincinnati. This is a work of great merit.

The April number of Wide West is beautifully illustrated, and its contents are fresh as spring flowers. Our young folks enjoy this periodical very much. D. Lathrop & Co., publishers, Boston.

We have received a copy of the printed minutes of the Florida Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church South. They are very handsomely printed by J. W. Burke & Co., Macon, Ga.

The American Agriculturist, for April, as usual, handsomely illustrated.

The Southern Cultivator for April has been received.

Drew Theological Seminary.

Among the financial failures that have recently taken place, probably no one, says the Western Christian Advocate, has caused more surprise and regret than that of Mr. Daniel Drew. He was one of the few millionaires who have sought to do good on a large scale while living, and this he certainly accomplished to the extent of handsomely founding one of the most successful theological schools of the Methodist Church, and indeed of the country. He also planned liberally for the endowment of the institution referred to, and for that purpose executed his bond for an ample sum of money at a time when his bond was at a premium. On that bond he paid interest regularly up to the end of 1875, and thus for nine years met all current expenses of the seminary. Recently his embarrassments have culminated in bankruptcy, and great anxiety has been felt to know the exact condition in which the institution, on which so many hopes have been centered, is actually left. We have good authority for stating that the beautiful and ample grounds of the seminary, with its complete outfit of buildings, are securely deeded to the trustees and held without any incumbrance, but the entire endowment is in jeopardy, if not wholly lost. A sudden emergency has therefore arisen, in which the church and its friends are called upon to supply what is now lacking, by first providing for the regular and vigorous continuance of the school, and then, in due time, endowing its several professorships.

A meeting of the trustees of the seminary has just been held, at which vigorous measures were adopted for the consummation of that plan, so that it is now officially announced that the institution will go forward, without interruption, in its regular work, and it is hoped, with increasing efficiency.

TO OUR AGENTS.

When subscribers pay, let us know at once. We are sending bills to subscribers; and if their payments to agents are not promptly reported bills may reach them for amounts already paid, but not reported to this office.

LOUISIANA SAVINGS BANK.—The vault of the above bank is one of the most secure we have ever seen. Those who have valuable papers and other valuables which they wish to keep safe from fire and burglars should call and examine this vault. We would, while speaking of this bank, call attention to the report of the condition of the bank at the close of business on the twenty fourth of March, to be found elsewhere in our columns.

EUROPEAN PASSENGER AGENCY. Messrs. A. K. Miller & Co., 6 Carondelet street, are agents for the Red Star Line and the Line of European steamers. Those who contemplate going to Europe this summer, or who may have friends coming out, would gain valuable information by consulting this agency. See the advertisement.

PERIQUE TOBACCO. We would call special attention to the advertisement of Mr. Edmond Bourgeois, the agent of the celebrated Bourne Perique tobacco. Mr. Bourgeois has long been the only authorized agent for the best manufacturers of this tobacco, and dealers can no doubt make their interests with him. His office is at 6 Carondelet street.

BUSH & LEVERT. We notice that Mr. Reuben Bush has been admitted into partnership in the above firm. The style of the firm will remain unchanged. Any of our friends who may have produce to ship or goods to purchase are advised to correspond with this house. See their card on this page.

MESSRS. NEVERS & HERY, at 315 Julia street, are prepared to fill any orders for lumber at reasonable rates. These gentlemen are successors to the old house of J. T. Pooley, for a long time known throughout this section. Builders and others needing lumber would do well to call and see prices.

WE KNOW of no better place in the city to buy shoes than at Louis Grinder's, 578 Magazine street. Parties at a distance from the city can take their own measure, and have their orders filled as well as if they were here in person to select. For particulars see card.

BATHS.—Mr. J. Klock calls attention to his Russian vapor baths, in to-day's paper. From this time on Mr. Klock will no doubt be liberally patronized. Our friends from the country will find his establishment at 102 Conti street.

SPRING GOODS.—A complete assortment of ladies' furnishing and fancy spring goods will be found at the store of W. H. Peters, Esq., 108 Magazine street.

FOR bargains in dry goods go to Brashear & Adams'. They are selling at auction prices.

F. R. HARDON.—Those in want of finishing latex and straw goods, etc., can do no better than by going to see Friend F. R. Hardon, 27 Charters street. This gentleman, from his long experience in the business, has made for himself an enviable reputation as a connoisseur in his line. His styles are not only correct, but are always embracing the very latest spring selections, which are such as to please the most fastidious tastes.

DRY GOODS.—The friends of P. W. Mohr, Esq., are advised to look at on the magnificent new spring goods now being received, and to be had low for cash. We advise those who want anything in the line to call early.

AT NAVRA & OFFNER'S China Palace, on Canal street, all articles of China and glassware can be procured at reasonable prices.

FOR dress goods go to Levy Bros., 580 Magazine street.

ANYTHING that will reinvigorate the body of man and expel disease from that system, the friendly visitor, a nurse walking bag of drugs, must be received as such the unpalatable dressing. Such an agent; we are told, is electricity. Those who are supposed to be competent, from long study and scientific investigation, to write on the subject, declare that "electricity forms one of the subtle essences of the principles of life. It is not that principle itself," and that "man cannot exist separated from electrical influence." They attribute all therapeutical effects, meeting every indication in the physical system where the sympathies tend to the nervous exhaustion, loss of vital forces, and all classes of nervous affections, diseases of the kidneys, lungs or abdominal viscera, to electricity has for years been applied as a therapeutical agent, but not in the manner of the application by the Pulvermacher Galvanic Chain Band, which in being worn, almost encircles the body at the interior portion of the spinal column, passing round the loins. The depot of the Pulvermacher Company is at No. 12 Union Square, New York, opposite the Washington monument.

A certain remedy for all Nasal Catarrh and Throat diseases, affording relief in some cases in a few minutes. For CATARRH it has proven the only known specific. RHEUMATISM yields to it, and CONSUMPTION if taken in season. ASTHMA, ROSE COLD, and HAY FEVER cured. Sent to any part of the United States, and Canada, on receipt of price, $5. A few inhalations will convince the most incredulous. A few inhalations will convince the most incredulous. PULMONARIA. Made of hard rubber, it may be carried in the pocket with as little inconvenience as a lead pencil or pocket knife, and is always ready for use. It is the only other inhaling tube and combination ever invented that can be used by the entire Medical Fraternity, and endorsed by the Standard Medical Journals of the world. Dr. George Hallock, Professor of Chemistry and Pharmacy in the University of Buffalo, in a carefully considered report upon its merits, says: "I do not believe words can be found which the Inhalant contains by me to accomplish its purposes by itself, to be the most simple, direct, and natural, to be philosophical in conception, and well carried out in the execution." Not to speak adverse or theoretical upon any of the difficulties stated, should be without this Inhaler. Patented in the United States, England and Canada. Over 2,000 in use. Send your address and receive our free illustrated circular and testimonials of hundreds of Physicians who have used it in their practice. We send Inhaler with Inhalant for two months' use, post paid by mail, for $5. Extra bottles of Inhalant, 50 cents. Sold by Druggists.

Making Butter.

First, there must be the right feed—grasses, or white clover, or other good feed.

The cow must be right; some will make soft, white butter.

There must be cleanliness throughout, from the milking to the eating of the butter, for milk, cream and butter are ever ready to absorb.

The temperature, for all that relates to butter-making, from the drawing of the milk from the cow till the butter is taken from the churn, should be about sixty degrees. Skim the milk, which must be kept in a pure atmosphere, and when it begins to get sour, churn immediately or soon after.

Churn rather slow, and take butter at once out of the churn, and as soon as gathered, churning more slowly as it gathers, so as not to hurt the grain, and keep in the butter-bowl only as long as is necessary, else there will be a wooden taste imparted.

Avoid all rooms, in the setting of your milk, that have smoke in them, or any odors; the milk is as sure to absorb as it comes in contact with them, and it will never give up an odor; neither will the cream or butter.

Salt to suit taste; or an ounce of salt to a pound of butter will do.

Work the butter slowly and carefully till the buttermilk is all out, then stop. It may be done with pure, cold water.

Butter made in this way is a new article comparatively; it is so much the more excellent than even the superior make that we get that it seems almost another thing.—Indiana Farmer.

STRAWBERRY CULTURE.—A very successful strawberry-raiser heart-unfeignedly gives the following as the essential requisites for the best success, and consequently, the most economical mode of management:

1. Clean, rich soil—one that is entirely free from weeds and its seeds, which has been subjected to perfectly clean culture for a year previously, either with a hoed crop or summer fallow. Buckwheat is found to be a good crop to precede strawberries.

2. Planting in spring, not in summer or autumn, and after the severe frosts have past, as they sometimes at that place badly injure newly-set plants.

3. Selecting good plants of the previous year's growth, that have not borne fruit, and keeping flower buds cut off season to year the first year. The plants are fifteen inches apart, in rows three feet asunder.

4. Horse-power for cultivating thoroughly, with small plow, cultivator, shovel plow, small round-toothed harrow, hoe, etc.

5. Plant in hills in the row not matted rows, with runners cut off.

6. Mulching with oat straw late in autumn, and raking it away into the spaces in spring, and not disturbing the soil till after the fruit is gathered. The first crop is always the largest and best, and hence only one crop is taken, which also obviates more laborious subsequent weeding. Wilson's is exclusively planted.

WEED OUT THE WEEDS.—Weeds are robbers. They steal the food ready to be used by the crops they infest, and kill them. When they take the means by which they live. Every weed is a pump taking water from the soil, which it pours out by the pores of its leaves. The earth gives more moisture, and the weeds suck it up; if it did not, they would be scorched to death by the sun, as they are when pulled from the soil and thrown on its surface. When they are beyond number they keep out the air and light, and the plants intended to be grown as a paying crop are weakly, sickly, spindling, and too often a failure. But some are so well satisfied to have the earth bring forth thorns and thistles that they don't trouble themselves or the thistles.

TO DESTROY CURRANT WORMS. A correspondent of the Country Gentleman gives directions how to prevent currant bushes from being destroyed by worms. The eggs are deposited on the under side of a tender leaf about the time the suckers of the currant bush are a foot high. When the eggs begin to hatch, the young feed on the juice of the leaf until they can crawl. Then, they drop down and scatter. Soon after the egg is deposited the leaf will turn a purple-reddish color. Such leaves should be plucked as fast as they appear, and hundreds of little creatures will be found. The microscope reveals them plainly. The leaves should be cut so carefully that none of the destructive insects be scattered.

THINNING FRUIT.—Among my native trees was one which yielded a large crop of small apples each alternate year. They were of a fine flavor but so small in size that they were worthless for marketing. To cause them to increase in size I thinned out the small branches after the fruit had formed, taking off about half the fruit. On gathering the apples from this tree in the fall I found them nearly double the size of previous years, and about the usual quantity in bushels. I also found the tree blossomed abundantly the ensuing season, and by picking off about half the fruit, when about the size of gooseberries, the tree yields fruit every year.—Maine Farmer.

Corn loses one-fifth by drying, and wheat one-fourteenth. From this the estimate is made that it is more profitable for the farmer to sell unshelled corn in the fall at seventy cents than $1 a bushel in the following summer; and that wheat at $1.25 in December is equal to $1.50 in the succeeding June. In case of potatoes—taking those that rot and are otherwise lost, together with the shrinkage—there is little doubt that between October and June the loss to the owner who holds them is not less than thirty-three per cent.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 30, 1875.

Mr. Ed. L. Hall, Sir: I have examined the sample of Crystal Polish & Powder left with me by you, with the following result:

I find it to contain no free chemicals, on which account it will not soil the hands, corrode or rot iron when applied to paint or impede the setting of putty, so frequently the case with many articles of the kind, and I have no hesitation in saying that it will not scratch, discolor or injure any article to which it may be applied. The particles are very fine, round and hard, which, with their angular shape, give it great value as a rapid and fine polisher. Yours truly,

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER.

THE MYSTERY,

Or, Turpler's Hair Tinct!

HARMLESS, BEAUTIFUL, PERMANENT.

This preparation has received the commendation of the scientific world, and where for introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. Now ready, a preparation of the hair's roots, not to injure the skin.

Will in one application impart a beautiful shade of color that will not wash off or fade by exposure to the sun, or effects of bathing. It is not a dye, but a chemical preparation, containing no lead, silver or other injurious ingredient. Its great recommendation is that it is not perceptible to the closest observation, and will not stain the skin. Only requires to be applied to the roots of the hair, and will color the hair in a few days, as it grows out. Will not injure the most delicate hair. Will not color the hands in applying. Will not stain anything it touches. Will not rub off. Will not fade by exposure to the sun. Will not fade by washing. Will not fade by bathing. Will not fade by any other hair dyes.

MEDICAL.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP.

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound. Its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Throat and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most efficacious in preventing that most awful scourge when timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, its truly extraordinary medicine has over most compounds of the same purpose, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children.

It requires no particular diet. All is about the best, and only because the bottles contain more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without ferment-ing, and it can be used in families whenever required by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night may take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a good night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three to four hours. For sale by

A. CARROUCHE,
Agent for New Orleans, 30 Charles St.
And by all druggists.

How Miracles are Manufactured.—The English Independent relates the details of a case which was recently tried before the Civil Court of Brlessnch, in the Grund duchy of Baden, and which gives an insight into the priestly artifices by which some pretended marvels and miracles are produced. It seems that a Belgian priests had been exhibiting a young woman, named Louise Lateau, as a "stigmatic"—that is, one bearing on her body the marks of the wounds received by our Savior in his crucifixion. This young woman, however, as taken ill, and, being at the point of death, the priests were desirous of having another "stigmatic" to supply her place. The methods which they resorted to were revealed by the trial before the Civil Court of Brlessarh, the circumstances of which are reported as follows: At the trial Miss Hauser, a young lady, related to her parents and her physician that several priests had induced her to wear a tight rope round her loins as a sure means of pleasing the Deity. When on the brink of the grave by this constant torture, an attempt was made to cup her feet and produce "stigmata." The skin being filled with blood by the pressure exercised by the rope, this cupping, according to medical opinion, would be sure to produce prolonged bleeding. One of the two priests concerned in this affair, and mentioned by the young lady in her confessions, brought an action for libel against the physician who had published the story. The action, however, was withdrawn previous to trial. A little later the other priest left the girl for telling the physician falsehoods at his expense. The case on trial, and, ending in the acquittal of the young lady, virtually in a judicial corroboration of the alleged attempt to produce another case Lateau." During the trial counsel for the crown expressed regret that the priests could not be prosecuted without the consent of the young lady, which he had failed to obtain.—Christian Intelligencer.

A sister of tobacco asked an old colored woman, the fumes of whose pipe were annoying to him, if she thought she was a Christian.

"Yes, brudder; I 'spects I is."

"Do you believe in the Bible?"

"Yes, brudder."

"Do you know that there is a passage in the Scriptures which says that nothing unclean shall inherit the kingdom of heaven?"

"Yes, I've heard of it."

"Well, Chloe, you smoke, and you must not enter the kingdom of heaven, because there is nothing so unclean as the breath of a smoker. What do you say to that?"

"Why, I 'spects to leave my breff behind when I go dar."

A New London connoisseur of liquor, understanding that rum improved by being sent to sea, intrusted a cask to an old captain, who did return for three years, when the Londonite found that all the rum had been absorbed. Affectionately seizing the sailor's hand, he warmly gave thanks, saying: "Can you forget your goodness in bringing back my cask?" Never, never!"

Cumming, in a recent sermon, said some time ago he preached a sermon on the doctrine that people in heaven would recognize those whom they had known on earth, and find pleasure in conversing on events which had happened to them in this world. At the close of the sermon the Queen thanked him for the comfort his discourse had afforded her.

The habit of always being employed is a great safeguard through life, as well as essential to the culture of every virtue.

A CARD.

Our Friends and the Public:

Efforts are being made to create a collusion between rival ferrying laws having monopolies about to expire, and having received from some of our patrons throughout the South and West a number of letters of kindly interest and sympathy we think it due to this community to correct any false impressions that may be entertained by friends or customers, especially those outside of the city, who are not advised of the exact nature of the charges made.

Our charges embrace only technical freight, such as keeping of ofrbooks, and are such as could be brought against any business house dealing in goods subject to revenue tax.

We have not been educated with defrauding or aiding and abetting the government of its just dues.

At a proper time we will be able to vindicate our course, and establish our entire innocence of wrong-doing us.

COUNTRY ORDERS.

1876.—SPRING.—1876.

PARTIES RESIDING IN

Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas,

AND ADJACENT STATES, WHO BUY THEIR

DRY GOODS FOR CASH

Are invited to send to us for samples, which will be forwarded to them

FREE OF COST AND POSTAGE PAID

and where we are favored with orders that exceed $10 the Freight Thereon will be Prepaid at our Expense. Where the order exceeds $20 we will Pay the Cost of sending the money to us, whether by Express Money Order, Registered Letter, Bank Draft or otherwise.

The new postal law permits parcels weighing four pounds or less to be sent by mail, at the rate of one cent an ounce, so that parties ordering less than $10 worth can have their purchases sent to them through their postoffices at a very slight expense. Parties sending to us for samples should be careful to write their names and addresses as plainly as possible, and where they desire packages sent by express they should make provision for the postage, unless the order exceeds $10, when it will be forwarded at our cost. The Postage on Parcels must be Prepaid.

Goods sent C. O. D. to all points where the Express Company of Packets have Agencies.

As a Matter of Accommodation we will purchase articles outside of our line, which are confined to Fancy and Staple Dry Goods, but we do not pay the freight thereon unless the order for Dry Goods exceeds $10. For instance: If a party orders a piece of cotton, $6, and a hat, $4, the order would not be entitled to have the freight paid by us; but if the order was for a piece of cotton, a dress pattern, $5, and a hat, or any other article not in our line, $10, the freight would be prepaid on the whole. We make no charges for purchasing articles to a limited extent, and always do the best we can for our patrons.

Articles not corresponding to order can be Returned at our Expense.

Should we not be able to fill the order the money will be Returned at our Expense.

We make no charge for Cases, Baling, Strapping, Drayage or Insurance.

All orders should be addressed to the firm to insure prompt attention.

The personal attention of one of the partners given to country orders.

We have been in the business more than

TWENTY YEARS,

and the steady yearly increase affords a gratifying record of Fair Dealing, to which we refer with pride. We are already beginning to receive

THE BOYS.

BY OLIVER W. HOLMES.

Oh, "the boys" that used to make
The tables ring with noisy follies"
Whose deep-lung'd laughter 'd 'would shake
The ceiling with its thunder-volleys"?

Are the youths with lips unshaven,
And beauty's feet unwrinkled suitors,
Whose honorless reach Iraillion's morn—
The days of prehistoric bitors.

The boys" we knew—but who are these Whose heads might serve for Plutarch's sages
Fox's martyrs, if you please,
Or heroines of the diseinal ages"

The boys" we know—can these be those?
Their cheeks with morning's blush were painted,
Here are the Harrys, Jims and Joes

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 6.—Ten thousand persons attended the anti-Chinese convention. Gen. Irwin was made president. The resolutions recite the evils flowing from Chinese immigration, and, local measures for relief failing, the only recourse was appeal to the treaty-making power. A delegation was ordered to Washington to urge immediate action. A platoon of police were stationed around Chinesetown during the meeting.

The Chinese have purchased weapons largely. The city is quiet.

ALEXANDRIA, April 6.—Bishop William Johns, of the Protestant Episcopal diocese of Virginia, died at five o'clock last night, at the Theological Seminary, near here, in his eighty.

MEMPHIS, April 8.—Latest reports from below state that the overflow extends seventy miles up the Arkansas and one hundred and thirty miles up White river, while in front of this city it extends to Madison, forty miles.

The sharp decline at St. Louis and Cairo to-day caused rejoicing among planters. Comparatively few have suffered any serious damage as yet, except on the corn which was planted.

NEW YORK, April 6.—A. T. Stewart died to-day, of inflammation of the bowels. The death of Mr. Stewart took place about 4 P. M. He had been sinking rapidly during the morning, and his medical advisers and the few of his friends who were allowed access to his residence had given up hopes of his recovery. The utmost quietness was maintained, door bells being muffled and the servants were kept in front of the house to answer the questions of visitors.

As soon as the rumor of his death gained circulation the number of callers was quite enormous, most of them coming in carriages, and inquiring hurriedly and anxiously whether the rumor was true. Very few were allowed admittance into the house. By three o'clock several hundred persons had congregated in front of the house, talking of Mr. Stewart's death, his wonderful business success, and his probable wealth. His death has taken most people by surprise, because up to this morning no symptoms of his disease were noted of a alarming character. Judge Hilton, his long-trusted business adviser, had principal charge of Mr. Stewart's affairs, and was present when he died.

GALVESTON, April 10.—A Brownsville special to the Galveston News says:

The taking of Matamoras, one week ago to-day by the Diaz party, and placing them in possession of the whole Mexican border, leaving few or no Federal troops nearer than Monterey, causes a dearth of military news. Diaz maintains the strictest order within the city."

MEMPHIS, April 10.—Reports from Helena and Chicot, Ark., state that considerable damage has been done there by the flood. Planters are using every exertion in that region to protect levees which are still standing. The report of a decline of seven inches at Cairo to-day gives the assurance of an early decline here, and we hope that the water will soon be off the cultivated lands and enable planters to make crops.

FOREIGN.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Brazil, April 5. The Minister Hevelius, with the Emperor of Brazil on board, arrived here yesterday afternoon, and sailed direct for New York, where she is due on the fifteenth.

HAVANA, April 5.—The English steamer has arrived from Vera Cruz, bringing advices from Mexico to March 30. The reports are widely conflicting. It is stated that declarations of martial law have retarded the progress of the revolution in many States, but Oaxaca continued in possession of the insurgents. Gen. Alatorres' movements are so far proved fruitless.

Gen. Escobedo was at Queretaro. He had placed three thousand regulars at the disposition of the Federal government, and offered three thousand more within a fortnight. The number of persons in arms against the government throughout the country is estimated at ten thousand.

The rural police attacked and dispersed a large assemblage of persons who had met in the neighborhood of the capital to rejoice over the revolution. A hundred of the rebel sympathizers were killed.

The surrender of Rocha is confirmed. The Isthmus of Tehuantepec, with the exception of Juchitan, was in the hands of the revolutionists.

Work on the Central railroad in Nuevo Leon had been suspended. Travel on the railroad from Vera Cruz to the city of Mexico was almost entirely stopped in consequence of the damage done the road by the insurgents.

Gen. Ibaeza had recaptured Tehuacan, and was pursuing the revolutionists who interfered with the railroad.

Families which arrived at Vera Cruz from the United States for Mexico had returned in view of the state of affairs.

The Diario (official organ of the government at the capital) declares that except in the States of Oaxaca and Vera Cruz the peace in the country is only disturbed by small bands of malcontents, who have no decisive plan of action.

The Review asserts that the present troubles are mainly due to the influence of the church party. Parties in opposition to the position of the government are divided; some proclaim for Diaz, but the majority of the opposition seem to have no chief in view.

The Trait d'Union says commerce is paralyzed in consequence of increased taxation. Prices of all kinds of merchandise have risen fifteen per cent. It complains that the country is moving more and more toward barbarism.

MALTA, April 6.—The Prince of Wales and suite have arrived here on their way to England.

VIENNA, April 8.—During the truce the Turks concentrated twenty-five battalions near Trebinji and received two ship loads of reinforcements.

Northern Herzegovina, which has been quiet some time, is now full of insurrection. Bosnia is in revolt, and Turkey was never so seriously threatened.

ROME, April 10.—Garibaldi accepts the donation of one hundred thousand livres offered him by the nation and King. The gift will enable him to cooperate in the work for the improvement of the Tiber. He applauds the King's fidelity to the constitution in recently changing the ministry.

In Memoriam.

THE GRAVES OF THE CONFEDERATE DEAD.

The day set apart for the decoration of our beloved dead, this year comes upon the anniversary of the battle of Shiloh. It is now fourteen years since that great battle occurred, in which so many of our brave soldiers from this city and State participated. It is impossible to comprehend the wild excitement which pervaded the whole city as telegram after telegram was received, giving news of the varying results of the battle on the first and second days, and giving the names of the killed and wounded.

There was not a home nor family in New Orleans on that day which had not some dear one among those on the battle field. But we pass down from the memories of the past to the commemorative tributes of the day. Among those tributes none were more striking than the magnificent wreath placed by members of the Washington Artillery upon the tomb of the Confederate dead, and the beautiful basket of flowers placed by the fifth company of the Washington Artillery at the tomb of Capt. Cuthbert H. Slocumb, beloved alike by those who served under him and over him—beloved alike as a brave and good citizen.

The wreath of the Washington Artillery adorned the northern slope of the green mound over which towers the sculptured soldier of the Confederacy, the noble cenotaph to the everlasting remembrance of the dead heroes of the lost cause.

The three remaining slopes were also strewn with the floral tributes of regard for the memory of the mighty dead, for the careful hand of woman, which not only guards the cradle, but makes beautiful the grave of man, was not neglectful of this hallowed spot.

On the southern side, amid the white glory of chrysanthemums, were inscribed the words, "Our Patriots," and upon a scroll beneath, "Not Forgotten."

An evergreen wreath, simple tribute of respect, the offering of the Boys' House of Refuge, was laid upon the adjoining slope.

In other cemeteries the commemorative decorations were displayed, and the day observed with more than usual propriety.

But not the sweetest, fairest flowers of spring nor embalmed scrolls can express the fullness of that tender regard for the memories of the sacred dead which abides forever in the heart of hearts of the people of the Southland.—New Orleans Picayune, April 7.

A lady in Halifax having occasion to visit a milliner's shop, had her attention attracted by a beautiful and very expensive French bonnet, and inquired the price. She was told it was sold. "Oh, I had no idea of buying such an expensive bonnet," said the lady; upon which the milliner said: "It is a joint stock bonnet—that is, it belongs to three factory girls, who wear it by turns on Sunday."

The recent census gives these figures: New York, 1,050,000; Philadelphia, 800,000; Brooklyn, 507,000; St. Louis, 450,000; Chicago, 410,000; Boston, 300,000; San Francisco, 250,000.

Is there a word in the English language which contains all the vowels? Unquestionably.

The Heavenly Railroad.

In traveling we often meet with persons of different nationalities and languages. We also meet with incidents of various character, some sorrowful and some joyful and instructive. One of the latter character I witnessed recently while traveling upon the cars. The train was going west, and the time was evening. At a station a little girl about eight years old came aboard, carrying a little budget under her arm. She came into the car and deliberately took a seat. She then commenced a strange scrutiny of faces; but all were strange to her. She appeared weary, and, placing her budget for a pillow, she prepared to try to secure a little sleep. Soon the conductor came along, collecting tickets and fare. Observing him, she asked if she might lie there. The gentlemanly conductor replied that she might, and then kindly asked for her ticket. She informed him that she had none, when the following conversation ensued. Said the conductor: "Where are you going?" She answered: "I am going to heaven." He asked again: "Who pays your fare?" She then said: "Mister, does this railroad lead to heaven, and does Jesus travel on it?" He answered: "I think not. Why did you think so?" "Why, sir, before my ma died she used to sing of Jesus on the heavenly railroad, and you looked so nice, and talked so kind, I thought this was the railroad. My ma used to sing of Jesus on the heavenly railroad, and that he paid the fare for everybody, and that the train stopped at every station to take people on board. But my ma don't sing to me any more—nobody sings to me now—and I thought I would take the cars and go to her. Mister, do you sing to your little girl about the railroad that goes to heaven? You have a little girl, haven't you?" He replied, weeping: "No, my little dear, I have no little girl now. I had one once, but she died some time ago and went to heaven." Again she asked: "Did she go over this railroad, and are you going to see her now?"

By this time all the passengers in the coach were upon their feet, and most of them were weeping. An attempt to describe what I witnessed is almost futile. Some said: "God bless the little girl!" Hearing some say she was an angel, the little girl earnestly replied: "Yes, my ma used to say that I would be an angel some time."

Addressing herself once more to the conductor, she asked him: "Do you love Jesus? I do, and if you will love him he will let you ride to heaven on his railroad. I am going there, and I wish you would go with me. I know Jesus will let me into heaven when I get there, and will let you in too, and everybody who will ride on his railroad—yes, all these people. Wouldn't you like to see heaven and Jesus, and your little girl?" These words, so innocently and pathetically uttered, brought a great gust of tears from all eyes, but most profusely from the eyes of the conductor. Some who were traveling on the heavenly railroad shouted for joy. She now asked the conductor: "May I lie here until we get to heaven?" He answered: "Yes, dear, yes." She then asked: "Will you wake me up then, so that I may see my ma, your little girl and Jesus? for I do so much want to see them all." The answer came in broken accents, but in words very tenderly spoken: "Yes, dear angel, yes. God bless you!" "Amen," was sobbed by more than a score of voices.

Turning her eyes again upon the conductor, she again interrogated him: "What shall I tell your little girl when I see her? Shall I say to her that I saw her pa on Jesus' railroad—shall I?" This brought a fresh flood of tears from all present, and the conductor kneeled by her side, and embraced her and wept. The reply he could not utter. At this juncture the brakeman called out: "H——s." The conductor arose and requested him to attend to his (the conductor's) duty at the station, for he was engaged. This was a precious place. I thank God that I was a witness to the scene, but was sorry that at this point I was obliged to leave the train.—Christian Expositor.

Besides their 120-foot plank, the Oregonians have made up their minds to exhibit at the Centennial a section of a fir tree 7 feet and 6 inches in diameter, 130 feet from the ground, and a section of another fir 5 feet through, 200 feet from the ground.

Letter from Oregon.

HARRISBURG, ORE., March 21, 1876.

MR. EDITOR: Your paper to us in this distant field of labor is "as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land," or as sweet rest to a way-worn soldier after a hard day's march. We seldom quit a copy till its well-timed "leaders" and miscellaneous matter are pretty well discussed. Some of its columns are really better sermons than we find in some big sermon books. Its correspondence is quite entertaining, particularly that from members of your own Conference. Its church news, obituary notices, and even the advertisements, are all interesting, because they come from our own "sunny South," where we have many dear faces and hearts who love us still, though far away, and where, too, we have loved forms—shadowy forms—sleeping in the dust of the earth.

It seems to us that there never was a land so dear as your own fair Louisiana. Even its swamps, crooked bayous and gray moss have an increasing charm. Oft, in waking and sleeping dreams, do we by some mysterious transit or other find ourselves in your very midst, mingling again with the friends of other days—at old Moreau, with Capt. R. L. Robertson, Dr. Adams and others of that worshiping assembly we once knew. Sometimes these dreams find us at Floyd and Delhi, at Pleasant Hill and Mansfield, mixing with those dear people as of yore, and partaking of their generous Christian hospitality. And when we arouse from this state of vision we are sure to ask ourselves in a low, quiet ye' feeling way: Shall we meet you no more on this side of the river? No more till this dream of life is past, and his jewels are gathered from the desolated fields of earth? No more till we meet at the throne of judgment? We cannot well bear to indulge this thought beyond certain limits. "Hope springs eternal in the human breast." We see by your last papers that two old friends of other days have gone "to that bourn whence no traveler returneth"—Bro. Keller, of Carroll parish, at whose house the "man of God" was a welcome guest; and Miss Josephine Wynn, of St. Landry parish, as sweet, gentle, loving spirit, who hath accomplished her brief stay in this dark valley of pain, and now hath gone up to heaven. And thus the angel reapers are busy gathering the harvest of earth as fast as it ripens.

We rejoice in the erection of a new Southern Methodist Episcopal church in your midst—the St. Charles Street—and Dr. Munsey as its pastor. Bro. Rayne has done a noble work for Christ as well as for Methodism, in your city, and may he be permitted to live many years, with health and sight restored, to go in and out in the worship of Israel's God.

The long winter of this land is still upon us—seized upon us last October, and still holds on. It is one of the dark shades of this otherwise beautiful Pacific coast. True, we have not had much cold weather; but the rain has fallen almost constantly since about the middle of October last, and is still unexhausted. Everything, of course, fowls, houses, fields, cattle, horses, people, roads, and religion itself is in the mud and water. We have not one good hole, and we have not been outside of it this winter, though we have ridden many long and weary miles; but one storm, which commenced last fall and still storms ahead. Of course there has been an unusual amount of sickness, and much of it quite fatal. In the Methodist Episcopal church at Brownsville, only a few miles from this town, there were, several days ago, as many as three dead bodies at one time awaiting the performance of the burial service. One of these bodies was that of the preacher of the church. The most prevalent and fatal disease is diphtheria, which has been epidemic this winter, after an absence of many years. The health of the country is now improving. When this valley is as well drained as southern Louisiana the health will be greatly improved.

Preachers, because of these long, wet winters, followed in due time by long harvests, have less opportunity to get at the people in full congregations than any country I have yet seen. The rainy season is not less than six months long, when but few can go to church outside of the towns, and not a great many in them. The planting-time comes up amid the rains of spring, when there is a great rush to get in the crops before these rains cease, after which a rest of two or three months sets in, when we can expect only dry weather. A part of this season is spent in camp and basket meetings, which in your Conference would be called failures in the result. These meetings are forced to give way, first, by the hay harvest, followed by the grain harvest, when the great headers, which cut off only the head of the stalk, are put in motion. This is followed by the wood harvest, when the wool is hauled for the year. These different harvests are rushed ahead with great and undagging zeal till all is done; so that, when they do not labor on the Sabbath, the men and horses are either a long distance off, or they are so overcome by dust and labor that they have but little spirit left to go to church; and the congregations are scant. A preacher, therefore, cannot expect full churches more than about three months in twelve. This, of course, is quite disheartening; and yet we have some noble Christian spirits in Wilkonette valley, whom we are learning to love for their work's sake. Only a few hours ago several of them dropped in upon us with a big basket full of bundles, and arms loaded too—all for wife and the little ones. It was a surprise to us. Ere they left they said that their work was not yet done. And they are members of other churches. God bless them!

JAMES E. BRADLEY.

We will not comment upon the failure of Daniel Drew last week, says the Methodist, because we wish not to speak carelessly of his relations to the theological school that bears his name. We now know that he has contributed $52,000 to Drew Seminary, at Madison, N. J. Here are the items:

These are actual cash outlays, and aggregate the largest sum contributed by a Methodist to any one educational purpose. It is to be regretted that Mr. Drew has not been able to complete his work. The seminary holds his bonds for $50,000, and the punctually-paid interest on this sum has hitherto met the salaries of the professors. But this unexpected and painful loss ought not to make us overlook the large benefactions which have built up Drew Seminary, nor other large donations to educational purposes. We ought to say, parenthetically, that the largest of Isaac Rich to Boston University is estimated at not less than one million, but it has not yet been converted to use—will be turned over to the university in 1882. Mr. Vanderbilt is, we believe, a Methodist brother-in-law, and his gifts to the university at Nashville amount, we believe, to $700,000 cash.

THE HIPPODROME SERVICES.—Epitome, &c.—The work in connection with the evangelistic services at the Hippodrome, says the New York Observer of April 6, goes on with undiminished interest and a new impulse and much wider influence has been given to it during the past week by the Christian convention, which occupied Wednesday and Thursday. Even were the converts as the immediate result of these services, not numerous, the testimony for the truth of the gospel and the reality and importance of religion as a personal thing would be worth far more, in such a city as this, than all expenditures of time and labor and money. The question has been forced upon every citizen and every stranger in the city. What mean these eager crowds that throng the streets in the vicinity of the Hippodrome, and throng the building day and night? And then it is true that thousands have been hearing the gospel who have not heard it statedly for years before. And great numbers it may be thousands have been hopefully born again through the instrumentality of the truth so simply and faithfully proclaimed by the evangelists, and brought home to the heart in the inquiry-room. And hundreds, if not thousands, of ministers are learning to preach the gospel anew—with fervor and simplicity and directness.

The New York Observer of March 30 says: "There has been no abatement in the interest, or in the numbers at the services in the Hippodrome. The noon-day prayer meeting is attended by thousands, and the afternoon and evening services draw eager crowds to hear the word of life. Each evening, within a short time from the opening of the doors, every seat is occupied, and for half an hour before the regular service the vast audience sit in perfect order and listen to the singing of hymns by the choir, occasionally joining in the chorus."

A Brashear editor offers a reward of $5 for the best treatise on "How to Make Out-Door Life Attractive to the Musquito."

The Bishop of the Blue Ridge.

The Richmond Christian Advocate gives us the following interesting account of a local preacher:

The Bishop of the Blue Ridge is Baily—George W. Baily. This model mountain missionary is probably in the apostolic succession. His manner of life seems of kin to their ways. The simple story, "his experience" to be given presently, has a flavor of the pioneer age.

He is a local preacher, and under the rule could not come into the Centennial Conference Group, but his character and services made him a member "by brevet." The Bishops will welcome to the picture the preacher whose parish is on the peaks of the Blue Ridge, and whose pastoral visits follow bear-trails. Baily is there—the sturdy, grizzly hair, ruddy, rugged face, and the honest eyes.

The bit of autobiography coming now is as innocently told as the prattle of a child, and is left in his idiom:

"On the eleventh day of October of 1845 I professed faith in Christ, under the preaching of Rev. Jeremiah McMullen. I joined the church. They made me the leader to four classes. I couldn't read a word. I never had but twenty-seven days' schooling. I had a wife and five children, and had to work all day. I learned to read of nights. Bro. Samuel Moorman was the elder on the district that gave me license to exhort. This was in 1849. As leader and exhorter I was as faithful to my calling as I well could be. I held class meetings and prayer meetings every Sabbath, if the circumstances would let.

"In 1853 I was licensed as a local preacher. I have labored as such ever since. That was twenty-three years ago. I have preached every Sunday except ten—I was sick one Sunday. The nine others were very bad days, not fit for folks to go out. I have walked fifteen miles to my appointment and back again on Sunday. The work was hard. I traveled in the mountains all the time. I am glad to go into the mountains to preach. Some never saw a preacher before in their life. The poor people get the gospel up there and they are glad. I have to work with my hands for my support. I am not laboring to lay up treasure. The board allows three hundred. They can't do better, and I want to preach to the people along the ridge. Some of them in places haven't heard of the gospel yet. My brethren, pray to God to help us get the gospel to them. I shall work among them as long as I live. The people in the Piedmont are dear to me. When I have done what I can for them I want to be buried among them. They may see the place and think of something I said that was good for them.

"In the twenty-three years as a local preacher I baptized near nine hundred, and married four hundred. My eyes have seen sixteen hundred converts from satan to Jesus.

"I ought to write how I am getting on, and the work too, but I don't know how to write for everybody to see in the church paper; so excuse the mistakes, Bro. Lafferty, if you please, sir.

G. W. BAILY."

A WORD FOR RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS. The Southern Churchman says: "We do not hear a great deal of our new Illinois Bishop. We take for granted, therefore, he is doing the work God has given him without much ado, or finding fault with his brethren and trying to make them 'stepping for a word.' But we see one sentence of his going the rounds, worth quoting: 'It is a recognized fact that no agency not strictly ecclesiastical is better adapted to excite and augment the interests of the people in the work of the church than a paper, spreading before the parishes a monthly photograph, as it were, of the progress of the church, and of the wide field that remains to be occupied.' We think this a sensible remark, and we hope our readers will agree with it. Our Baptist cotemporary in Richmond publishes a letter, in which we read: 'Please find inclosed forty-one names, representing a church membership of one hundred and forty-four.' While the circulation of this paper is larger than ever before, we think the clergy would be of service to their parishioners if they got this paper into every family of their charge. Suppose they begin at once, and let us hear from them."

STOPPING ITS PULSE.—Says Mrs Spurgeon: "There is not a Christian beneath the scope of God's heaven from whom I am separated. At the Lord's table I always invite all Christians to come and sit down and commune with us. If any man were to tell me that I am separate from the Episcopalian, the Presbyterian, or the Methodist, I would tell him he did not know me, for I love them with a pure heart fervently; and I am not separate from them. This begins rather hard on our strict-communion Baptists. I should not like to say anything hard against them, for they are about the best people in the world; but they really do separate themselves from the great body of Christ's people. They separate from the great universal church. They say they will not commune with it; and if any one comes to their table who has not been baptized, they turn him away. The pulse of Christ is communion; and woe to the church that seeks to cure the ills of Christ's church by stopping its pulse."

The Morality of Games of Chance.

MR. EDITOR: As many in this day are addicted to games of chance, and as some professing Christianity have adopted these methods of obtaining money for charitable purposes, and as a living writer of the Roman Catholic Church has publicly defended them, it may be well to inquire into the morality of such modes of gaining or losing property.

State legislation has been appealed to as authority; but as it does not profess to be governed by moral considerations in all cases, the fact that anything is sanctioned or prohibited by law is no proof that it is either right or wrong. Unlegislation has been both for and against games of chance so often that its authority as to their morality must be taken for nothing. While gambling is usually prohibited by law, lotteries have never ceased to be legalized, and that too for professedly benevolent or religious purposes. The law of the land, then, can only be admitted as affording at most a fair index of public opinion on the subject at the time of its enactment.

The authority of moral philosophers has also been adduced in favor of games of chance. Jeremy Taylor has been quoted as teaching, in his "Guide for Doubters," that games of chance are in themselves morally lawful, since the chance and contingency, which alone can be supposed to render them reprehensible, are likewise involved in all human affairs, and are really "perfectly nothing." This is plausible, but we think, very unsound reasoning. Certainly if connection with chance is criminal we are all guilty, for "time and chance happeneth unto all." These games may not be wrong "in themselves." We suppose the wrong to be not in the games nor in the implements with which they are played, nor in the chance they involve, but in the persons who employ them. But, says Bishop Taylor, "the evil appendages are all separable from these games." This we question, and hope to show good reasons for so doing before we close. While Bishop Taylor was doubtless a man of the purest motives, it should be remembered that his surroundings as chaplain to Archbishop Laud, and afterward to Charles the First, were by no means favorable to the formation of correct opinions on the question now under discussion.

Dr. Paley has also been appealed to as authority for betting. He teaches that a man is entitled to the benefit of his superior judgment on the speed of a horse, for instance. But, it may be asked, can one be entitled to a benefit where there is none? If a man judge beforehand that one horse will outrun another it may be a satisfaction to him to see his opinion verified by a trial. But what benefit is that opinion to others? Aside from the fiction of betting, which might as well be founded on the direction the next bird would fly across the road, we can see no source of benefit to any one. While it may be desirable to train horses to run rapidly, and while their speed may be at times beneficial to men, we confess ourselves utterly unable to see why the guessing or judging before a trial that one horse can outrun another should entitle any one to a reward. Dr. Paley speaks of the determinate value of chances, and lays down rules for the fair conduct of games of chance; but it should bear in mind that he does not discuss the question of the legitimacy of gaming itself. The most successful mode of conducting a robbery, and the equitable division of booty among robbers, are very different questions from that of the propriety of robbery. The fundamental principle of Dr. Paley's philosophy is this: Whatever, if generally practiced, would not tend to the good of mankind, is wrong. It were easy to show that the practice of gaming is evil in its effects and tendencies, and should, therefore, according to the philosophy of Dr. Paley himself, be condemned and abandoned.

But it has been argued that since one may give away his own he may certainly risk it in a game of chance. We answer: A man is as much responsible in giving as in buying and selling. He who gives away his property unrighteously commits an offense against God, his neighbor and himself. But to suppose that the losing of property by staking it upon chance is in any proper sense giving it away is a grave misapprehension. If giving is intended, why not give without the intervention of chance? The motive, as we shall show, is a very different one from that of giving.

But the question may still be asked: Why is gaming wrong? With regard to playing at games of chance for amusement, we will, at this time, simply say that in them much time is often wasted which might be and should be better employed; and that the habit of gaming for amusement is liable and apt to lead to gaming for wicked purposes.

But has a man not the right to stake and win or lose property on the casting of a die if he chooses? We answer: He has not such right morally. In so doing he violates a fundamental principle of the moral law laid down in the Scriptures. That principle is: "Thou shalt not covet." Whoever seeks or desires to obtain his neighbor's property without giving an equivalent therefor is guilty of covetousness. Each party in a game of chance where property is staked desires the happening of a chance whereby he may obtain his neighbor's property for nothing. The loser does not wish to lose. He consents to risk his own for the sake of obtaining that which is his neighbor's, giving him nothing in return. Sin inheres in the very desire to do such a thing.

Herein lies a clear distinction between insurance, merchandise, and all other legitimate dealings involving chance and gaming. When a man insures his property or his life he never desires the happening of the chance whereby he may obtain the money of the insurance company, but wards it off in every possible way. Should he do otherwise he would be justly regarded as a thief or a robber. Mutual benefit is conferred, and is intended to be conferred, by the insurer and the insured. In all cases where superior judgment or knowledge is beneficial to individuals or to mankind reward may justly be claimed, as when, for instance, a geologist points out a gold mine. But the desire to obtain money by the mere guessing the result of a chance, or the forejudging an event the knowing of which is up beneficial to any one, is iniquitous.

What some would call chance was appealed to by the use of the lot as mentioned in the Scriptures, but for purposes wholly different from those of gaming. The appeal to the lot was either to avoid a choice by men, as in the division of Canaan among the tribes of Israel, or to discover the divine will where human wisdom was inadequate to decide an important question, as whether Joseph or Matthias should fill the apostleship made vacant by the death of Judas.

But whoever seeks or desires to obtain the property of another by the fictitious and iniquitous arbitrament of mere chance, without giving an equivalent therefor, is guilty of that covetousness which the Scriptures declare to be idolatry. And, whoever, upon any pretense, practices or encourages such raffles, lotteries or other games of chance as proceed on this principle, violates a commandment of the decalogue, sets an example ruinous to public morals, contravenes the primal law of God that "in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread," and, even though the object be to obtain money for charity, culpably departs from that beautiful precept of the New Testament: "He that giveth, let him do it with simplicity."

W. L. G. HUNNICUTT.

P. S. Since writing the above we have enjoyed the pleasure, through the favor of a friend, of reading Bishop Taylor's elaborate discussion of the question under consideration. With a profusion of learning he illustrates the historical and other features of the subject, argues very plausibly in favor of the innocence of games of chance for amusement, but demonstrates that gaming for money is, to use his own very forcible expression, "a diabolical art."

Discipline.

MR. EDITOR: As church discipline is of great importance to the success of the gospel, perhaps it would not be amiss to agitate its importance in your extensively circulated paper.

1. Church discipline is necessary. No organization, even of human origin, can hope to live longer than to disgrace itself by disorder if there are not some wise rules which shall command the respect and obedience of every individual composing that organization. But as "order is Heaven's first law," and as the church is of God, we should naturally expect some wise legislation, which has for its end perfect order, which gives the fairest opportunity to every individual to learn and exercise, unmolested, the purest morality and highest piety. It should be fixed in every mind that the church claims this right to order not only from necessity, but from God; and it being from God, is divine, and must ever be inviolate; and consequently render it impossible to clash with individual rights.

2. In the exercise of this divine right to order the church, as the Lamb's bride, and as a pious and wise mother, must demand an outward conformity to all precepts of morality and piety. If this be done, as the eyes of the church militant can penetrate no further than actions or outward conduct, she must be content. She can suspect no one's morality or piety; but the moment that disorder appears she must lift up her instructive, corrective and warning voice against it, and persevere until the evil is corrected or removed, and order restored. This must be done at all hazards, and at once. The outward life is the body of the spiritual, and must be kept sound and healthy. The death of the former is an evidence of the departure of the latter. In this state of probation, where the Bible exists, it is a simple absurdity to suppose that full and sufficient morality and piety exist without their appropriate forms. It is true that morality and piety may exist in a degree, as in first principles, but not without some form of expression. The child never has the strength of manhood.

3. But it will be said that much of disorder is harmless, as it results from ignorance. To this it may be replied that if the church has a divine right to order, no disorder can be harmless, since it encroaches upon a sacred right. But, again, is it not one part of discipline to instruct and correct? And is not this the proper time for the church, as the mother, to discharge her sacred duty? Who else will do it? The church claims to speak the sentiments of Christ and of the Bible in reference to duty, and if she does not she ought not to be heard. But this ought to be considered before joining.

But if it is her duty to instruct and correct, nothing should deter her from duty. What excuse shall the church render for allowing her members to remain in ignorance, and perpetuate a disorder that invades her right and frustrates all her plans? When will the light dispel the darkness if it is not applied? Is it not the business of the ministry to teach and correct in the voice of the Scriptures; and if they interpret them aright and the church should see that they do—what can she premise herself in tolerating a habitual neglect of receive her instructions? Has she given up the reins of authority in despair of ever maintaining order? If she contemplate her own imperfection, need this make her doubtful of duty that is plain, and thus remove the right to demand order? Is she certain of nothing in regard to duty? But I imagine I hear many suppressed voices saying: "I don't like that word authority which you so often repeat." It sounds like you think the church has the right to force people into measures that she should drive us into religion. We are not to be forced." Church authority means no such thing. It forces no one to be moral or pious, but demands order of all who remain within her pale. If a member desires to be immoral and impious in the church, and thus go to the place of endless torment, the church could wish otherwise; but if he can be hypocritical enough to maintain order, she can but say of the tares: "Let them alone," etc. Christ will say in that day, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting punishment"—the reward for your immorality and impiety.

The church militant does not claim the right to force to piety, but to order or out of her pale. Is any one so stupid as not to see that the church, in her attempt to preserve order that piety may exist, only requires of her members to perform their obligations? Can there be any force in this? The church is too wise to assume the attitude of a tyrant, but as a firm, yet tender and pious parent. But will any one complain if she demand order, or that all obligations be fulfilled? Mark such. This complaining is a sure evidence of our renewed heart. These are such as would seize the reins of authority and drive out the mother. "This is the heir. Come, let us kill him, and let us seize on his inheritance."

The performance of obligations may always be voluntary and consistent with liberty of choice. Surely every Christian will choose to do right and to be pious, and especially that which they and the church have already determined to be right, and thereto have pledged themselves. The General Rules of our church are good and strictly scriptural, and, if respected and obeyed, order will be maintained and the highest piety attained. The church degrades herself by keeping such in her communion as willfully, habitually violate them, and cast a scornful look at them, as if they were void of wisdom or prudence.

If they really do not know better, the church stands charged with a criminal neglect of her children.

JOHN W. ELLISON.

The Pope, says the Christian Intelligencer, will not permit any irreverent jesting about relics; and in this he is wise after the wisdom of the world, since it were an easy transition from joking at their expense to joking at the expense of the papacy itself, together with its briefs and bulls and syllabuses. In illustration of the Pope's intolerance of this sort of thing, Evangelical Christendom gives an account of a curious case which recently came before the Inquisition at Rome. It seems that the Bishop of Cracow, Monsignor Galeski who, by the way, strenuously opposed the bull of papal infallibility, while showing the Archduke Charles Louis, when on a visit to Cracow, the relics contained in the cathedral of that city, laughingly remarked, as he exhibited the relics of the cross: "To believe its authenticity we would need to presuppose another miracle like that of the loaves, as all the bits of wood said to be taken from the original one would make a cross as high as the cathedral of Cracow." The archduke, shocked at such sacrilegious levity in the mouth of a bishop, replied: "But have you no papal brief accrediting its authenticity?" "Briefs and bulls in abundance," answered the Bishop, "but your grace must remember that in those days the Popes were not infallible." The Pope is reputed to be fond of jokes, but this one was not at all to his taste, and when Monsignor Galeski came to Rome recently, seeking advancement to another bishoptic, he met with a cold reception, and was plainly told that he must first make good his cause before the Holy Office. He accordingly thought it most expedient to take his departure, leaving his vicar behind to answer for him. The probability is that he will wait some time before he gets the bishopric that he solicited.

GERMANY.—The Old Catholics.—The Dusseldorf correspondent of the London Guardian writes under date of the twelfth of January:

"Very slowly, and only by virtue of its spiritual character, and its work of amendment and concord, has Old Catholicism made its way into Prussia; doubtless its roots are securely planted in consequence. In Baden, on the other hand, where the influence of Wessenberg and Hirscher is still felt, and where the State has consistently protected the reformers, Old Catholicism has made great progress in the past year. Whole parishes have embraced it, and churches and their endowments have fallen in for its use. If the movement continues to spread on a similar scale, we may yet see a National Catholic Church in Baden, and an Old Catholic Archbishop of Freiburg. In Bavaria we can only say that the movement maintains itself—it does not lose ground, but does not gain. Even in the Palatinate, the most successful mission in the early days of the reform, it seems to be at a standstill. It is left to fight its own battles with the Ultramontane power, and this is too deeply rooted in Bavaria to be overcome in a day. The State looks on, content to curb or resist, where it can, the open attacks of the ecclesiastic bishops, but lending no hand to Old Catholicism."

USING THE SAME TOWEL.—Health follows neatness, and disease the departure from it. The use of the same towel by many, common in a public place, though more allowable than the use of the same toothbrush, is, nevertheless, a not much healthier practice.

A prominent oculist says that the contagious Egyptian or granular inflammation of the eyes is spreading rapidly throughout the country, and adds:

"I have in many, and I may say in the majority of cases, been able to trace the disease to the use of the so-called rolling towels. Such towels are generally found in our country hotels and the sleeping apartments of the working classes, and, being thus used by nearly every one, are made the carriers of one of the most dangerous, and, as regards its symptoms, most troublesome diseases of the eye.

"I therefore would strongly recommend that the use of the rolling towel be abolished; for thereby we will discard one of the great instruments for the spread of such a dangerous disease of the eye, by which thousands of workingmen are annually deprived of their means of support."

Peace does not dwell in outward things, but within the soul. We may preserve it in the midst of the bitterest pain, if our will remain firm and submissive. Peace in this life springs from acquiescence even in disagreeable things, not in an exemption from suffering.—Fenelon.

OBITUARIES.

"TELL HER THAT I AM GONE TO HEAVEN."

These words were uttered by my sister, JULIA E. PARKER, just before she started to the glory land. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, when quite young, at old Providence church, Haywood county, Tenn., and was a consistent member to the day of her death. She was a Methodist after the old style—did not like anything that looked like a departure from what she considered the old landmarks of Methodism. During the greater part of her life she was a regular attendant at class meeting, prayer meeting and the public ministration of the word. During the last twelve or fifteen years of her life my home was her home, where she led a retired life, seldom leaving home except to go to church.

For several years before her death she suffered more or less from what finally proved to be cancer, and for the last three or four weeks her sufferings were beyond description; but she bore them all with Christian fortitude. When she was assured that the end was near she said: "I shall soon be free from all sorrow—I shall soon be in heaven;" and after requesting that Rev. S. A. H. Jones, of the Mississippi Conference, should preach her funeral sermon from Second Corinthians iv. 17, and sing that beautiful chorus, beginning, "O come, angel bands," she said, "Write to Mollie B. Freeman, of Haywood county, Tenn., and tell her I am gone to heaven," and in a few hours she fell asleep in Jesus. Thus passed away one who had been a Christian and a Methodist for nearly half a century. Her remains sleep in the old church-yard at Rocky Spring, Miss. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord."

ROCKY SPRING, Miss., March 30, 1876.

DR. THOMAS F. HORTON was born June 17, 1808, near Auburn, Ala. While at Emory and Henry College as a student he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church on probation, and on the ninth of the following month felt that his sins were forgiven. His language at this time was: "I realize the forgiveness of my sins." Oh, what a glorious realization! On the fifteenth of the following May he was received into full connection with the church, in which he lived in faithfulness until March 22, 1876, when he passed away to the church triumphant. Dr. Horton had been for many years a citizen of Natchez City, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and for some years the worthy and high-toned superintendent of the Sunday-school connected with the church, which was much attached to the children, who loved him very much. He was a praying man, now that his work is done and his warfare over, he is happy forever. During the last year of his life he looked very ill, but not so much so as to cause his friends to think that he was really in the least danger. But the Master knew when the heart-throbs which sooner or later come to all must cease, and when his stewardship was to be given up. He was married to Mrs. Sue Grubb, of Natchez City, October 15, 1862, with whom he lived in pure and undisturbed happiness till the hour when he closed his eyes on earthly things. We would not murmur now, but feel constrained to say that a good man has fallen. A new home has been made for us in heaven. May his sorrowing and faithful wife and boy find consolation, blessed comfort, from the thought that his pure spirit rests in heaven and awaits their coming; and may they at last find his spirit in that "clime of the sun." He had only one year ago entered upon the practice of dentistry. But life's short day is over. He could not stay, but we can go to him. May the blessed Lord afford us comfort to the sad ones.

DIED, in Red River parish, La., February 13, 1876, MRS. ADDIE MEYER STAYTON, wife of J. W. Stayton, Georgia was her native home. It was there, on the ninteenth day of July, 1850, that her beautiful life began. At an early day her father came to Louisiana, and chose his home on the banks of Red river. Here Addie's life was spent, passing from childhood into maidenhood as one continued sunny scene, until she was just merging into womanhood, when the destroyer came and in one short year she was robbed of father, mother and loving sister. She was married to John W. Stayton, July 22, 1871. In her husband she found a warm, sympathizing heart to solace her, and a strong, manly arm to comfort and support her. She thanked God that she was again cheerful, and she moved out in the midst of many friends, seeking to make all happy and to beautify her own hearthstone. But he had prepared for her a bright celestial home, adorned with the sparkling gems of paradise, and now he sent again the messenger, accompanied by a host of winged seraphs, to bear her spirit, with the newborn babe, into the portals of eternal bliss. She passed away triumphantly, exhorting all to meet her in that happy home beyond the skies. Thus another pure, sweet spirit flower has been transplanted from earth to bloom in the purer atmosphere of heaven. To the now broken-hearted young husband and to the lonely orphan sister we would say: Look to Heaven for comfort. She is there awaiting you.

PETER B. COOK was born in Newberry district, S. C., December 13, 1828, was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in September, 1844, at old Hopson camp ground, Yazoo county, Miss., under the ministry of Rev. P. M. Goodwyn; was married October 30, 1851, to the above-named county, to Miss M. S. Davis, and died March 14, 1876, in Yazoo City, Miss., where he had lived during almost all the years of his married life. Bro. Cook was for many years a good and useful steward and trustee in the church. He died in these official stations. He was a druggist, and by this business sustained in comfort and furnished with educational advantages a large and increasing family. He leaves a stricken widow, who lovingly mourns his loss to her and hers. He left eight children, four daughters and four sons, his eldest, a son just entering manhood, having preceded him one year and one day. He was highly respected in the community in which he lived, and much loved in the church of which he was a useful member for so long a time. Before he died and during his last illness (consumption) he was often visited by the writer, and once or twice he expressed himself as ready and willing to die. He is, doubtless in the better world, and after a life of struggle and toil and suffering he rests from his labors. May his children look to that better land with desire and purpose to meet him there. May they honor his God and their God, and at the last they may be one family in heaven as they have been one on earth.

JUDGE J. J. SLOCUM died at the residence of his brother, S. E. Slocum, in Washington parish, La., on the twenty-seventh of January, 1876. The following will show the esteem in which he was held by the community in which he lived:

At a meeting of Silver Creek Grange, No. 32, Patrons of Husbandry, at their regular hall, February 26, A. D. 1876, the following resolutions were passed:

Whereas, Death, with his relentless hand, has invaded our grange and, taken from us our beloved brother and past lecturer, Bro. J. Slocum, a worthy member of Silver Creek Grange, No. 32, Patrons of Husbandry, therefore,

Resolved, That we meditate with sad hearts upon this dispensation of an all-wise Providence, right in all his ways and just in all his acts, and that we bow in meek submission and mourn our irreparable loss.

Resolved, That in him the Patrons of Husbandry have lost a zealous advocate, the grange a worthy member, and the community a good, useful and charitable citizen, and his brothers and sisters an affectionate and devoted brother.

Resolved, That his memory shall live in our hearts, and that we tender our heartfelt sympathies and tenderest condolence to the bereaved family.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of our grange and a copy be tendered to his family.

A true copy.

We clip the following notice of a good man from the Nashville Christian Advocate. It was written by Bishop Wightman, who was for years a citizen of New Orleans, and for exemplary member of Felicity Street church. We knew him and first esteemed and loved him.

WILLIAM LAWSON BUTLER was born in Logan county, Tenn., October 25, 1800, near Cedarwood Station, Miss., February, 1876. Within these dates is comprised a brief and useful life, and a preparation for eternity. He was a Christian and a Methodist when I first met him, nearly thirty years ago, and his love and spirit were always the pleasing theme of his conversation. Under his pastor, Thomas C. Potter, who was for many years in succession Presiding Elder of the districts on the part of New Orleans, in important annual meetings, handling largely public funds, and upon the change of districts under a change of administration, when Bro. Potter's books were handed over and his accounts settled, he was ready when the heart-throbs which sooner or later come to all, to give an account of his stewardship. His days were spent in usefulness, and his years were spent to usefulness, and he retires. This world would be a better world, a heaven and a new earth if all who were like the dear friend whose death we mourn.

MRS. ELIZABETH C. CANTEY, whose maiden name was Bembow, was born March 25, 1798, in Sumter district, S. C., was married to William Canty, nephew of Gen. Canty, of revolutionary memory, in May, 1815, and died March 19, 1876, being nearly sixty years of age. She moved to Alabama in 1832, and in 1834, being left a widow, settled in Montgomery county, where by industry and economy she raised and educated her children. Her death occurred in Ramah, Montgomery county, Ala. She became a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church in early life. Her illness was short, not exceeding a week. Though the bridegroom came at midnight, he found her ready. After her husband's death she lived with two daughters, with whom she lived, and for all who trust in him.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

WHEREAS, God, in His wise providence, has seen fit to remove from us Bro. WILLIAM A. BEERS, one of the members of Pearlington circuit; and

Resolved, That we, the members of Conference assembled, tender our sympathy and condolence to the friends and relatives at this bereavement, which is our loss and gain.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to his relatives, and to the New Orleans Christian Advocate for publication.

BRO. H. M. MILLER departed this life, in great peace, on the twenty-[illegible] 1876, at the ripe old age of [illegible] years. He had been a professor of religion and member of the Methodist Church over forty years. He was an ardent lover of the church, loved to have the preacher in his home, and until disease prostrated him he kept a family altar, at which he offered daily sacrifices. He leaves a wife and children to mourn his loss. The Lord temper the wind to the shorn lamb, and unto [illegible] will he guide in judgment, and for all who trust in him.

IN God's good and wise dispensation, FRANCIS M. HOLLIDAY, son of F. M. and M. S. Holliday, passed into the company of Jesus, his saints and the angels in heaven. He was born in Louisiana, Feliciana, La., 1808. He removed with his family to Mississippi, near Crystal Springs, in 1838, with whom he resided until his death. He died on the eighth of March, 1876, after an illness of thirty-two days, of typhoid fever. Although young, he was a man of affectionate to all, especially to his mother. He leaves many friends to mourn after him. We sincerely sympathize with the mother and sisters.

AFTER SILENCE.

BY FRANK H. CONVERSE.

All soul-out of our lives has fled,
But the echoes linger as sad refrains
As we kiss the lips of the voiceless dead,
While their hearts in our own have lain.

We know—but how can we say it or sing?—
That ne'er was love was never so pure and strong
As the hour when a hush on the sounding string
Makes silence where was a joy's song.

Never again," is we say. But hark!
Out of the silence and hush and calm,
Strikes a chord through the shadows dark
Bringing the notes of a prayerful psalm!

So the Master touches life's clouds at will:
He shows how sweet are its gladsome days
Sometimes by hushed for psalms of praise,
But by chords.

Has Man Degenerated?

Why should he have degenerated? It would almost seem as if the old theory, long since rejected by students of the debilitating effect of civilization had retained a secret hold of men's hearts—as if they really believed, as Tennyson implies, that progress benefitted the brain at the expense of the body; that the "Christian child" had given up the privileges of being "iron-sinewed and supple-jointed," which "the lazy barbarian" had once enjoyed. There never was a delusion with less evidence to support it, except a permanent impression among mankind, which is often the result, not of accumulated experience, but of our ever-renewing discontent with the actual state of things. There is not the slightest evidence anywhere that man was ever bigger, stronger, fairer or more enduring, under the most favorable conditions of food and climate, than he is now. As to bigness, the evidence is positive. Modern Egyptians are as big as the mummies who were conquerors in their day, and modern Englishmen are bigger, for there are not a thousand coats of armor in existence which an Englishman could put on. Very few moderns can use ancient swords, because the hilts are too small for their hands. Endless wealth and skill were expended in stocking gladiators, and there is no evidence that a man, or a woman was as big or as strong as now.

No skeleton, no statue, no picture, perhaps that ever, in general was bigger. The Jews of to-day are as large as they were in Egypt, or later. The people of the Roujanga wear all the bearing and more than the size of the Roman soldiery. No fact is recorded as usual with Greek athletes which English heroboats could not perform now. There is no half-savage tribe which ranked for Athenians or Yorkshiremen could beat at single. No race exists of which a Greek or Roman would similarly trained would beat an Englishman or German or Russian regiment of equal numbers. Nothing is recorded of our forefathers here in England which Englishmen could not do, except it be some kind of archery, which were the result of long training of the eye, continued for generations. The most vigorous and luxuriant family that ever existed, the European royal family is physically as big, as healthy as powerful as any people of whom we have any account that science can accept. Thiers' Frenchman is as Cæsar's Gaul in all bodily conditions, and with an increased power of keeping alive, which may partly owing to improved conditions of living, but is probably owing to more developed vitality. There is no evidence that even the weaker races are feebler than they were after their first acclimation. The Bengalee, was what we know twelve hundred years ago, and the Chinaman was represented just as he is now before the birth of Christ. The race ever multiplied like the Anglo-Saxon, which has no advantage of climate, and till lately, no particular advantage of food. Physical civilization depends upon physical conditions, and why should a race, fed, clothed, better clothed and better housed than it ever was before, degenerate? Because it eats corn instead of berries? Compare the Californian and the Digger Indian, whether it wears clothes? The wearing of clothes, if burdensome, which the experience of army doctors in India say is the best costume for marching is excessively doubtful, they do bring unanimously that breeches, as suffer from various veins, as a wearing trousers do not—must degrade as a permanent physical thing. You carry weight with your legs. Because they keep indoors and pamper English professionals, with Spanish savages, living in ideally the same climate, but living outdoors. The conditions of civilization not only do not prohibit Caesars who would have outwalked, outswam or strangled any gladiator that Cæsarism ever rongamed about, but they enable him to live to seventy instead of dying at forty-five a thousand years ago, he often was early a slave bred for the arena, as I have done.

But races have degenerated in what we may call the physiological sense—the aptitudes unquestionably, or at least having the fear of the future before our eyes, we will not believe that the Greek kept to be the rivaling the Spartan in courage, or the Athenian defended Rhartpore to be more famous than the men who were overwhelmed with Porus; but of physical energy, without change of food or climate, we can find no authentic instance. The illusion is a mere result of discontent, and of inability to see through the mist in which time softly shrouds them. That gunpowder, even under the best conditions, advances very little strength to the cartridge is true, but it ought to be remembered that these conditions are amongst the most powerful of the old improving forces—the survival of the fittest. Where an advance is perceptible in physical power, and we question whether the Greek swimmer would have crossed the Dover to Calais; just as strongly we question whether the ancient Greek ever possessed a horse which would have achieved a place at Epsom. Why should men grow feeble in civilization any more than horses? London Spectator.

Judaism and Christianity

What is the distinguishing character of Hebrew literature, which separates it by so broad a line of demarkation from that of every ancient people? Undoubtedly the sentiment of erotic devotion which pervades it. Their poets never represent the Deity as an impassive principle—a mere organizing intellect removed at infinite distance from human hopes and fears. He is for them a Being of like passion with themselves, requiring heart for heart, and capable of inspiring affection, because capable of feeling and returning it. Awful, indeed, are the thunders of his utterance, and the clouds that surround his dwelling-place; very terrible is the vengeance he executes on the nations that forget him; but to his chosen people, and especially to the men "after his own heart," whom he anoints from the midst of them, his "still, small voice" speaks in sympathy and loving kindness. Every Hebrew, while his breast glowed with patriotic enthusiasm at those promises, which he shared as one of the favored race, had a yet, deeper source of emotion, from which gushed perpetually the aspirations of prayer and thanksgiving. He might consider himself alone in the presence of his God—the single being to whom a great revelation had been made, and over whose head "an exceeding weight of glory" was suspended. His personal welfare was infinitely concerned with every event that had taken place in the miraculous order of Providence. For him the rocks of Horeb had trembled, and the waters of the Red sea were parted in their course. The sword given on Sinai with such solemn pomp of ministration was given to his own individual soul, and brought him into immediate communion with his Creator. That awful Being could never be put away from him. He was about his path and about his bed, and knew all his thoughts long before. Yet this tremendous, inclosing presence was a presence of love. It was a manifold, everlasting manifestation of the deep, seeking—as desire for human affection. Such belief, while it enlisted every noble and self-forgetful side of piety, had a direct tendency to excite the best passions of our nature. Love is not long asked in vain from generous dispositions.

A Being, never absent, but standing beside the life of each man with ever-watchful tenderness, and loving, though invisible, in every blessing that befell them from youth to age, became finally the object of their warmest affections. The belief in him could not exist without producing, as a necessary effect, that powerful impression of passionate individual attachment which, in the Hebrew authors, always magnifies with and vivifies their faith in the Invisible. All the books in the Old Testament are breathed upon by this breath of life. Especially is it to be found in that beautiful collection, entitled the Psalms of David, which remains, after some thousand years, perhaps the most perfect form in which the religious sentiment of man has been embodied.

But what is true of Judaism is yet more true of Christianity—"quanto per hunc, quam per patriarchas?" In addition to all the characters of Hebrew monotheism, there exists in the doctrine of the cross a regular and inexhaustible treasure for the affectionate feelings. The idea of the Qualtheos, God-man, the God whose goings forth have been from everlasting, yet visible to men for their redemption as an earthly temporal creature, living, acting and suffering among themselves, their which is more important, transferring to the unseen place of his spirit, it is still the same humanity, he were on earth, so that the lapse of generations can in no way affect the [illegible] purity [illegible]

[illegible] for [illegible] thought that [illegible]

[illegible] which alone was wanting to move the world. There was solved at once the great problem which so long had distressed the teachers of mankind, how to make virtue the object of passion, and to secure at once the warmest enthusiasm of the heart, with the clearest perception of right and wrong in the understanding. The character of the blessed Founder of our faith became an abstract of morality to determine the judgment, while at the same time it remained pure and holy to love. The written word and established church prevented its degeneration into ungoverned mysticism, but the predominant principle of vital religion always remained that of self-sacrifice to the Savior. Not only the higher divisions of moral duties, but the simple, primary impulses of benevolence, were subordinated to this new, absorbing passion. The world was loved "not first alone." The brethren were members of his mystical body. All the other bonds that had held down the spirit of the universe to our narrow round of earthly life, in comparison with the golden chain of suffering and sacrifice, which at once riveted the heart of man to One who, like himself, was acquainted with grief. Pain is the deepest thing we have in our nature, and since, through pain Christ always reveals more holy and love than any other, it [illegible]

The Gospel Good News

The entirety of the gospel is only good news; there is not one word of bad news, not one line, not one syllable of it. Little, but only glad tidings, sweet and good news to the heart of the worst of sinners. Beloved, there is nothing in all the gospel but only glad news, as that the poor shall have salvation by Christ, that the broken-hearted should be healed, that the captives should be delivered, that the blind should receive their sight, that they who were bruised should be set at liberty, that they who were slaves should have the year of jubilee, the acceptable year of the Lord. There is not one tittle in all this but only good news.

The gospel holds forth to poor sinners that there is a love, an eternal love, an infinite love, in God's breast to them. A man might think that God would hate such an one as I am; and reason would think that love should proceed from something amiable in the object, some beauty or bounty; but God sees me to be wicked and sinful, and, therefore, reason would think that God must damn me, world without end. The gospel comes to such a sinner, and tells him the case is otherwise. It is not so, poor sinful man or woman; and though God hates sin above all things in heaven or hell, yet God loved thee, knowing what thou wert. God hath an infinite, special love to thy poor soul, yet hates thy sin: "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son." There was a love in God, out of which he gave his Son, Jesus Christ, to die for us. This, the gospel and the Spirit of God in it, reveals to the poor soul: "When I was an enemy to God, he was my friend; when I hated him, he loved me; nay, before I was, God had thoughts of an infinite, eternal love to me."

The gospel holds forth to a sinner that, as God had an infinite love to him, so it was not a cold love that ended in nothing; but out of this love God would send his Son, Jesus Christ, into the world to save sinners. This is one of the main principles of the gospel: that the Father, out of his love, sent his own Son, the image of his person, the Son of his love and delight, into this world to lay down his life for sinners.

It holds out to us that, as the Father, out of his love, sent the Son, Jesus Christ, actually and really, to come into the world and took our nature upon him, soul and body, and the infirmities of both, and sanctified our nature that he took, and in that nature became our surety, a public person for us, an advocate, a second Adam. All these good news to poor sinners, every part of them.

Then the gospel tells you that Jesus Christ, as he died for our sins, so he rose again for our justification, whereby poor sinners are assured that they are justified and freed from all their sins, and whereby they shall arise to glory hereafter. Every little circumstance is glad tidings to poor sinners.

Then the gospel tells you that after his resurrection he conversed with his disciples, giving them instructions how they should order the churches of God, and preach the gospel to the end of the world; that he went and into heaven, and as soon as he came there sent the Holy Spirit to assist them as to himself, to be our infallible guide, to make known the heart of Christ to us, to lead us into all truth, and comfort us in all distresses; that when he went up to heaven he made way for poor sinners to come there, and that there he intercedes for us, and supports us and pities us, who are in the flesh as he once was; that in due time he will come again to fetch us to heaven as he went, and bring a crown with him, and sit down all his people's enemies, and give them the same glory that he hath. The gospel tells you, moreover, that all this love and grace and mercy and salvation, by Jesus Christ, here and in heaven, is made sure to us, by an everlasting covenant, sure and perfect in every point. Put all together, and from the first to the last you shall not find in the ministry of the gospel, if it be truly and soundly opened, any syllable but what is wholesome and comfortable, and sweet and glad tidings to the worst sinners.—Whitefield's Sermons, p. 1845.

BRIGATE YORKSHIRE.—Theer wor once a mon at Guiseley gat intiv his head at he wor just cut aht for a preycher, so he went to see a Methody parson, an' asst him if he couldn't get him a job as a "local" somewhear; he wor sewer if they'd nobbut give him a reight chonce he could convert sinners wholesale. Well, after a good deal o' bother t' parson gat a vacant pooapit for him i' some ahtside country place, an' theer one fine Sunda mornin' in t' autumn, wiv reight wood suited wi hyzen, up intiv t' pooapit he mahntid, like one at wor used to't, an' all went on quietly till it come time for him to begin his sarmon, an theer wor a reight good congregation listen to what he had to say.

"Nah, my friends," he began in a stammerin' sort of way, "t' text ya this: 'I am t' best o' t' world.'" He then waited a bit, an' all t' congregation t' pooapit top, bottom an' middle gat on a bit farther. "Firstly my friends," he says, "firstly? Aw! I mean I' best o' t' world," an' then he com' to another full stop, and thought t' pooapit began a bit. "Yes," he went on again, "in t' first place I am t' best o' t' world," but he couldn't get a word further, do what he would.

At last however, theer wor an owd woman amongst congregation sang aht:

"I tell the what it is, lad, if tha'rt t' best o' t' world, tha's sadly wants smuttin."

The bill conferring on Queen Victoria the title of "Empress of India" passed its third reading in the British House of Commons, by the twenty-third, by 200 for, and 144 against. The bill met with strong opposition in Parliament, and is said to be distasteful to the larger portion of the people of England. A movement is made to induce the Queen to decline accepting the title.

Issy Harris was not the sort of man to be fooled by a girl. He was engaged to be married. When he learned that his intended had thrown him over he waited calmly until her wedding-day, and when his turn came to congratulate her on her happiness he put a bullet in her head. She is still living, and he is in jail. This occurred at St. Marys, Mo.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Presbyterian Synod of Texas has increased, in the last five years, from 41 ministers to 66, from 70 to 112 churches, and from 1,994 to 4,298 members.

—The South Carolina Conference of the Church South, at its late session, adopted resolutions looking to the preparation and publication of the history of Methodism in that State.

—Austria is progressing in the way of religious liberty. The minister of public worship has authorized the formation of two Protestant parishes in the Tyrol, where there has been none hitherto.

—Last year's circulation of the Bible in Spain amounted to over 50,000 copies. In Portugal, too, the sales amounted to over 8,000 copies. In Lisbon there are several congregations of Bible-reading Romanists.

—According to the Almanach de Gotha, there are in France 35,000,000 Catholics, 600,000 Protestants, 49,000 Jews, of whom half are in the department of the Seine, 3,071 Mohammedans, Buddhists, etc., and finally 82,000 Frenchmen who announce themselves as recognizing no religion.

—There are 223 Protestant Sunday schools in Baltimore, with 4,783 officers and teachers, and 41,000 scholars. There are also 11,000 children in the Roman Catholic schools. Ten Protestant schools were organized during the year. In the whole State of Maryland 100,000 children attend Sunday schools, and 80,000 do not.

—Self-support advances in the churches in India. Besides the 21 of more American ministers who are supported by the Europeans and East Indians, among whom they chiefly labor, there are in Rohilcund 6 native preachers wholly supported by the native Christians, to whom the minister, and others partially supported.

—The Methodists have in North India 118 Sunday schools, with 853 officers and teachers, and 7,111 scholars. The figures show a gain of more than 1,500 scholars over last year, and of nineteen per cent. in two years. Bareilly, in South India, has 1,150 scholars, making in all 2,261 scholars. Many conversions in these days have taken place among the Telugus.

—Dr. Maylest, a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, stationed at Liverpool, recently stated that arrangements had been completed for the proposed union of the United Presbyterian Church with the English Presbyterian Church. A gentleman, it was further stated, was prepared to give on the day of the union £10,000 to start with. [illegible]

—An important proclamation has been issued by the Foreign Office at Pekin, China, explanatory of the status of Christians as established by the treaties with foreign powers. It provides: 1. That converts to Christianity [illegible] 2. That Christians [illegible] theatrical exhibitions, etc., [illegible] Christians who refuse to pay their contributions are not to be molested. 3. The right of foreigners to lease houses and chapels in the cities and villages is not to be questioned. 4. Christians are to be treated with propriety. 5. The term "barbarian" cannot lawfully be applied to foreigners. 6. It is perfectly legal for foreigners to live inland in the departments, districts, cities and villages, and they must not be annoyed.

—ENGLISH CATHOLICS.—It is a remarkable fact that, notwithstanding the activity of the Roman Catholic religion in England, its Catholic population does not greatly exceed [illegible] There are a bishop in England and Wales, a cardinal archbishop, [illegible] archbishops, [illegible] bishops, [illegible] priests in the diocese of [illegible] There are [illegible] churches and chapels, an increase during the year of [illegible] There are [illegible] monastic communities in England and Wales. In Ireland there are 4 provinces, with 4 archbishops, [illegible] bishops, a guardian, and [illegible] monasteries. According to the London [illegible] the Roman Catholic population of Ireland is now [illegible] which is [illegible] than [illegible] in the United States. [illegible] Irish [illegible] parts that there are 30 Roman Catholic peers, 7 Roman Catholic members of the Privy Council, and 37 Catholic members of the House of Commons.

The China Inland mission [illegible] to be the pioneers of the [illegible] stations in the interior of China. It commenced work in the city of Ningpo, then moved to Hang-Chau, the capital of the province. From that point missionary operations were extended to the chief cities of the best districts into which the province was divided. From these cities again the work was extended, through native agency, to many of the prefectural and country towns as could be occupied. Having made this beginning in the province of [illegible] missions were extended to the adjacent provinces. As soon as the agents of other societies follow, the Inland mission will endeavor to go forward into the more distant regions beyond. These missionaries are chosen from the ordinary denominations, liberty allowed to carry out their individual views of church government in the congregations which they organize. The field of operations is so large that no danger is apprehended from the clashing of denominational views. There are now 11 missionaries and their wives engaged in the work. These have gathered [illegible] native assistants, some of whom are left in hand to [illegible] charge of the congregations while the European missionaries move into new fields. There are nine interior provinces of China which have [illegible] a single Protestant missionary, although about 400 Catholic priests are laboring in them. Into these provinces the Inland mission is pressing to send 18 missionaries (two to each province). The work is supported very much like that of George Muller, of Bristol—by unsolicited offerings.

From Our Little Friends.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I am always so glad when the time comes to get your paper, and I always look for the children's Corner the first thing. I did today when I found I was very much pleased to see the story Grandpa Goodale has been writing promising us, and I have found out as last "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest," as Barney explained it.

Well, I must tell you who I am and where I live, and all about our Sabbath school. I am a little boy thirteen years old. I live not far from the Texas Pacific railroad. We have a very interesting Sabbath school and are going to have a May party. We had a very nice Christmas tree. I wish I could tell you all about our county, but I must not be too lengthy in my first letter.

I see some of the children have been writing about their missionary box, but I believe I will have a missionary box instead. I am very anxious to see how Miss Sadie and Mr. Dowling come out, but am still more anxious to hear another story from Grandpa Goodale, for I do wish Tom would stop his wicked Kindself.

My little sister wrote to you about four months ago, and she was very much pleased to see her published, for would not think you published children's letters sure enough, but thought you just wrote little letters yourself. I will now, but you [illegible] I hope to be able to send you a subscriber soon. With my best wishes for your future welfare I will sign myself

Your little reader and friend,

FRANK STUPSON.

That is right! Get a subscriber for the ADVOCATE, and let all our little readers see how many new subscribers they can get up. ED.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We are two little girls and read the stories in the Child's Paper, so many little [illegible] letters we would write too. We [illegible] write very well for us, you must excuse the mistakes. Our [illegible] is Mr. Cobb. He [illegible] us, and we all like him very much. We were very glad to hear "How Barney Milked the Boys' Nest." If you [illegible] think this is too long please publish it.

Three Cents' Worth of Conscience.

"I was sad I to the water the other morning," I began, at once [illegible] "that boy a asked for peaches, and I want you to pay them." "They are sent to [illegible] home."

On getting home I found [illegible] had [illegible] peaches [illegible] He said they had, and that he paid the boy who brought them [illegible] the other shilling. "For eight peaches?" [illegible]

"Now boys, as sure I told you the truth, I [illegible] for the basket of peaches, and I wished him to pay for them. When I engaged the peaches [illegible] shillings I asked the man if he delivered them free of charge, and he answered he did. [illegible] on purpose for my friends. When I came home I inquired of [illegible] if they had been sent. Yes, they had." Well, what was very much, the boy said they were six shillings and sixpence. I took the basket in to empty it, and when I handed him his change he gave me back three cents, and said, "Three cents, will do."

"Henry, a penny for the other three cents for your sight, do you?" I said to him. "Does not the man who sent you here with the peaches pay you?"

"Yes," he says, "he gave me a tizzie," [illegible] answered, "but I like to get a little more when I can."

I then said to him: "The boy who brought a basket of peaches here the other day asked a shilling more than the price I supposed the man asked.

"Yes, sir," I said, "but I engaged them for six pence, and I knew that the man of whom I bought them was not a man who [illegible] two prices. I am afraid the boy that brought them added the other shilling for himself, and [illegible]

"Oh, that is too much," answered the boy, feeling, undoubtedly, very honest. "I won't take but three cents."

Ah! dear children, that boy's conscience had evidently been struggling all the way up the street; nor did its voice cease even after he had silenced it, and boldly demanded six shillings and sixpence for the peaches, instead of six shillings. How loudly it must have rebuked him while John went in to get the money! And yet he made a bargain with his conscience for three cents.

"Be honest, be honest!" said conscience.

"Your master pays you a fair price for your work. Be content always with a fair price, and never obtain a penny dishonestly."

"Other boys charge extra for their errands, and make a good deal in that way," said George to himself. "Why should not I?" No one will be any the wiser for it."

"Have a conscience of your own, George," answered the monitor without ever use another boy's. Every one must bear his own burden of good or bad deeds at the last judgment."

"Sixpence is a very little for Judge Parker to pay for his peaches. He is a rich man; but a sixpence is of some importance to a poor boy like me," argued George.

"Sixpence is a small sum in the hand," said conscience, "but a dishonest sixpence is a hundred pound weight upon the soul."

"What a fool I am," said George, "to hesitate about taking a few pennies when I get a chance. I shall never be a rich man at this rate."

But conscience will not let him rest here, but pleads and pleads for honesty and truth. George feels now ashamed to deliver the sixpence, and, as conscience still pleads, he tries to quiet it for a season by returning the three cents, and laughs at the "goose of a waiter," as he called him, forgetting him have it at all, when he first [illegible] he intended keeping it himself.

Children, George found it hard to obtain dishonestly the first cent; but it will be easier for him the next time, and the next for, when the first temptation is not strongly resisted, the conscience becomes less earnest, and its voice less distinct.

Beware of the first wrong step. When the temptation comes lift up the prayer, "Lord, help me!" and the great Helper of prayer will give you strength to resist and keep you in the right way.—The Sparrow.

The Horse That Wore a Hat.

BY MARY ELLEN.

Old Ned, the white horse, walked into the stable one evening last summer with his head held very erect, and, without even saying "How are you?" to his two friends, Fred and Ted, who had got home before him, began munching away at his supper.

"Well, old fellow," said Fred, the black horse, at last, "what's the matter with you?"

"Old fellow!" repeated Ned with an angry snort, "don't call me 'old fellow' again, if you please. I'm Mr. Edward after this. I wore a hat to-day."

"And what of that?" asked Ted, the brown horse.

"Why, don't you know, stupid," said Ned, tossing his mane, "that, as a general thing, only men wear hats." And if a horse is considered worthy to wear one it certainly must be because he is a very extraordinary horse; in fact as good as a man. So don't be quite as familiar with me as you have been. Mr. Edward after to-day, if you please."

The black and the brown burst into a horse-laugh.

"It is you who are stupid, Mr. Edward," said Fred; "that hat was only to protect your brain from the sun."

"Yes, indeed I, Mr. Edward," added Ted, "it's not until the summer is over, and you'll see how long your silly head will be covered."

"Another word, and I'll kick you both," said poor old Ned.

So Fred and Ted said no more, but they laughed and laughed until the big watch dog woke up and, cocked [illegible]

I WANT IT. "I want it!"

"You shan't have it."

"I want it, and will [illegible]

"I want it myself, and I am going to keep it."

That's the way the trouble generally begins. It is in a mildway tiff, and even tolerably pleasant; no swearing nor biting nor pounding nor scratching, nor saying very ugly words, nor doubling up of little fists.

"I want it" has caused more quarrels than almost anything else in the world. Often a quarrel has begun with a very little want, almost as small as a child's doll. One side wanted it as much as the other side did. The question got to be who was the strongest. It generally turned out that the strongest wanted it the most, and got it if it was worth having. If what was wanted turned out not to be worth having, the strong one would generally let the little one have it.

To fight for a lofty principle is noble. To quarrel and snatch, and try to get every good thing that we see belonging to other people, is not lovely.

If you want people to love you and treat you kindly, begin early to treat others kindly also.

WAYS IN THE BIBLE. In old times people called a pearl a "margarite." In an old Bible I once read about the "pearl of great price," but it was called a "precious margaret." I read this to a little girl named Margaret, and she was very happy to find her name in the Bible. All the Marys and Marthas and Ruths and Abigails and Graces and Charitys can find their names in the Bible, you know.

My name is not in the Bible. I wish it were. But there is a better place than the Bible in which to have your name written. It is the Lamb's Book of Life. You may read about it in the Revelation.—Stripes of Gold.

The Danger Line.

Long and careful observation tells us that when the Mississippi river reaches a certain stage there is danger. It has been found that when the water rises to a noted point the levees are almost sure to give way, and there is very probability of serious inundations and widespread damage. People living in the valley of the Mississippi are reasonably filled with grave apprehension when it is announced that the rising waters have touched the danger line. It is to them a warning to redouble their efforts to resist the encroaching flood.

There are other danger lines than this which marks the perils from the resistless volume of a mighty river. When young people have nearly reached their majority, have enjoyed the privileges of religious training and instruction, and have not chosen the service of God, there is reason to fear that they will never become Christians. They have reached a critical period in their history, where it is exceeding perilous to trifle with religious convictions and to resist the Holy Spirit. The character is formed in youth, and if, in our tenderer years, we do not yield to the invitations of the gospel, there is but faint prospect of future repentance. All along, from ten years to twenty, the voice of conscience is strong, and the Spirit strives with peculiar power. It is the choicest and brightest period of our probation, when the fewest hinderances and the greatest helps are present, and when the home and the church are most powerful in their influence. Habits of vice and unbelief are not yet confirmed, contact with the world has not hardened the soul, and the great and absorbing battle of life does not so possess and tax the faculties as to exclude serious religious thought. God is to be remembered in our youth, and he is to be sought early, because there is peril in delay. The line of danger, of supreme danger, is at hand, and the salvation of the soul depends upon the improvement of the hour.

There is a danger line in the career of young men when they leave the restraints and associations of home, when they first grapple with the problems of business, and when they are thrown upon their own resources to win their bread and to take position in society. Even with the safeguards of religion it is a severe test and strain to the character. There is strong passion, high ambition, and every allurement to vice and dishonesty. It is a critical time with the young man, and the danger lies in his surrendering to the powers of evil, and of gradually breaking away from the church and religion of his fathers. With him the flood is at the danger line until he settles down into the habits and duties of an active religious life, and firmly roots himself in the principles of industry, sobriety and integrity. If young manhood passes the ordeal firmly and without damage the subsequent course of safety and honor is pretty well assured. The first years in business and in association are the trying ones with young men. Character and success are both at stake, and a false step may lead to consequences which shall spread as a blight over the whole after experience.

There is a point in the history of every drunkard which may be described as the danger line. It is perilous to taste the mocker. Some stop before they are ruined. A few use the beverage moderately always. But, as a rule, the moderate drinker, if he continues the habit for years, becomes a drunkard. We can call to mind several who were moderate drinkers for years, and who, in their old age, are rarely sober. There are others in the prime of life who are at the critical period where confirmed drunkenness is nearly reached. They are on the danger line. The flood has been rising slowly but surely, and they are now liable to be overwhelmed and swallowed up. We meet men almost every day who are at the danger line. The step is still steady, habits of active business are maintained; they are as yet successful in affairs, but the face is flushed, the breath is laden with the odor of whisky, and there is an unnatural excitement which betrays the unhealthy stimulant. These men cannot go further and be safe. We feel like shouting to them, and to their wives and friends—all alike unconscious of the threatened flood—"At the danger line!" May God have mercy upon the thousands who have touched this point, so near to that of utter and hopeless ruin. Nothing can avert the catastrophe but a determined and complete renunciation of the cup.

Christian experience has its danger lines. With young converts it is very much as it is with young trees just planted. We cannot tell at first whether they are going to live and grow, or whether they will dry up and die. If they grow off vigorously, it is well, but the danger is that they will not become well and deeply rooted from the start. If young converts do not at once begin to work, to pray and speak in the social meetings, and to take an active part in the church, they will be sapless and fruitless while they remain, and will soon be dropped from the roll. When old members remove to other communities, and do not bind in their church letters, when they affect the back pews in the church, grow careless about family prayer, and rarely find time to attend a prayer meeting; and when they become liberal in their notions of doctrine, and in their views of popular amusements, they are at the danger line. The defenses against sin and worldliness are crumbling and melting away, and the hope of these souls is almost gone. Many Christians in these and other ways of backsliding have reached the danger line. Will they heed the warning?

Death is the flood that bears us all away at last. We see old and gray-haired people every day who are not prepared to meet God. Their days can be but few. They are at the danger line of life. In the order of nature, not many sands remain. What are they to do in the swellings of Jordan? They have thrown away the opportunities of youth, they have withheld their prime from the service of Christ, and now, in the sere and yellow leaf, they have no hope of a better resurrection. Salvation is barely possible, and mercy counts the few remaining hours. It is the last chance left to the sinner, and the flood is for a moment held back. The young die, and the middle-aged. We know not how near they may be to this danger line; but in reference to the aged sinner there can be no doubt. There is but a step between him and death. As angels see him, as infinite compassion regards him, as the telegrams from earth are recorded in eternity, he is at the danger line—that line which, if passed, leaves no hope to the impenitent soul.

Letters to a Young Preacher.

MY DEAR NEPHEW: You say I am quite severe on bearded young preachers, and the older ones are guilty of the same thing, and if it is wrong in one class it ought to be wrong in the other. But you must remember I do not object to the wearing of a beard, but to the manner of wearing it. The older preachers do not wear the mustache alone, but always in connection with the rest; and to this I offer no objection, Except when the mouth is covered. Then it is abominably indecent; for no one has a right to sit at my table and nauseate my family with the disgusting sight of soup clotted in his mustache, and milk and coffee dripping from it. Nor has he a right, by licking gruff with his tongue, like a cow in her stall, or sucking it in with his lips, like a pig at his trough, to make sights and sounds unsuitable to the refinements of a gentleman's dining-room. Nor has he any more right to defile the wine of the sacrament by dipping his filthy beard into it than by dipping his dirty fingers into it. In administering the Lord's Supper this upper lip tolly has forced me more than once to change the cups, for mere cleanliness' and decency's sake. During the reign of any fashion whether coat-tails are cut shadbelly or sack, long tail or short, whether beard is cultivated on all the field or only in patches—there is always margin enough between slovenliness and foppishness for piety to express itself in a style at once pure and inoffensive. See that no man despise you and your ministry for a want of common sense in this matter.

The next thing I wish to speak of is the manner in which you talk with preachers. Conversation with them is a great privilege and a great pleasure—perhaps the greatest pleasure we have in social life. But just because this is so we are liable to abuse it, and run into vice. You can talk more freely with the brethren than with any other class, but you must guard this freedom or it will expand into licentiousness. Of course you will never, anywhere, in any company, under any circumstances, indulge in obscene words. I trust you are too much of a gentleman for that degradation; and hope that your religious instincts are true and prompt enough to cause you to avoid the company of a foul-mouthed man as you would the presence of satan himself. Nor will you make, nor hear others make, statements that involve a charge against the moral or ministerial character of a brother, unless you intend to bring it to the notice of that brother, or lay it before Conference. Tittle-tattle of this kind you will perhaps hear quite often. But duty is plain, and unless you do your duty in one of the above ways you become a slanderer, for all such small talk is of the nature of slander. The special point, however, to which I wish to call your attention is this: Never speak in dispraise of the work and sermons of other men, nor in praise of your own. You will be tempted on this point on account of your collegiate training, and because of the encomiums passed upon you when you were admitted to Conference. The way the P. E.'s and the D. D.'s have petted you college boys for the last few years is well-nigh enough to turn all your heads into gas-bags. Bishop, this young man has a very fine mind, is thoroughly educated, was distinguished in his class, graduated with honor, writes well, speaks well, will be a tower of strength. All he wants is time and opportunity. Will go anywhere. One is reminded of young mothers whose little ones are each the prettiest, smartest and sweetest that ever appeared in babydom, ancient or modern, and is confidently expected to be president, a governor, a congressman, a doctor of medicine or something else glorious. Flattered from the start, they very soon come to think of themselves more highly than they ought to think; but somehow or other, when the chance of illustrating these splendid talents is given, we do not hear of them at all. They frequently turn out to be far inferior to their more obscure cousins and neighbors. Just so with the young preachers. For years and years we have been hearing of a race of giants, and, when these young men have stepped into the arena, have watched with anxious solicitude to see the exhibition of amazing strength and prowess; but, alas, have watched in vain. For many whom we expected, from the prophesies, to realize in themselves these gigantic dignities have proven to be only pigmies, and very small ones at that. The colossuses have grown smaller by degrees and beautifully less, until at last they have disappeared at the vanishing point of utter littleness. Much of this has come, no doubt, from the fulsome praise of "the fathers." Unless the fathers are in a kind of chronic dotage, I cannot see why they do so, for only harm comes from such flattery. I thought, my dear boy, that your head was slightly swelled after Conference. Hope I was mistaken. Vanity is the besetting sin of the clergy, and whenever a minister of them get together it is nearly certain to show itself either in boastful commendation of their own performances or in disadvantaging criticisms upon the work of others. Old preachers are not entirely free from this, and young ones are far more guilty. But it ought not to be so, because a genuine gospel sermon is not, like a lecture or speech, the sole product of the human intellect. It contains, as essential to it, a divine element, the Holy Ghost himself being an intelligent agent both in its conception and delivery. In preaching a man is, by no means, as hard-shellism teaches, a mere passive instrument, like Balaam's ass, whose mouth was divinely filled; but he is a conscious agent, striving to know and proclaim God's will. And yet without the co-operative presence of the Holy Ghost he is nothing more than sounding brass and tinkling cymbal. A sermon, therefore, is the joint production of the spirit of man and the Spirit of God; and hence, when preached, God as really and truly delivers himself upon the congregation as the preacher does. This is as clearly a fact of personal consciousness and observation as it is a doctrine of the Bible. Moreover, this principle of divine and human co-operation is true of every form of Christian work—preaching, praying, singing, giving, working, etc. Then how dare a man so intimately associated with his Master, in such conscious relationship of personal sympathy, of reciprocal love and confidence, of mutually complemental effort, boast of his own doings?—tell how splendidly he preached, how eloquently he prayed, how he made the people cry, how they praised and feasted him, and made him presents, and paid him up, and want him back, and asked for him? Is this not a vanity that not only ignores the agency of God in his own work, but actually denies him his place and honor and rights by daringly arrogating all to self? Does not such flippant boasting degrade the holy office of preaching to the level of public lecturing or acting? And yet, sad to say, you will hear much of such vain and foolish conversation. "Where, then, is boasting? It is excluded. By what law? Of works? Nay, but by the law of faith." Yes, the law of faith—the life of Christ in the soul shuts out all such "superfinity of naughtiness." Abstain from it as you would from death, for it will surely end in death.

Affectionately,

YOUR UNCLE JOHN.

Letter from China.

Sister S. B. Thomas, to whom the following letter is addressed, has kindly furnished it to us for publication. It will be read with interest and with profit.

MY DEAR SISTER THOMAS: By the last mail a letter was received from you to Bayoung, which she will answer herself very soon. I have not written you since she joined the church and made an open profession of religion. She has made rapid improvement in her studies, and is very earnest in everything she undertakes. We look forward to the time when she will become an active worker for the Lord among the poor, degraded women of China. We can only look to our schools for women to engage in this work. We cannot find them among the people; if so, it is but seldom the case. The girls from the schools established by the different missions are prepared for the work of teaching when they leave the schools, and in many cases, personally known to us, they become most efficient workers. Our trust is in the Lord, the God of Israel. He worked wonders for his people in ages past, and he is working in a wonderful manner in this great stronghold of satan. At our prayer meeting of missionaries this afternoon we had an account given us, by a dear missionary brother who has been laboring for years on the Island of Formosa, of the blessed work of grace now going on in that island. His account of it made our hearts burn within us, and with our whole soul we give all the glory to God. Hundreds are reading the blessed word of God with great delight and joy. The humble peasants, who would never learn the Chinese character, have learned to read the Roman letter, and are now able to read the Bible in the Roman letter. The missionary is able to go from house to house, teaching the people to read the Scriptures, and the joy of the people seems unbounded. I have not been an advocate for teaching the Roman letter except in our schools; but now I am determined, if the Lord gives me grace and strength, to teach it everywhere, and give the Scriptures to the people in a character which they can read and understand. That has been a great drawback to us in China. The great mass of the people cannot read, and will never learn their own characters on account of the great difficulty attending it; whereas they can learn the Roman letter in a few weeks or months, and can with a little effort soon be able to read any part of the Bible. With the blessing of God upon our efforts, great good will be done. Pray for us, my dear sister, and I pray the Lord to pour out a rich blessing upon you, and make your last days days of joy and true happiness in the Lord. We have been greatly cheered from time to time by your kind and welcome letters, and if we are not spared to see you on this earth, we shall hope, through grace, to meet in the heavenly land. Letters from dear friends in America have of late gladdened our hearts, and we are assured of their prayers and good wishes.

Now I must close for the present, and with an earnest request for your sincere prayers for this work in China, I remain

Yours in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

The Congregationalist has reason to believe that more revivals are now in progress than for a long time.

Expository Preaching.

This style of preaching is becoming more and more common. The word of God as the sword of the Spirit is the true weapon. Dr. Taylor, in his seventh lecture at Yale Divinity School, speaks as follows of the advantages of the expository method:

As to the advantages of this method: 1. It brings both preacher and hearer into direct contact with the mind of the Spirit and of God. This should be the minister's great aim, and, thus speaking, he will speak as one having authority. Whatever his other powers, he must clothe himself with his peculiar power—the word of God behind him. Thus only can he make man feel that it is God with whom they have to do. 2. It secures variety in the ministrations of the preacher. It will prevent the setting forth of favorite themes only. It will secure that variety in unity which is the charm of the Bible. Thus Romans, Galatians and James present us each a different feature of justification.

The neglect of expository preaching may explain in part short pastorates. The merely topical preacher wears himself out in drawing too exclusively from his own resources. Let him take a look at the Bible, or the discourses of Jesus, or the meditations of David. 3. The preacher will thus be compelled to treat subjects from which he would otherwise have shrunk, but which need setting forth if he would declare the whole counsel of God. By the expository method he can touch every class of men, and every man, too, without seeming to have gone purposely out of his way to do so. He will be led to preach on every great theme—not his favorite ones only—and to give each truth its own proportion. Thus, too, such valuable books as Deuteronomy and Nehemiah would no longer be neglected. 4. The promotion of biblical intelligence among our people will be another advantage. Right here the knowledge of many church-goers is seriously limited; and in these days of the rapid increase of new books we need more and more to exalt the Bible, the fountain of all truth, whose instructions give strength and stability to character. 5. A final advantage is that in the process of preparing his expository discourses the preacher will acquire a great store of materials which he can use on other occasions, and will have constantly suggested to him fresh subjects for topical sermons. This I have found true in an eminent degree in my own experience.

Education as Capital.

Chancellor Haven, writing in the Methodist about boys and the record of college graduates, says:

"The Wesleyan University alumni record has a brief history of all the alumni of that college from its foundation in 1833 to 1874, of whom more than one thousand were alive at the date of publication, and of them only fourteen were classified 'superannuated,' or for other reasons out of employment."

I have been connected with three universities sixteen years of my life, and have seen about eight hundred young men graduate from college, and do not know now of five out of the whole number, alive and well, who are not making a comfortable living. Of them I do not know of one who "feeds on unbuttered crusts," or who is in a condition fairly described by that figure of speech. Nearly all the penny-liners whom I have seen, doomed to earn a scanty subsistence by the lowest kind of literary work—if long persisted in—were not college graduates, but men who, without education, had simply picked up just about enough practical ability with the pen to do that and nothing more.

I have known many college graduates to begin with such work, but never one, unless he was intemperate, long to remain in it. I have known a large number to enter into business of various kinds, some starting at the bottom—mechanical, mercantile, agricultural—but never one who did not find his education profitable to him, in the lowest practical money-getting sense of the word.

I am aware that there are some rich men's sons in our large cities sent to college rather than choosing a course of thorough study, who dally about home after graduation, and fail to accomplish much for a long time, but always, I believe, simply from the want of sufficient motive power to go to work; and, I am constrained to believe, usually doing much better than those same men could have been induced to do without an education.

The fact is, education is capital, and the best kind of capital in this country. To test the question, depend on no man's opinion, not even on mine, but consult the records of the alumni of any one of our colleges, and abide by the actual facts.

Rev. G. H. Wells, writing to the Southern Christian Advocate, March 31, concerning the union revival meetings recently held in Charleston, S. C., says:

"I have no doubt this good work will go on in each charge, and great results will yet follow. All the churches participating in the work have been greatly blessed. At Trinity we have secured twenty-seven by profession; and our membership is revived, greatly encouraged, and working with a new spirit of consecration to God. To me personally it has been a period of great labor, but also of unspeakable joy. I can only say, with the psalmist: 'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me, bless his holy name.'

Pray for us in this dear old city, that while we suffer many things, and endure great poverty and trial, we may be strengthened, settled, perfected, and many children be brought to his eternal glory.

Flattery is like base coin—it impoverishes him who receives it.

Dr. Pierce's Ninety-Second Birthday.

On Friday, March 24, says Dr. Kennedy, editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, the venerable Dr. Pierce completed his ninety-first and entered upon his ninety-second year. In accordance with family usage, long observed, the anniversary was celebrated by a gathering of the dear "old doctor's" descendants, who spent the day in joyous reunion, and feasted together at a sumptuous board. Accepting a kind invitation to join the family on this interesting occasion, we boarded the Macon and Augusta train at half-past five A. M., and in a few hours, through the courtesy of the gentlemanly conductor, we were dropped at the gate of "Sunshine," the happy, hospitable home of Bishop Pierce, and his son-in-law, Bro. Turner. The genial smile and hearty hand-shake of the Bishop greeted us as we stepped from the train, and we were conducted immediately to his father's chamber. Having passed a restless night, and being sadly prostrated by a most exhausting cough, his appearance gave painful emphasis to the feebly uttered remark: "I am very near heaven." Though we had several times been with Dr. Pierce when extremely ill, we never saw him when he seemed so near his end as on this morning, and we could not dismiss grave apprehensions that the worn veteran might close his long pilgrimage on this anniversary of its beginning. With that wonderful power of recuperation, however, which has so often restored him to comparative health from the very grave's mouth, his system responded promptly to the tonic influence of the society of friends and loved ones, and before the company dispersed he was comfortable, cheerful, and talked with considerable ease, to the edification and delight of all who stood at his bedside. In almost any other case it would be utterly unreasonable to indulge an expectation of further service from one so aged and prostrate; but in the light of Dr. Pierce's unique history we do not regard it an irrational hope that he may reach Baltimore in May, and, if not stand, in place, as our leading messenger to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South.

The Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of April 7 announces a change of proprietors, the paper having been purchased by several responsible and well-known laymen of the Baltimore Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. Rev. Samuel K. Cox, D. D., has been called to the editorial chair, and Dr. Poisal has consented to continue his services as agent and editorial correspondent. We heartily welcome Dr. Cox to the brotherhood of the quill, and trust that he may find his labors agreeable and abundantly useful.

We give a paragraph from the new editor's salutatory:

Esteeming the power of the press as second only to that of the pulpit, we shall enter upon the duties assigned us with the profoundest conviction of their grave responsibility, and depending upon divine guidance and aid in their faithful performance. We trust that at no time shall we be betrayed into any utterance foreign either to the spirit or genius of our holy Christianity. Toward our brethren of other denominations we shall seek to manifest a large and liberal charity, and to maintain the entente cordiale among our confreres of the press.

A HIDDEN THING TO LIGHT.—A correspondent of Zion's Herald, Boston, the organ of New England Methodism, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, writes, as known whereof he affirms, about a certain "secret council" at Round Lake. It seems there was hugging in public and plotting in private. The letter throws light in a dark place. It says:

"At the Round Lake camp meeting last summer a secret council was held, composed of the leading men of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church, the Zion Church and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, then present at the camp meeting, for consultation on the question of Methodist unity. They even went further, and proposed the forming of a union commission to take charge of the financial affairs of the new church."

We see from a late number of the Albany Register, Albany, Ore., that the ladies of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church South, of Albany, Ore., recently gave an entertainment by which sufficient funds were raised to pay off the church debt. The same paper informs us that the pastor, Rev. T. B. White, is engaged in a protracted meeting. God bless our friends in Albany, Ore., and the pastor and his family especially.

It is with great sorrow that we are called to record the death of Edward McGehee Burruss, only son of the well-known and esteemed Christian gentleman, John W. Burruss, of Woodville, Miss., who died several years ago. Edward McGehee Burruss died at the Cliftwood plantation, parish of West Feliciana, on Sunday, April 2, 1876, aged thirty-three years.

Rev. Christian Keener and his bride spent the past week in our city, on a visit to his old home and father's house. We congratulate them on their happy and auspicious union.

The Presbyterian General Assembly of the United States will be held in the Brooklyn Tabernacle, commencing May 17. The delegates will number about five hundred clergymen.

TO

The Property Owners and Citizens

THE CITY OF NEW ORLEANS.

FELLOW CITIZENS: In a very few days we shall be called upon, in accordance with law, to vote for or against a proposition to assess the property of this parish one-half of one per cent. per annum for four years, to aid in the construction of the New Orleans Pacific Railway, a great enterprise now being rapidly pushed forward from Shreveport on Red river to the northern part of the state.

This road, when completed, it is undisputed, will restore to our city a very large proportion, if not all of the lucrative trade which has been diverted into other and alien channels; will stay the ominously downward tendency of real estate of the parish, now almost without saleable or reimprovable value; will ensure a return of profitable business to our merchants, traders and manufacturers; will furnish remunerative employment to thousands of educated young men, who are now languishing in enforced idleness and undeserved poverty, and will double the present rates of wages almost by skilled and unskilled workmen, by [illegible] of every description, longshoremen, draymen, day laborers, and the many other classes of workmen, unclassified, who get their bread in the multifarious occupations of society.

It is upon them, if it appears to us which we, suffering and despondent people, are called upon to give or to ask ourselves, is just that we shall consent to assess ourselves half of one per centum per annum for four years, with every reasonable prospect of the flattering results described, if we refuse so to do, with the moral certainty of witnessing a permanent loss of [illegible] far greater depreciation of our property, more ruinous diminution of our wealth, and ultimate depopulation of the city.

[illegible] the only question to be that really is presented to the people presented. It is not whether the citizens of Caddo can pay the [illegible] per cent. per annum for four years and if they will receive stock in the road, [illegible] control of it, or not; whether it will, or will not, pay a satisfactory return on the money; or whether any other [illegible] could be made. It is not whether the [illegible] is a good or a bad investment. It is simply whether the citizens of this parish will consent to assess themselves in the trifling sum of one-half of one per cent. per annum for four years, in order to secure the construction of a railroad which will restore to our city and to our parish the trade which has been diverted from us, and which will enable us to compete successfully with other cities for the trade of the country which is naturally tributary to us.

Shall we do this? Shall we consent to assess ourselves in the trifling sum of one-half of one per cent. per annum for four years, in order to secure the construction of the New Orleans Pacific Railway, which will restore to our city the trade which has been diverted from us, and which will enable us to compete successfully with other cities for the trade of the country which is naturally tributary to us?

Farm, Garden and Household.

Thoughts for the Month.

COTTON-PLANTING.

Late-planted cotton grows off better than early-planted, but in localities where the seasons are short it is important to plant early, to secure maturing of the crop. In such cases the plant may be pushed off by supplying it with easily-assimilated food, immediately within reach, as by soaking seed in stable-manure water and rolling in plaster, or rolling in ammoniated fertilizers, or applying small quantities of these say fifty pounds in the drill with the seed. The non-ammoniated dissolved bones or acid phosphates must not be used for this purpose, as they will injure the seed. Cotton should be planted very shallow—one inch is ample depth. But, dry weather prevailing, it may not come up if the seeds are so near the surface.

LATE CORN.

As soon as cotton is planted, bottom corn should be put in, if the land is dry enough. Last year we adopted the plan of planting a rather narrow bottom in checks, running the rows diagonally across in both directions, and were much pleased. The rows were of good length, that the edges could be plowed much better, and the hoe work was greatly reduced. By running the rows up the slopes on each side more or less dirt was washed down, and the bare places filled up. It facilitated also the planting of peas, which were dropped between the hills of corn in the water-furrow of the second plowing, and were thus readily covered by the next plowing.

UPLAND RICE

should be planted this month to get it out of the way of the May birds, and to insure sufficient length of season for maturity. Highland rice is liable to be cheated by dry weather, and fortunately, unlike corn, it will wait, if given an early start and it is very apt to get through.

SWEET POTATOES

Be sure to have slips ready by the first of May, watering the beds freely if necessary, and covering them during cold nights.

GROUND PEAS AND CHUFAS

should be planted this month. For the former select land that will not crust readily, that the young fruit may find no difficulty in penetrating the soil; if it does not it will perish. Manure as for cotton. Chufas will grow on any kind of soil—a moderately sandy one seems to suit them best. Plant in rows two and a half feet apart, and make hills one foot apart in the drill.

The chufa is not a grass proper, but grows under similar conditions, and ought to have the same kind of manuring—that is, one in which the ammoniacal element predominates. Cotton seed would doubtless be excellent. We have had very numerous applications for chufas this season, from parties desirous of planting them; and we hope some of our readers will make it a point to raise a lot for sale, and advertise them next fall. All the friends of hog-raising ought to encourage their cultivation.

MILLET AND FRILLED CORN

should be planted the latter part of the month—it may be done later, but the early crops are the surest. It is useless to plant these crops on any but excessively rich land. If a piece of good land is plowed and harrowed about the first of May, so as to kill the spring weeds, crab grass, will usually come up very thick, and yield an abundant crop of first quality hay, without the cost of seed. The hay is easily cured, very nutritious, and highly relished by stock. It is strange our farmers do not utilize this plant more extensively. It might be well to try the plan of sowing cow-peas to come up with the grass—the two combined would make still better hay.—Southern Cultivator.

MANURE FOR GRASS.—No crop gets less attention than grass. If manured at all, it is only incidentally with some other crop—rarely by itself alone. Corn, wheat and barley get the manure, and when seeded the young clover takes what is left. After this, if the field be pastured, the droppings of animals left in lumps over the field are all that the lands get till plowed again. This is considered improving the soil—and it is. No matter how much manured, clover is a benefit, and, whatever else he may do, the farmer who sows and grows clover is making his farm better. What, then, might not the result be if the same care were taken of the clover field as of other crops? It does not need cultivating; the long, deep reaching roots mellow and pulverize the soil as nothing else can. If the clover grows thriftily, the top acts as a mulch, shading the ground and keeping it moist. A crop of two tons or more of clover, which, plowed under or cut for hay, can hardly fail to leave the soil better than it was before. It should be the farmer's aim to grow the largest possible crops of clover. A slight dressing of gypsum—one hundred pounds per acre in early spring—often produces wonderful results. But if a farmer has to use well-rotted manure the scrapings of barnyards, &c., the time to apply it. Clover is often injured by the frost and thaws getting under it, and a very slight covering of manure will afford a great deal of protection. Rich earth from the corners of the fences is well worth drawing a short distance to young clover, provided the ground is hard and firm. If the field is not to be mowed next season, coarse manure can be used.—Country Gentleman.

SWEET OIL FOR THE BITE OF POISON.—A farmer writes: "It is now over twenty years since I heard that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing that it would cure other kinds of poison. Practice and experience have taught me that it will cure poisons of any kind, both on man and beast. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse, it takes eight times as much as for a man. One of the most extreme cases of snake-bites occurred eleven years ago. It had been of thirty days' standing, and the patient had been given up by his physician. I gave him a spoonful of the oil, which effected a cure. It will cure bloat in cattle caused by fresh clover. It will cure the sting of bees, spiders or other insects, and persons who have been poisoned by a slow, running vine called ivy."

TO CHECK THE BORER.—Scoop out the ground, funnel-shape, some three or four inches from the base of the tree, to the depth of the first surface root, and clear out all gummy ooze with a knife, and kill borers in sight, and then fill the space you have dug out with coarse, dry salt—rock salt, if possible, or that from refuse fish brine is good and cheap. The weather will dissolve this gradually, and what is made liquid thereby will enter worm-holes in sufficient quantity to "salt out" the borers without injury to the tree, which takes its nourishment at the extremity of its rootlets and far away from the trunk—where the salt is.—Rural World.

The commissioners of the Centennial assume that 700 head of cattle will cover all desirable entries, and apportion stalls upon that basis—270 to Shorthorns, 110 to Channel Islands, 70 to Devons, 90 to Holsteins, 70 to Ayrshires, and 70 to other pure breeds. Dwight and fat cattle to be admitted irrespective of breed.

"What is the interior of Africa principally used for?" asked a teacher of a pupil. "For purposes of exploration," was the reply.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIRUP

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Bowels is so well known, and has been tested for so many years by such extensive patronage, that it would be superfluous, at this late day, to dwell at any length on its efficiency in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach, or Bowels, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all pulmonary disorders, such as Rheumatism, Diarrhœa, or Dysentery and Summer Complaints, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into confirmed cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on Consumption, it has been found most effectual in preventing that most awful scourge whenever timely resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of cure, its truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, as it requires no particular diet. It is also the cheapest, not only because the bottle contains more than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Sirup will keep for years without fermenting, and it can be used in families whenever needed by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Sirup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Sirup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from half to six teaspoonfuls during the day, according to their age, and thousands have been restored to its great curative powers by mail and circulars forwarded on application (postage 10 cents).

Agent for New Orleans, 39 Chartres st.

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint,

HARMLESS, BEAUTIFUL, PERMANENT.

This preparation has received the approval of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations for the hair. No washing or preparation of the hair necessary before using.

[illegible]

And its use saves both time and labor as it drops applied with a comb, once a month to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose, rendering the operation perfectly free from odor or defection. Its great recommendation is to produce in two applications any desired shade from light brown to the deepest black without the absence of that dry and harmful appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery is applied to a single hair, or spots that have been rubbed off, can be restored to their original shade without flying all over the head, as is necessary in using other Hair Dyes.

Scientific.

—While excavating for the foundation of some new buildings in The Verulam road, St. Alban's, London, the workmen engaged have dug up a number of ancient urns, two of which have, with care, been tolerably preserved. The best specimen is made of common clay, and is 7¼ inches in height, and 8 inches in diameter. The contents of the urn were fragments of bone, and one human patella of the right knee. Another urn, of a light-colored clay, was found to contain fragments of a human skull, as far as could be ascertained, together with fragments of clay glass and a small iron nail. An English journal says the balance of evidence is in favor of their being British, in which case the date of their construction must be before A. D. 449.

—Prof. Lielegg gives some details of the method by which damasked metal plates are manufactured. From forty to forty thin sheets of gold, silver, copper, and different alloys, are placed one upon another, in a certain order, and welded together at the edges, so that the whole forms a single thick plate. By the aid of lines of different forms, conical or semi-conical, the plate is then pierced with holes, the sides of which appear, in consequence of the difference in the colors of the sheets, formed of circles, triangles, squares or hexagons. The plate is then submitted alternately to hammering and rolling, until it becomes very fine and the holes have completely disappeared. The concentric figures are thus stretched at the same time that their parallelism is preserved, and the result is an almost innumerable quantity of straight, broken and oblique lines, which do not cross one another, and are distinguished by a variety of colors—a variety which may be still further increased by dipping in certain acids.

—From time to time we have taken note of discoveries of plants in China and Japan that seem to have counterpart in some of our own species. A recent observation of this kind refers to Strathiopteris Japonica, which is closely allied to our well-known fern, Strathiopteris Germanica. It is worthy of remark that where this correspondence exists the species as represented here are not very numerous; as, for instance, Staphyllea, Magnolia, Liriodendron, Cynanchum, Alnus, and so forth. There is no doubt some important meaning to these facts, that is waiting to be worked out. Some paleontologists contend that, if the bottom of the Pacific ocean could be searched, many a "link" at present missing would doubtless be found. If it were known to be a fact that the Pacific ocean was formed by a tremendous subsidence of the land, within a comparatively recent period, then we could imagine that some of the great centers of plant growth had been swept away, and that a few families that had extended some individuals to a considerable distance from the center of the circle—that is, Asia and America—were thus able to continue a representation, though the great bulk were swept away. But this is, of course, mere supposition and not science.

—The question of a preservative cheaper and at the same time more serviceable than alcohol, is a very practical one. Prof. Verrill has made numerous experiments in years past, and this summer, in connection with Prof. Rice, has made numerous experiments with various chemical preparations, with two main objects in view: first, to improve the method of preserving specimens for museum purposes or to devise new methods; and, second, to ascertain the best means of killing, in an expanded state, species that ordinarily contract badly when put directly into alcohol. Numerous and beautiful preparations of sea anemones and medusæ in a state of nearly complete expansion were made by slowly adding a saturated solution of picric acid to a small quantity of sea-water, in which they had been allowed to stand. "When fairly dead they were transferred to a pure saturated solution of the acid, and allowed to remain from one to three hours, according to size, etc. They were then preserved in alcohol of about sixty to seventy per cent., for permanent preservation. The alcohol should be renewed after a day or two, and this should be repeated until the water is all absorbed from the specimen." Hydroid polyps and jelly fishes can be beautifully preserved by placing them alive in the acid.

The receipts proper at this port since the first of September, exclusive of the arrivals from Mobile, Florida and Texas, are 1,319,558 bales, against 1,358,875 bales to the same date last year, and the increase in the receipts at all the ports up to the latest mail dates, as compared with last year, is 616,969 bales. The increase by the reports per telegraph, is 618,701—3,885,597, against 3,266,896. In the exports from the United States to foreign countries, as compared with the same date last year, there is an increase of 146,125 bales to Great Britain, of 87,502 to France, and of 286,740 to other foreign ports.

The crop of sugar and molasses is well nigh in, and the demand is almost confined to our grocery trade, who buy according to daily demand. We notice that our sugar sheds are well patronized. We quote market dull for sugar: Inferior 5 7/16c., good common 7 to 7¼c., fair 7½ 7¾c., prime 7¾c., choice 8¼c., yellow clarified 9 9¼c., white clarified 9¾ 10c. Market dull for molasses at 32c. for centrifugals; reboiled plantation 48c.

POULTRY.—Western-grown chickens sell at $7@7.50, young $3@4.50, ducks $3@4.50, geese $6@8, turkeys $1@1.50 ₰ dozen.

EGGS.—The market is bare and there is a good inquiry for them. Western would command 18@19c., Louisiana 20c. ₰ dozen.

ESCULENTS AND GREEN VEGETABLES.—The supply of potatoes and onions is large and the demand remains limited; prices are easier for buyers. Apples are scarce. No demand for sour krout and plenty on hand. Good demand for cabbages. Potatoes—Russetts, Early Rose and Peerless are selling at 50 75c., according to quality, Peerlesslows $1@1.10. Onions—Choice red $1.00@1.25, choice yellow and silver-skin $1.50@1.75. Choice apples $5@5.50 ₰ bbl. Sour krout is quoted nominally $2.50@3 ₰ bbl. Cabbages sell at $5@6 ₰ bbl.

MONETARY.

The banks are well supplied with greenbacks, and no difficulty is found by first-class houses obtaining all the discounts asked for; but dealers are quite cautious, and refuse proffered loans for want of confidence in the profitableness of investments. All paper, 9@10 per cent.; gilt-edged, 8 per cent. per annum.

Gold opened on Tuesday at 113¾@114 against 113 at New York, and after a limited business closed at the opening rate in both markets.

No sales of silver have been reported. American half dollars are now quoted at 102@103 currency, and Mexican dollars at 90 gold.

DRY GOODS.

COUNTRY ORDERS.

1876.--SPRING.--1876.

PARTIES RESIDING IN

Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas,

AND ADJACENT STATES, WHO BUY THEIR

DRY GOODS FOR CASH,

Are invited to send to us for samples, which will be forwarded to them

FREE OF COST AND POSTAGE PAID,

and where we are favored with orders that exceed $10 the Freight Thereon will be Prepaid at our Expense. Where the order exceeds $20 we will Pay the Cost of sending the money to us, whether by Express, Money Order, Registered Letter, Bank Draft or otherwise.

The new postal law permits parcels weighing four pounds or less to be sent by mail, at the rate of one cent an ounce, so that parties ordering less than $10 worth can have their purchases sent to them through their postoffices at a very slight expense. Parties sending to us for samples should be careful to write their names and address as plainly as possible, and where they desire packages sent by mail they should make provision for the postage, unless the order exceeds $10, when it will be forwarded at our cost. The Postage on Parcels must be Prepaid.

Goods sent C. O. D. to all points where the Express Company or Packets have Agents.

As a Matter of Accommodation we will purchase articles outside of our line, which are confined to Fancy and Staple Dry Goods, but we do not pay the freight thereon unless the order for Dry Goods exceeds $10. For instance: If a party orders a piece of cotton, $6, and a hat, $5, the order would not be entitled to have the freight paid by us; but if the order was for a piece of cotton, a dress pattern, $5, and a hat, or any other article not in our line, $10, the freight would be prepaid on the whole. We make no charges for purchasing articles to a limited extent, and always do the best we can for our patrons.

Articles not corresponding to order can be Returned at our Expense.

Should we not be able to fill the order the money will be Returned at our Expense.

We make no charge for Cases, Baling, Strapping, Drayage or Insurance.

Orders should be addressed to the firm to insure prompt attention.

The personal attention of one of the partners given to country orders.

We have been in the business more than

TWENTY YEARS,

and the steady yearly increase affords a gratifying record of Fair Dealing, to which we refer with pride. ☞ We are already beginning to receive

SABBATH MORNING.

BY REV. J. B. TOWNE, D. D.

Holy, holy, holy morn!
When creation first was born—
When the Earth from chaos sprang—
When the Star of Morning sang,
And the finished temple stood
Beautiful, for all was good Man, in innocence arrayed,
Then his simple worship paid;
Praise was then his whole employ—
All his notes were notes of joy.

Holy, holy, holy morn!
Lo! a new creation born!
Christ hath burst Death's iron bars
Shout again, ye Morning Stars!
Peace on earth, good will to men—
Strike, ye Angel harps again!
Man redeemed!—his ransom paid!
Christ has full atonement made!
Let the charms of the skies
Hail the day that saw him rise!
Let the Earth, from labor free,
Keep the holy Jubilee!

NEW YORK, April 14.—The will of ... Stewart, filed in the surrogate's ... this afternoon, bequeaths his ...rty and estate to his wife, Cor... M. Stewart, and her heirs for... and appoints Judge Henry Hil... to act in behalf of the estate and in managing his affairs. As a mark of regard, Mr. Stewart bequeaths to Mr. Hilton the sum of $1,000,000. He appoints his wife, Judge Hilton and William Libbey his executors. The subscribing witnesses to the will are William P. Smith, William H. White and E. B. Marcy, M. D. The will bears the date of March 27, 1873. He directs his executors to pay out the following gifts as legacies:

To George B. Butler $20,000, to John M. Hopkins $10,000, to A. K. P. Cooper $10,000, to Edwin J. Denning $10,000, to John Green $10,000, George H. Higgins $10,000, to Henry H. Rice $5,000, John Debrot $5,000, to Robert Prather Roe $5,000, Hugh Connor $5,000, Dodge $5,000, William Armstrong $5,000, William P. Smith $5,000, to Sarah and Rebecca Morrow $12,000 annuity in quarterly installments during their joint lives, and also the house No. 30 East Thirty-Ninth street, and the furniture therein; to Ellen B. Hilton $5,000. In a codicil he makes the following bequests to be paid from his estate: To Charles P. Clinch, Anna Clinch, Julia Clinch, Emma Clinch, Sarah Smith and her daughter, Cornelia S. Smith, $10,000 each; and to Anna, Emma and Julia Clinch the house and lot No. 115 East Thirty-Fifth street, and the furniture therein. To all employes who have been in his service over twenty years he leaves $1,000 each, and to those over ten years $500 each.

He hopes that his plans for the welfare of his fellow-men will be faithfully carried out by his executors.

A letter appended to Mr. Stewart's will, dated March 29, 1873, and addressed to his wife, contains the following in regard to his intended public charities: "It has been and is my intention to make provision for various public charities, but as any scheme of the kind I propose will need considerable thought and elaboration, and have made my will with the codicils in their present shape, to guard against any contingency, knowing I may rely on your supplying all deficiencies on my part, I hope and trust my life may be spared, so that I may complete the various plans for the welfare of our fellow-beings which I have already initiated; but, should it be ruled otherwise, I must depend upon you, with such aid as you may call about you, to carry out what I have begun. Our friend Judge Hilton will, I know, give you any assistance in his power, and to him I refer you for a general understanding of the various methods and plans which I have at times, with him, considered and discussed."

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Babcock was indicted to-day, with Harrington and others, for complicity in the safe burglary conspiracy. The affair occasions great excitement among the District ring.

NEW YORK, April 16.—His majesty, Dom Pedro, of Brazil, accompanied by the Empress and suite, attended divine service at St. Patrick's cathedral this morning. The Emperor and Empress were given seats in the sanctuary within the railing. Solemn high mass was celebrated, and Vicar General Quinnan, on behalf of Cardinal McCloskey, who is sick, welcomed their majesties to this country, and congratulated them on their prosperous voyage. He prayed that the remainder of their journey would be equally auspicious and happy. Large crowds assembled both inside and outside of the church to catch a glimpse of the imperial visitors. After church they were driven through Central Park.

WASHINGTON, April 17.—The President signed the silver bill to-day. Many letters with money have been received at the treasury, to be exchanged for silver. It is not generally known that silver will be given only for fractional currency, not for legal tenders or national bank notes.

MEMPHIS, April 17.—A letter from Bolivar county, Miss., says the levee broke in front of Col. Wade's plantation on Friday evening, about a mile below Duck Ridge crevasse. The water gushed through with frightful velocity, and it was with difficulty Mrs. Wade and her daughter were rescued. The whole of this alluvial region is being submerged.

MCCOMB CITY, Miss., April 17.—At 1:30 yesterday afternoon a fire broke out in the foundry of the New Orleans, St. Louis and Chicago railroad, spreading and consuming the tin and boiler shops. The blacksmith, machine and pattern shops were on fire; also the round-house. By the very utmost exertions of the employees and a fire engine the buildings were saved.

GALVESTON, April 17. A Galveston News special from Brownsville, dated the sixteenth, says a government force occupied Victoria, the capital of Tamaulipas, and demanded of Gov. Corales whether he pronounced for Diaz. Corales is at San Fernando, together with the State Legislature. Gen. Escobedo reached Monterey yesterday with six hundred government cavalry.

The revolutionists are exacting forced loans from the merchants at Nuevo Laredo, Mexico. Consular officers are understood to be endeavoring to obtain military assistance to resist it.

Diaz seized several hundred stand of arms in Matamoras yesterday.

FOREIGN.

RIO JANEIRO, April 11. Yellow fever is raging with unusual violence.

CONSTANTINOPLE, April 13.—The Levant Herald reports the plague increasing at Bagdad, where, on March 26, thirty new cases and ten deaths were reported.

LONDON, April 14. The striking colliers in South Yorkshire and Derbyshire now number thirty thousand.

Weather fair, but still cold. The recent snow was the heaviest of the winter, and in some parts of the country the heaviest in many years.

Fellow-Citizens:

The undersigned, who have hitherto been and are now acting as directors of the New Orleans Pacific Railway Company, would respectfully invite your attention to the following explanation and appeal:

We accepted the places we fill, and elected of our number the necessary officers to discharge all needful duties, without any immediate benefit or hope of future reward, beyond what all believe every citizen will derive, viz.: his just proportion of the returned prosperity we sanguinely anticipate to follow the completion of the railroad. Circumstances, however, have compelled us to deviate from our original plan for construction of the road, and, instead, to rely upon the public spirit, the self-denial and the patriotism of our fellow-citizens to impose a burden upon themselves slight as compared with the magnificent returns they may expect when this great work shall have been accomplished, when it will be forever owned here, and built and equipped without a dollar of debt on it.

Now we hold there is little or no difference of opinion among our fellow-citizens as to the necessity of a road to draw hither, at the earliest possible moment, the immense trade now diverted from us, which, in one product alone, is, we believe, correctly set down at seven hundred thousand bales of cotton a year, which at reasonable valuation exceeds $30,000,000; and as there is universal unanimity among our diversified population on the subject of a road, it appears to us that every objection to an enterprise so vital to our commercial salvation will disappear if the following suggestion meets the approval of our fellow-citizens and is acted upon:

We propose that the various public bodies representing the commerce, the mechanical arts and the other industrial interests of the city shall select representatives to visit the New Orleans Pacific railway, inspect the works in every part so far as it has gone, and on their return choose two suitable accountants to examine the books and vouchers of the company, and make a minute report of the same for the satisfaction of every one.

The Cotton Exchange, Merchants' Exchange, Chamber of Commerce, Clearinghouse, Board of Underwriters, Mechanics' Association, Laborers' Association, Stevedores', Longshoremen's and Clerks' Associations, in fact representative men of every organization for the commercial and industrial development and advancement of our city should, in our opinion, come forward at this critical juncture in her affairs and lend their influence in carrying out the suggestion we make in order to satisfy all parties whether or not this great public work of our people is being carried out in accordance with their wishes, and for the best good of all parties who have the welfare of this great city deeply at heart.

If the voluntary or involuntary subscribers to this great public work should, after a more thorough examination of the affairs of the company by the committee chosen, decide that any change in the board of direction would be advisable for the public interest, there is not one among our number that will not cheerfully step aside, resigning our charge into other hands.

Our sole aim is to connect New Orleans with a region capable of furnishing to it, immediately or in the early future, an immense reciprocal trade, without which we are firmly persuaded our great city will continue to lose its wealth, its importance, its prestige, and, above all, its reputation, of inestimable value and consideration.

There should be but one rivalry in this community: that of each endeavoring to outdo the other in resolute and enlightened exertions for the promotion of public and social interests, and in this spirit we make this appeal.

NEW ORLEANS, April 15, 1876.

An improvement, says the Churchman, has been introduced into bookbinding, which will be welcomed by the clergy and Sunday school superintendents who are forced to witness the rapid destruction of Sunday school hymnals, text books and library books by careless scholars. By this new process books are sewed with wire, so that it is almost impossible to tear them apart. The Riverside Press has secured one of the costly machines for this work, and the first book to which the process has been applied is the Rev. C. L. Hatfield's "Sunday School Hymnal and Service Book."

As though there were not Smiths enough already, they have started a "Smith Manufacturing Company" in Connecticut.

Letter from Bishop Wightman.

KEY WEST.

Since my visit to this island, four years ago, there has been considerable improvement in many respects. New houses have been erected, among them a large and handsome public school building; new streets have been opened; shops have multiplied; the second Methodist church has been finished inside, and newly painted outside, and makes a very neat appearance; the parsonage of the First church has been enlarged; the merry voices of children are heard in the streets in the afternoon, and their kites are flying on all the highways. The population is set down in round numbers at 11,000, of which 4,000 are whites, 4,500 are Cubans, white and colored, and the residue American and Bahama colored. A large business is done in the manufacture of Cuba tobacco into cigars. Quite a fleet of small schooners find employment in the sponge business and in fishing.

On Wednesday night I attended the regular weekly service of the Methodist Cubans. It is held in Bro. Fulwood's church. Fifty odd persons were in attendance. The meeting was opened by a young Cuban brother, an exhorter—Henriquez Someillan—who read a chapter of the New Testament in Spanish, gave out a Spanish hymn, which was well sung, the organ leading, and then a prayer in the same language. A short address followed, and then another, quite animated, by a young brother, Aurelio Silvera. The pastor of the church then introduced me to the audience, and requested "el Obispo" to say a few words—which he did. Someillan interpreting. How I wished I was mistress of the sonorous Spanish tongue for an occasion so deeply interesting to me! Bro. Fulwood followed, and the meeting was closed with another hymn in Spanish, and the benediction in English.

I witnessed a very solemn and impressive baptismal service in the same church some days after. Bro. Fulwood has so far acquired a knowledge of Spanish that he can read readily the baptismal, marriage and burial services from our Spanish Book of Discipline. He married a Cuban couple while I was on the island, but I did not witness the ceremony. He is called upon very often for offices of this sort. Here were developments within a year or two of profound import. Forty or fifty of this West India population, some of them persons of culture and elegant manners, brought into the fellowship of the Methodist Episcopal Church South—refugees from their native soil, coming in contact for the first time with a Protestant civilization, breaking away from the superstitions, throwing off the control, and defying the magisterial authority of the Roman religion; best of all, seeking and finding in Christ pardon, peace, the witness of God's Spirit, and the answer of a good conscience within. Sister C. Valdez was the first to join the Methodist Church. I never looked at her placid, intellectual face without emotion. She cannot speak English, is a somewhat elderly lady, of respectable connections in Havana, and has been here a year or two. She was a sincere religionist according to the rites and beliefs of the Roman Catholic Church, in which she was for many years striving to find settled peace of mind. Here was very much Martin Luther's case over again: "I knew God only as a judge and an avenger; and when the name of Jesus was mentioned I did not think of one whose attractive loveliness should draw me to him, but of one from whose presence I should flee, and from whose omniscient eye I should try to escape. I dreaded the very name of Christ. In all my religion, there was a background of terror." But, as in his case, so in hers—justification came by simple faith, without any sacerdotal offices, and the joy of a conscious salvation filled her heart. She has found, what she never knew before, full satisfaction to all the longings and questionings of a sincere soul inquiring after truth.

I was much interested also in the case of Aurelio Silvera Cordova, the young brother who took part in the Cuban prayer meeting. He is a fine-looking young man, about twenty-one years of age. He was a student in the Royal University of Havana, and had taken his degrees in some of the departments charged with sympathy for the rebellion. Mr. Silvera found it necessary to leave Havana. He came to Key West, where he was soon after joined by his father, a gentleman of handsome property and respectable standing in the legal profession. Aurelio was brought to Christ as a personal Savior probably through the instrumentality of Diez, a saintly man, who acted as a colporteur for a few months last year, and died greatly lamented. He joined our communion, and is now a licensed exhorter. He is a fluent speaker, with graceful gesticulation, warmth, tenderness and impressiveness in his public addresses. His father and mother have both joined the church with him. Aurelio is a hard student, and if he lives and continues faithful will be apt to make his mark upon the future Protestantism of his native island.

We have another quite promising young man, a licensed exhorter—Henriquez Someillan. He is about the same age as Silvera, speaks English fluently, and has had the advantages of some years or two of instruction in one of our Southern schools. His father was arrested and sent to Spain, and afterward liberated, and now lives at Key West. Someillan joined the Methodist Church last year, and has been studying theology with Silvera, under the instruction of Bro. Fulwood. He has fine capabilities of usefulness, and certainly a very inviting field of opportunities.

After a careful consultation with Bro. Fulwood I heartily sanctioned the plan of establishing a mission school for the Cuban population, and had the pleasure of inaugurating the enterprise on Washington's birthday. We place at the head of this Miss Annis Pyfrom, a lady of admirable qualifications. Her family were Wesleyan Methodists on one of the Bahama group of islands, and she was reared from childhood in the "nurture of the Lord." They have been living in Key West for some years. Miss Pyfrom speaks the Spanish language fluently, has fine cultivation and excellent administrative ability, and has long desired to devote herself to some such field of usefulness. She will be assisted by Aurelio Silvera in the higher departments, and by Sister Valdez in the lower. Arrangements are made for instruction in instrumental music, if there is a demand for this. A hall has been rented in a central part of the town, and seats and desks furnished for fifty pupils. With devout prayer, and some half dozen brief addresses, the enterprise was started. Quarterly reports of its condition and progress will be made to the Foreign Board of Missions. We need very much a house of worship for the Cuban population. If God furnishes the preachers, may not the Mission Board, aided by the church, furnish the means for its early erection?

It is fortunate for us that we have as superintendent of this mission, which aims at far-reaching ends, a man so suitable as Bro. Fulwood—with large views, great industry and strong influence. In a few months more he will be master of the Spanish language. I suppose I may affirm that he has the respect and confidence of the whole Cuban population on the island. He is the right man in the right place. His devoted wife and accomplished daughter give him valuable aid in his important work. In this house I saw the only "surprise and donation visit" I ever witnessed. At the close of the Cuban prayer meeting to which I have referred, while standing in the drawing-room of the parsonage conversing with some friends, I was quite astonished at seeing a man enter, rolling a flour barrel, at that time of night, into a parlor. Immediately behind him came a boy with a large basket filled with sundry articles for the table. Then another and another; and then I caught the meaning of the thing. It was as great a surprise to the pastor as to myself, and I had to make a little speech of thanks for him to the kind friends who had done the thing so very handsomely.

The second charge, Spark's chapel, is under the pastoral care of Bro. Johnson, and is doing well. Both of the brethren stationed at Key West had the yellow fever last year, and have nothing more to apprehend on that account. If this communication were not already too long, I should like very much to say something about the flourishing Sunday schools connected with these two charges, particularly that of the first charge, which is under the superintendency of Dr. Murray, the exercises of which I had the pleasure of witnessing. It was striking to see the large church filled to the very doors with a throng of children, all apparently interested in the exercises of the occasion in the hands of teachers working with good will and steady devotion for the flock—the whole movement directed and controlled by a superintendent who is evidently master of the situation, a fine man, honored and loved by the whole school. May he long flourish, and the Sunday school with him!

WM. M. WIGHTMAN.

From the Work.

BLACK CREEK MISSION.—Mr. Editor: I read in the ADVOCATE of April 6 a communication from Bro. E. H. Yelverton, setting forth that in the above-named mission they are without representation by the ministry. This mission was left out by the last Conference, and no instruction was given to me or the preacher in charge what to do with the appointments. I, however, put as many as possible in the Enon circuit. But this arrangement has been a failure, and now some other plan must be adopted. I write this as an advertisement, to all who feel interested, to meet me at the quarterly meeting at Augusta, and let us see if something cannot be done that will be effectual. Surely no blame must attach to myself, for I had no instruction, and not a single official member was present at the first quarterly meeting for Enon circuit. Their absence, in the main, was owing to want of information as to the time, and so the best was done that could be under the circumstances.

THOMAS PRICE.

YAZOO CITY, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.—Mr. Editor: Our first quarterly meeting for Yazoo City commenced with preaching at eleven A. M. on Saturday, March 4, 1876. Rev. William B. Hines, presiding elder, was at his post. Our first Quarterly Conference was a fine success—the best, it was thought, ever held during my pastorate here, and this is my third year. Everything was done right and up to time. Everybody was pleased, of course, with such a state of affairs. Pastor and presiding elder have been paid up to date. Did you ever hear the like? Bro. Hines remained a week, preaching and visiting, and as a result the meeting continuing three weeks—three were converted, many made happy, and the church greatly strengthened and revived. It was a precious visitation to us all. Our church is prospering. Peace reigns in our borders, and we trust many will yet be saved this year. We are praying, and humbly trusting and expecting a mighty refreshing from the presence of the Lord. How glorious it was, and refreshing, to see souls converted in our midst! To God be all the praise.

R. D. NORSWORTHY,
Pastor.

Seashore Camp Ground.

MR. EDITOR: The camp meeting on the Seashore Camp Ground will commence on Wednesday, the second day of August, 1876, and will continue from eight to ten days.

The trustees had a pleasant meeting on the camp ground on the twelfth of April, as advertised, and met those gentlemen and ladies from this city, Mobile and the villages along the gulf coast who came to examine the grounds and select lots for building. Several lots were assigned to various parties who intend to commence building at an early date. The prospect is that the number of private tents erected this year will be greatly larger than in any preceding year. The grounds are being put in an improved condition for the present, and having regard to the demands of the future.

The keeper, Mr. James Tharp, resides upon the grounds, and in the absence of the trustees will represent them, and attend to parties visiting the grounds, and point out to them the lots unoccupied and most desirable for building. Arrangements have been made with Dr. Griffin, of Moss Point, to furnish at most reasonable prices, and deliver on the grounds, all the lumber that may be required for building purposes.

Periodicals.

—Mrs. Charles Barnard, author of the article in Scribner's Monthly upon the Philadelphia Home Association, recently published, and entitled "A Hundred Thousand Homes," will begin a series of articles upon commercial and industrial co-operation in the United States and Great Britain in the May number of this magazine. For this purpose he will be sent by the publishers to England and Scotland to make an exhaustive examination of the subject in all its branches.

—The Methodist Companion is the title of a neat little sheet published weekly at Wilmington, Del., Rev. A. T. Scott, editor and publisher. It sets forth its mission to be: "An earnest promoter of holiness, and a bond of union between the various branches of the Methodist Church."

—The Iron Preacher is the title of a new religious weekly published in New Orleans and edited by William E. Hall. It is the organ of the Christian or Campbellite Church. It is a very handsome eight-page sheet. Price, $2 a year, in advance.

The Jetties.

FORT EADS, April 14, 1876.

MR. W. R. BARBE, President Engineer, South Pass Jetty Works, New Orleans:

DEAR SIR: Mr. Corthell made careful soundings through the jetties to-day, placing buoys on the bar crest. Least depth found was fully 15 feet; 22 feet channel now extends down to station 90, or one and three-quarter miles, and within about a half mile of deep sea. In this half mile we have several hundred feet in which the depth is 22 feet. At one locality half way down the jetties we find 22 feet, and for several hundred feet near it the depth ranges from 20 to 21 feet. The channel is quite straight nearly all the way, and is evidently locating itself centrally between the jetties.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE MINUTES. A Correction.—There should be in the statistics from Dayton circuit: "For domestic missions, $21." Fault not the secretary's, but mine in failing to report to him, as to the treasurer of the Board of Missions, where the circuit has due credit.

O CITY OF THE JASPER WALL.

O city of the jasper wall
And of the pearly gate
For those around thy storms of fire
Our weary spirit wait
We long to walk thy streets of gold
No more to feel the blight
We linger at the portal
We sigh to enter in at thy shrine
The temple of the Lord
O home of love and light
Where faith and fear and doubt are not
Of every land the sole resort
When shall we there find peace and rest

O city where they need no sun
Nor moon nor starry light
Could we but enter in thy gates
How bright the mansions are How soon on the shore
How strong
Pull for the heavenly
Our triples here to row
O city of love
Where faith doth
Of every land the
When shall we there find peace and rest

O city where the Still bids
Well may we
The holy
And most we Nor Until our Father
And gives the Where Where faith
Of every
When shall we there find peace and rest

BY REV. [illegible] CLARK.

MR. EDITOR: In the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE I observed certain criticisms of my position on fraternal relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church. These criticisms were by one signing himself [illegible] and Bro. C. W. Miller. I did feel, at the time, greatly moved to reply to these brethren. But a sober second thought determined me to let their ridicule pass unnoticed; for I am no match for them in such controversy. To them I yield the palm, or decline the contest.

But in one thing I will yield to neither of these champions of the quill: In loyalty to the Methodist Episcopal Church South I claim to be their peer, and will yield to them—no, not an inch. True loyalty to our church, in all I said and wrote, was my guiding star—one star is enough—three stars so blind by excess of light that a rush-light proves no better guide. And this loyalty, perhaps, will be attested when many wavering who are now so blaming. Pardon the word, for Bro. Miller has facetiously compared me to a sheep. Perhaps I am; and this is the reason, with like facetiousness, I would remark, why so many sheep-killing curs are barking at my heels. These dear brethren will bear with me a little in my folly, as I have borne with them in theirs.

Now, it is true, I have differed with many of my brethren as to the best policy touching fraternal relations. But to them I have accorded all good fidelity. In differing with them I have neither assailed nor ridiculed them; nor will I do so now. The policy I advised was with an eye single to the good of our church and the best interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. In all our controversy of late, with the Methodist Episcopal Church, it has been the prayer and longing of my heart that that church get no advantage over us. Especially I would have it gain no advantage over us in meekness, in a readiness to forgive, and in the mind and temper of Christ. Because in all this controversy I am and have been fully persuaded that the church which most nearly exhibits these things will most truly reflect the spirit of Christ, and bear the closer resemblance to his image.

Hence at our late General Conference the following, in substance, is the action I advised, which I offer as my answer to those who, in your columns, have assailed me. What follows if I could have been heard I would have had adopted, as a substitute for both reports before the Conference. The events which have since occurred, and those which are likely to occur, will in due time demonstrate its folly or wisdom. 'Tis no treason, I trust, to differ with the Conference on a question of policy. The humblest member of the church, without being called upon out, is entitled to express his honest convictions, even though they conflict with the hard and the tripod. I would have had some action as follows:

1. Whereas, The General Conference of 1844 authorized the Annual Conferences in the slaveholding States to unite in a distinct ecclesiastical connection," provided said Annual Conferences should so determine;

2. And whereas, The said Annual Conferences elected to form themselves into "a distinct ecclesiastical connection," and for this purpose sent chosen delegates to a convention, at Louisville, Ky., in 1845, when and where the said delegates did "solemnly declare the jurisdiction hitherto exercised over the Annual Conferences, represented in the convention, by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church entirely dissolved," and then and there did organize themselves into "a distinct ecclesiastical connection," under the name and style of The Methodist Episcopal Church South;

3. And whereas, The Methodist Episcopal Church South, thus organized, at its first General Conference, at Petersburg, Va., in 1846, appointed and sent the Rev. Dr. Lovick Pierce, as its fraternal messenger, to convey its Christian regards and salutations to the Methodist Episcopal Church at its next ensuing General Conference;

4. And whereas, The said fraternal messenger, the Rev. Dr. Pierce, in a communication to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Pittsburg, Pa., in 1848, declared his presence and authority to convey to said General Conference the Christian regards and salutations of the Methodist Episcopal Church South;

5. And whereas, The said fraternal messenger was refused a hearing by the said General Conference in 1848;

6. And whereas, The fraternal messenger above mentioned, after having been refused a hearing, declared, in writing to said General Conference that hereafter all overtures for fraternal relations must come first from the Methodist Episcopal Church, and that if ever the Methodist Episcopal Church should at any time make the offer of fraternal relations, the Church South would cordially entertain the proposition, such proposition being based on the plan of 1844;

7. And whereas, The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at St. Louis, in 1850, resolved "steadfastly to adhere to the above ground taken in the last communication of Dr. L. Pierce to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in Pittsburg, in May, 1848;"

8. And whereas, The Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at St. Louis, in 1850, in answer to Bishops James and Simpson, who were commissioned by the Episcopal College of the Methodist Episcopal Church to suggest a union of the two churches, declared that the establishment of fraternal feelings and relations between the two churches was the first thing to be considered, and that they could not go back upon the words of their rejected delegate;

9. And whereas, The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Memphis, in 1870, in response to Bishop James and Dr. Snow, Bishop Harris—who, acting under authority of a commission appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1868, suggested the propriety of union between the two churches, and the appointment of a commission to confer with that of the Methodist Episcopal Church—Resolved, That the action of the Southern Bishops, at St. Louis, in response to the message from the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church, had the full indorsement and accurately defined the position of the church in reference to fraternal overtures from the Methodist Episcopal Church;

10. But whereas, After many long years of non-recognition of the Methodist Episcopal Church South by the Methodist Episcopal Church, and without any profit, meanwhile, of fraternal relations by the latter to the former, the Episcopal College of the Methodist Episcopal Church commissioned Bishops James and Simpson to bear the fraternal greetings of said Episcopal College to the Episcopal College of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at St. Louis, in 1850, when and where Bishops James and Simpson, acting as chief pastors of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and representing their colleagues in the episcopate, formally and officially recognized the Bishops of the Methodist Episcopal Church South as the Bishops of a distinct, separate, and independent church, and suggested a reunion of the two churches;

11. And whereas, The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in 1866, appointed a commission "to treat with a similar commission from any other Methodist Church that may desire union;" and whereas, The said commission sent Bishop James and the Rev. Dr. now Bishop Harris to attend the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at Memphis, in 1870, and suggest the propriety of union between the Methodist Episcopal Church and the Methodist Episcopal Church South, the said commission of the Methodist Episcopal Church acting under the authority of its General Conference formally and officially thereby, through its accredited agents, recognizing the distinct, separate and independent existence of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South;

12. And whereas, The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at Brooklyn, in 1872, recognizing the Methodist Episcopal Church South and its people "as a portion of the great Christian and Methodist family," and with the express desire "to promote good will and Christian fraternity" between the two churches, and "to avoid all unfriendly rivalries between them," resolved to send "a delegation, consisting of two ministers and one layman, to convey fraternal greetings to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, at its next ensuing session;"

13. And whereas, The fraternal messengers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, appointed under the above action of the General Conference of 1872—the Rev. Drs. Albert S. Hunt and Charles H. Fowler, and Gen. Clinton B. Fisk—have, in the most able, courteous and Christian manner, conveyed to this General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, assembled at Louisville, Ky., this —— day of May, 1874, the fraternal greetings of the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, the said General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church thereby most formally and officially recognizing the distinct, separate and independent existence of the Methodist Episcopal Church South and its General Conference; therefore, be it hereby

14. Resolved, That this General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, assembled at Louisville, Ky., this —— day of May, 1874, hails with deepest joy the above recited acts of the College of Bishops, of the General Conferences and of the fraternal messengers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and accept them as a formal, official and genuine recognition of the distinct, separate and independent existence of the Methodist Episcopal Church South as one of the equal branches of the great Methodist family.

15. Resolved, That this General Conference shall with equal joy the overtures for fraternal relations with the Methodist Episcopal Church, so beautifully, graciously and touchingly conveyed to us by its distinguished messengers, Drs. Hunt and Fowler, and Gen. Fisk.

16. Resolved, That this General Conference authorize our Bishops to appoint a delegation, consisting of two preachers and one layman, to convey our fraternal greetings to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church at its next ensuing session.

17. Resolved, That this General Conference authorize the Bishops to appoint a commission, consisting of three preachers and two laymen, to meet a similar commission to be appointed by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, to adjust all differences between the two churches, to agree on terms of formal fraternity, and to report the acts of said joint commission to our next General Conference for its adoption or rejection.

The above, in my humble judgment, ought to have been the action of our General Conference. If it had been, the following things might be confidently affirmed:

1. Nothing is therein stated but facts which no one questions.

2. No inferences or arguments are drawn from these facts. It is the inferences and arguments, on both sides, which occasion differences of opinion, and elicit unprofitable and hurtful discussion.

3. The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church must accept our acknowledgment of its recognition of us as a distinct, separate and independent church, or, going back upon its laurels, declare that no such recognition was intended.

4. If the next General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church reaffirm its recognition of us, we ought to be satisfied. It is enough for us to know that our right to "a distinct ecclesiastical connection" is fully recognized, and will be forever recognized by that church. The General Conference of 1845, whatever its opinion of the plan of 1844, we believe, ought to have acknowledged our existence as a separate and independent church. We have ever lamented that it did not so acknowledge us; and, from our standpoint, shall ever believe that a great blunder was then committed. But the three hundred from it. Enough, ate. Thanks be to God, has come. If, then, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1876 reaffirm what we call formal and official acts of recognition—whatever its opinions may be of the acts of 1844 and 1845—let us receive it in good faith. Let us not, as a condition precedent to fraternal relations, demand the repeal of the legislation of 1845. It is neither necessary to the recognition of our just claims as an independent church, nor to the security of our rights of property. Requiring the Methodist Episcopal Church to repeal the act of 1845 before we will accept its recognition, in 1876, is as if the American colonies, when their independence was acknowledged by the mother country, had refused to accept it until the acts which brought on the struggle were repealed. Recognition in both cases is a virtual and practical repeal of all former legislation. It has all the effect of such repeal, and much more. A mere repeal is not an acknowledgment of independence; recognition places the party, whose independence is acknowledged, far above all the acts of the body from which it separated. They cannot any more affect it one way or the other. And this is true by whatever name—call it constitutional, revolutionary, or whatever you please—the right be called which the party separating claimed for itself. The one party may call it by one name; the other may call it by another. An agreement about the name is as impossible as it is unnecessary. Hence formal recognition in 1876 gives to us every needed guarantee and security, whether the past be repealed or not. And as to any conflicting rights of property or territory respectively claimed by the equally independent and sovereign high contracting parties, they can be determined by a joint commission, and be forever settled by the General Conferences of the two churches. But if the Methodist Episcopal Church, without stultification—without the sacrifice of principle—can also repeal the legislation of 1845, I am persuaded that too will be done. If this cannot be, then our Northern brethren ought not to be required to stultify themselves.

5. By stating facts alone—omitting all mere inferences and arguments from them—many criminations and recriminations would have been avoided. We would have been free, meanwhile, to practice fraternity, to cultivate Christian fellowship, and to have our hearts and minds, on both sides, in a state of receptivity for the abode of fraternal forbearance, confidence and love.

6. By this course likewise, the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in May next, would present to our fraternal messengers a warmer side, and the joint commissioners, if they meet, be the more ready to make those mutual concessions so essential to a lasting peace.

7. Whatever the result, the Methodist Episcopal Church, even if so disposed, could gain no advantage over us.

8. If terms dishonorable to us should be agreed upon by our own commission—a thing hardly possible—our next General Conference affords the amplest security.

9. This action would have made our General Conference a unit—a thing to us of paramount importance. It is a platform on which all our border men can stand, while it gives the amplest protection to the most extreme.

10. It would have avoided those very dangers against which I wished to guard—dangers which Bro. Miller now sees, and which, in the Nashville Advocate, he has so truthfully and graphically depicted.

The outline, the sum and substance of the policy above indicated I gave, at our General Conference, to several of our brethren, and especially to our venerable father, in Israel, the Rev. Dr. Pierce. On this subject, with "the old man eloquent," who was added to the committee on fraternal relations, but who, as he told me then and has told me since, was never consulted by it, I conversed freely and repeatedly. May God spare him to attend the approaching General Conference, at Baltimore! May the glorious triumph foreshadowed at Louisville, when he received the amende honorable, so gracefully given by the visiting fraternal messengers, crown him at Baltimore, amid the tears and shouts and hallelujahs of a multitude jubilant over the return of white robed peace to our distracted Zion.

MACON, GA., MARCH 11, 1876.

OBITUARIES.

BRO. WILLIAM R. WHITE was born in Florence, Ala., March 7, 1841. In 1845 his father moved to Washington, Ark., and in 1848 he removed to Camden, in the same State. He was educated at Mount Lebanon University, Bienville parish, La., an institution under the fostering care of the Baptist Church. Soon after the war he was admitted to the bar at Tuskaloosa, Ala., but did not enter immediately upon the practice of the profession. At Bolivar, Tenn., he was married to Miss Minnie F. Hardy, December 18, 1865; and in 1868 they moved to St. Louis, where he suffered deeply from an attack of pneumonia. Thought brought up, by a kind Providence, from the gate of death, that slow and lingering disease consumption had already begun its ravages, to avert the first indications of which he traveled southward, taking his abode first at Camden, Ark.; from thence he removed to Louisiana, living successively at New Iberia, Rayshear city and Franklin, where his earthly career terminated, March 20, 1876, in the thirty-third year of his age.

At the beginning of the war, while yet at Mount Lebanon University, he volunteered in a company organized at that place, but it soon disbanded. He joined another at Mandeville, but it also disbanded. From there he went to Camden, Ark., and joined the first regiment of infantry enlisted and sent to the seat of war, and of which regiment he became the adjutant. After remaining few months in Virginia the regiment was re-ordered to the West, and took an active part in the campaign under Gen. Sidney Johnson, to connection with his regiment he was in the battles of Shiloh, Farmington, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Chickamauga, Ringgold Gap, Missionary Ridge, Gilgatt Church, Kenesaw Mountain, Cobb's Mill, Spring Hill, and Franklin—twelve in all. He was wounded at Murfreesboro, Cobb's Mill and Franklin. At the close of the war he was with his regiment in North Carolina, where it was surrendered. Thus, through a long and bloody war, he endured faithfully the hardships, the sufferings and the dangers incident to the life of the soldier, and with honor, at the close of it, he laid down his arms, never again to enter the field of conflict.

At fourteen years of age he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in which he lived an acceptable member until the close of life. Thus early in life he entered his Master's service, and with the fullest consciousness of his responsibility. He loved God, and walked in his "commandments and ordinances blameless." He had an unquestioning faith in the wisdom and mercy of God—a faith which attained its fullness, and waited for the promise which should afterward be revealed in Christ. During his last illness he was patient and resigned, for he endured as seeing him who is invisible. Approaching him an hour before he died, I asked him if he knew me. He told me he did, and out of a heart overflowing with the love of God he said: "I die in peace—I die happy. Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff comfort me." Though he had braved death in defense of his home and his rights, now he braved it for the last time, and for an unfading crown. His exit from earth was calm as a May morning attended by the radiance of the blazing sun.

He leaves a mourning widow and two bright little girls behind to weep over his loss. But in their bereavement God will be a husband to the widow, and a father to the fatherless.

J. E. SCRUGGS.

BRO. JAMES P. PACEY died, at his residence in Butler county, Ala., on Wednesday evening, February 16, 1876. He was born in Georgia, January 17, 1817; moved, with his father to Barbour county, Ala., in 1834, and was married to Miss Mary N. Middlebrooks, January 2, 1840. Bro. Pacey, during which former period of his life, was not a religious man, though a believer in religion and always provided a way for his wife to be a member of the church, to attend. Last summer, during a protracted meeting held at Oak Grove church, his neighborhood where he lived, he became very much interested on the subject of his soul's salvation, and was a regular attendant upon the meeting, and was first at the altar whenever penitents were called for. During the meeting, however, he was not converted, for the impressions made upon his mind did not leave him, and on the first Sunday in September last he went to church for the purpose of joining, but while there was suddenly taken so ill that he was compelled to return to his home and take his bed, from which he never rose again. His sufferings were of a peculiar kind, and I think they were as great as I have ever known of causing him to be almost all the time in exercising pain. During his illness he often spoke with regret at not having joined the church during the summer, and said that, just as soon as he was able, he intended to do so immediately. The first of this year he began to grow worse, and at my first appointment after Conference he sent for me to come and see him, which I did the Wednesday following, and by this request preached at his house and took him into the church. During the conversation which I had with him he said that he was hopeful that God had pardoned his sins, and that he was determined from then on to lead a new life. After that time I never saw him until I was told that he seemed a changed man. Bro. Pacey was an honest man in all his dealings with his fellowmen. He was an affectionate husband and a consistent father. He leaves a wife and three children, besides a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

E. W. SOLOMON.

OUR SAINTED sister, NADDA S. MAGEE, wife of Hon. William Magee, is no more. The deceased was born in Canton, Ga., September 10, 1841. Her maiden name was Collins. She was baptized by Rev. H. J. Harris, in Uniform county, when four years old, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in the fall of 1856, at a camp meeting held at Tugsaw camp ground, in Pike county, and was converted at the following year at the same place. She was happily married to Hon. William Magee, in October, 1858, and died on Sunday, March 5, 1876. She was an affectionate mother, and leaves six children to mourn her loss, one an infant. In the position of wife, mother and neighbor she was all that could be wished. Her sorrowing and aged husband, to whom she was a helpmeet, said to the writer, the day we laid her in the grave: "I do not see how I could bear the affliction, but I was not for it thought that she is at rest, and that we will meet her on, never to part."

It was our pleasure to be with her much during her illness, and always found her calm. Though her affections were severe, she bore them with patience, and murmured not at the dispensation of God. May God comfort the bereaved husband, children and aged mother in this their severe affliction. May they follow Christ as she did, that their end may be as peaceful as hers. She has fought the good fight, she has run the race, and now enters into joy.

ELLIS T. DAVIS.

DIED, of consumption, March 4, 1876, on Silver Creek circuit, Mississippi Conference, Sister ELIZA H., aged SIXTY-five years, six months and eight days. Sister H. was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South for forty-one years, during which time she deported herself as a professor of Christianity do. She was acquainted to her bed for seven months before her death, but never was known to murmur in the least at the providences of God, notwithstanding her sufferings were very great.

Religion was the all-absorbing theme with her, and on one occasion, while I was singing "Hosts of the Soul," she burst forth in shouts of praise to God with as much freedom as the water brook gushes from its fountain head. When I sang, "Oh, how sweet it will be," etc., as though transported within the "beautiful land," she said: "Yes, how sweet." And, oh! if such is the power of a glance of heavenly ray, what must be the realization of an entrance into the "bright celestial city?" On one occasion, in speaking of her situation, she said: "It is strange to me why God lets me stay here when I can't do anything for him or the church;" and being told that we could suffer for Jesus, as well as work for him, she said: "Yes, that's it."

Sister Blasch was an example indeed of the Christian life. She spoke not only confidently but exultingly of her prospects of "eternal happiness," saying: "I am waiting for Jesus to come for me." Her last hours, though suffering intensely, were spent in honoring Jesus. The last words she was heard to say were: "I wish I could tell you how good Jesus is to me." "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord." G. W. BROWN.

AFTER months of suffering and waiting the pure spirit was released. MARY ADAMS quietly and sweetly fell asleep in Jesus on the eighth of December, 1875, at the home of her parents, in Harrison county, Miss. Ever a dutiful and loving daughter, an affectionate sister, and a true and faithful friend, Mary was beloved by all who knew her. Endowed with an intellect above the ordinarily, and a mind cultivated with a high unassuming and refined, she was calculated to do much good in the community in which she lived, and elsewhere.

For several years previous to her death she was a member of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and endeavored to lead a devoted and earnest life of a Christian. A little over a year before her death she was bereft of her only sister, and in that final she was sustained, and bore the loss with fortitude and Christian resignation. It was then, in her letters to the writer, that her faith was made manifest. From that time until her death she seemed to have one purpose, and that was the better land, heaven. On her death-bed she was calm, and comforted by the same grace which upheld her in all her trials, and as she was weeping friends that all was well, and passed away without a murmur. A void has been made in the hearts of those who knew her, and in the home of her now bereaved parents there is a void which can be filled only by a reunion in the world of light, where we shall meet our loved ones and their departing angels.

TRIBUTE OF RESPECT.

The following preamble and resolutions were passed by the Quarterly Conference of Boyd circuit, Louisville Conference, convened at Boyd, March 6, 1876:

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God, in the mysterious developments of his providence, to remove from our midst our beloved brethren, Rev. WILLIAM and WALTER T. P. ANDERSON, the former November 4, 1875, the latter February 7, 1876, therefore,

Resolved, That while we bow in submission to the will of the Father, who is too wise to err and too good to do wrong, we deeply deplore our loss as a church, and the church and the ministry have sustained an irreparable loss.

Resolved, That a copy of the preamble and resolutions be furnished their families, and a copy for the files of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

T. B. ROSE, Secretary.

MRS. OLIVIA BROWN was born in Claiborne county, Miss., January 1, 1818; was married in Yazoo county, and died in Yazoo City, March 16, 1876. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, of the above-named place, from 1854. She was baptized and joined the church by the writer. She often consulted me one year before her death, expressed herself as trusting in Jesus for salvation, and died in hope of heaven. She told her friends and relatives not to weep for her. Her disease was pulmonary consumption. She lingered and suffered much, visited and talked and prayed with us during her illness, and, now that she has passed the Jordan of death, we believe that she rests in peace. Her funeral sermon was performed in the church, and I preached to a large company of her friends and neighbors. She leaves one little boy. May God protect and bring him to his mother's gentle embrace at last. With the afflicted loved ones we tenderly sympathize, and in their sorrow point them to Jesus, their precious, eternal friend.

A. D. NORSWORTHY, P. C.

The Scotsman announces that Thomas Steele Livingstone, the last son of the famous African traveler, died on the fifteenth of March, at Alexandria, whither he went about three years ago for the benefit of his health, the precariousness of which prevented him from prosecuting his medical studies in Edinburg University. Dr. Livingstone's surviving son is resident, as a medical practitioner, at Trinidad.

Oh, what a blessing is Sunday interposed between the wave of worldly business like the divine law of the Israelites through Jordan. There is nothing in which I would advise you to be more strictly conscientious than in keeping the Sabbath holy. I can truly declare that to me the Sabbath has been invaluable. WILBERFORCE.

Christ has, in spite of all the things in human life, verily and indeed come into the world to save sinful. The world, not yet saved from its sin, knows, nevertheless, of his coming. When that faith shall pass away, then indeed will all be lost.

Some persons pass their wretched days like so many swine—they never look up to heaven till God lays them on their backs.

GERTIE.

BY ONYX.

There was a little flower; it grew
In shyness and silence;
From vulgar gaze concealed from view,
Its beauty all its own.

And yet its breath was not unspent;
The bee its fragrance knew,
For in its simple bower it lent
A sweet charm ever new.

The stranger passed to kiss its brow,
The sad heart felt its thrill;
Its very modesty somehow
Helped it a sphere to fill.

And when at last its blossoms rare
By the rude storm were strewn,
It spread its sweetness on the air,
Nor thought it died too soon.

The flower no more its fragrance sweet
Could cherish or retain;
But age it left its seed to entreat,
Wherein had softly lain,
To right some human hearts to look above,
To life's duty, and to know God's love.

The Scientific Insect.

The atheist, or scientific atheist, is very fond of talking of the vast extent of the cosmos; he very confidently compares his own views in respect with what he deems the vicious narrowness; but as related to the whole, of which he so presumptuously judges, what is the mighty difference between his knowledge of the universe, and that of the most ignorant religionist of ancient or modern times? We speaky of space, comparatively. Franklin's ephemeron, drawing his inferences as to all surrounding being from the vernal or autumnal changes of the leaf on which he sits, would present the most apt illustration of folly. Or we may imagine the insect in the great Haarlem organ. He may be a most scientific one, endowed with a vision surpassing all the powers of the microscope. There is nothing in his mind's eye at war with the supposition of his having a most mathematical one, which nature, or the collocation of the atoms, or some nice adjustment in the correlation of his forces, may have bountifully given to him. There he sits, with the materials for a Mechanique Celeste in the smaller that La Place possessed for the wider system. He can see on the study of strings and keys, and the most minute adaptations of the mighty instrument, so that his single eye of vision can take in almost infinite sinful part. He sees the valves open and shut; he guesses, for an inch or two, the words which these effects seem to spell; he begins to classify them, to talk of laws, thus turning phenomena into forces, and identifying mere sequences with the cause causes. His induction may rise to the conception of mightier pipes, more distant keys, of deeper valves, hidden strings. But he never in any way gets out of the machine. It is through, as far as he can see, and even for the sake of adjudication for the sake of evolution. But what is all this about? Darkness as Tyndall occasionally confesses, he may have his hour of sickness. Now and then his cerebral organization may become strangely obsessed with the idea of something touching the machinery, or that implies a spirit in the wheels—a living or breathing in the pipes. Although gone at the sense-cause-thing he can explain. There comes a faint consciousness of some vibration, a tremor in the vast surrounding darkness. It startles him with the idea of something greater than he. It may be the hope of a grandening, or a sense of danger filling with alarm. There is some thing serious in the machine than he imagined. Is it a dream, a vision that he is dreaming, it may awake from which he shall awake to higher consciousness? There come, as from a far distance, faint sound of a mighty music, of glorious anthem rolling above. Or he may arise in his insect soul, or some way be given to it, the idea of a higher world, a more real world, which this intricate valvular apparatus may be subservient, and from which it derives all its value. But Wilson dismisses as utterly unintelligible. He returns again to "common sense" to confidence in his eyes, his groping touch. "The things that are seen"—they are the realities, after all. "The things unseen"—all that is supposed they belong to the world of forms which experimental science the only science can never reach.

Such a illustration is a fair one. From science alone it is impossible to determine whether this physical apparatus to which we are introduced, and which we are evolved, and which our dissolving individuality is to be resolved again, is really nothing to order or disorder, or to all anything we might indulge fancy in calling bodies or things of being. The very terms point to something out of the physical, the physical something which transcends nature, but can never be defined by it.

Such a comparison is unimpeachable as long as we take for its basis the conceivable ratio between the sensuously known and the intelligiknown. To vary the illustration, however, let us suppose an almost invisible insect crawling upon the dome of St. Peter's. He possesses the use of vision keener than the man. His microscopic eye does not see chasms and roughnesses and inequalities, which may disappear to it survey made from a greater standpoint; but what does it think of the purpose for which the vast structure was reared? Does it tell him of its transcending spiritual significance? Or, if he should the thought to what might be termed, in strictness, the more proper, scientific field, what does it think even of the space or material direction of this seeming progression, or whether he is moving on a line ascending or descending, convex or concave, or whether, taken as a whole, it may be called plane or curved, or at what rate the vast area, to which his vision can draw no tangential line, may be changing its mighty curvature.—From Prof. Taylor Lewis' Vedder Lectures.

Christopher North.

No need of the creative faculty or the essayist's pen to sketch the outer man of the redoubtable Christopher North. Has he not sketched himself a hundred times in his books? Nay, does he not limn his own portraiture, unconsciously yet none the less delightfully, in every line of them? We can see the well-knit yet bulky frame, the long hair curling down the neck of Ajax—no love-locks for lady's chamber, but playthings for wind and water on his wild moorland excursions; yet hyacinthine withal, as befitted the friend of the Muses, the favored son of Apollo. We seem to hear the cheery voice, now toned in unison to some grand simile of Homer, now singing some native lay of tragic love, and then again raised till the welkin rings as he shouts to his henchman Hamish to gaff the salmon that he is leading downward to the one rocky ledge where alone the feat would be possible. Yet whether on his loved carpet of heather, or in the lecture-room, or the reviewer's study, it is always the same great heart beating kindly to the universe, sympathizing with every form of good, and assimilating beauty from all that is exalted in nature or history or man's life—a soul fired with the true enthusiasm of humanity, reflecting all that is pure and noble and of fair report about it, as the summer sea catches the tints of heaven in its bosom. But we have now to do with Wilson merely as an angler; and, to dwell first upon the practical side of angling, never was more consummate artist than he in choice of flies, and ability to send thirty yards of silk and hair across a roaring stream, so that the line should light on the very spot behind the big bowlder where lurks the salmon. His eagerness for sport, too, was unbounded; his appetite for fresh air, exercise, and wading, regardless of cramp or rheumatism, insatiable. No moorland with its thick crop of heather, no rugged mountain of granite, swathed in mists and dripping down to bogs which would swallow up an army, deterred his venturous steps when grouse were to be shot or trout taken. His mind was well stored with philosophy and poetry, and he was never weary of debating on both with more of enthusiasm, perhaps, than of sound critical judgment, but still with a sufficiency of learning, a mind of humor, and a love of his own country's literature in particular, which made him a delightful companion by loch or river. Ettrick Hogg, he the philosopher of angling, Wilson is as indubitably its poet. Let him once close his hand on the butt of the lithy rod, and what charming chapsodies on nature, what touching reminiscences of youth does he not pour forth. Who can forget the inimitable progress of the angler, from the unsuccessful child at the brookside with crooked pin and cotton line, through the boy catching his first trout, to manhood's struggles with a forty-pound salmon, which he traces so eloquently that we feel the whole reeling wherein lies the true poetry of the craft. Angling, he shows us, binds together every age of human life, with a chain of sympathetic memories, when a man is once smitten with enthusiasm for it. As Wilson wanders on from pool to pool, here extracting a grilse from "Bluidy Breeks," there a sea-trout "Gurly," but ever attended by a supreme love for nature, we are insensibly reminded of a brother poet's picture of one who

The Horse-Bit.

The question of the bit, and of the hand that rules the bit, underlies the consideration of the whole subject of man's dominion over the horse. The intelligence of mankind has hitherto invented but two principal forms of bit: the snaffle, the simple piece of iron which lies across the mouth, subject to endless modifications—such as being twisted, jointed, and so forth; the curb bit is an adaptation of the lever, and the lengthening of the check pieces allows a very powerful pressure to be exercised upon the jaw of the horse. The snaffle is, so to say, a natural bit, and the curb is an artificial one. The snaffle was used by our ancestors and by the ancient Greeks; the curb is an Asiatic invention, and was probably brought into Europe with the Moors. In the famous mosaic found at Pompeii, representing, as is supposed, a battle between the Greeks and Persians, and which, at any rate, is the picture of a battle between the Europeans and Asiatics, the Eastern horsemen ride with curbs, and the Europeans with snaffles.

The difference in the bit modifies the whole style of riding; and as there are two sorts of bits, so there are two styles or schools of horsemanship, which may be called the Eastern and the Western styles. The type of Eastern is best seen in the modern Bedouin Arab, with his short stirrups, peaked saddle and cavesse bit; and the Western type in its simplest form is beautifully exemplified in the Elgin marbles, where naked men bestride bareback-ed horses. To ride after this fashion is an athletic exercise; the strength of the man is set against the strength of the horse, with little advantage to aid. The rider restrains the horse's impetuosity by the sheer force of his arm, and he maintains a seat on his back by exercising the muscles of his legs. It is the exaltation of athletics and of horses; but it is clear that the balanced seat of the Arab, and the more complete command over his horse which follows from the great security of his seat, would make him infinitely more formidable in war than the European, in spite of the superior size and strength of the latter. History teaches us how the cavalry of the Saracens—small men on small horses—rode down the Christian horsemen till they learned to ride with the bits and saddles and lances of the Moslem cavalry. The invention of the curb bit necessitated the stirrup, for a man sitting upon a barebacked horse is forced to bear, at times, more or less heavily upon the bridle; and if, so riding, he were using a curb bit, and he were to lean any part of his body upon it, his horse would stop, or he would rear, or would flinch. The ancient Greeks and Romans are believed not to have known the use of the stirrups. They are, indeed, said not to have been discovered till the fifth century of our era. This, if it is true, would only apply to Europe. In the East they were used many centuries before. The earliest representation of one I know is the above-mentioned mosaic, where the horse of a dismounted trooper in Oriental costume is drawn with clearly indicated stirrups; the Greek horsemen in the mosaic are without them.—New Quarterly Magazine.

Thoughts About Preaching.

Feel that this sermon may be your last.

It is not enough that the preacher knows how to lead—he must know how to fire.

A sermon without a personal application is like a letter without an address.

Let every minister, while he is preaching, remember that God marks one of his hearers.

"Vigorous consecutive teaching of leading truths" is one of Dr. Hall's recipes for making a "sustained pastorate successful."

Dr. Parmons says: "Style should be like glass—perfectly transparent and very little cash."

He who can always find the word which is appropriate and adequate to his emotions is not the man whose emotions are deepest.

Some one compares a text to a "gate opening into the Lord's garden," and says that many ministers, instead of unlatching the gate and leading their hearers to pluck the fruit and flowers, content themselves by getting upon it and swinging to and fro.

"To how many people did your pastor preach last Sabbath?" asked an emulating Christian of his neighbor. "Well, I should say about six." "Six? What do you mean? What went wrong?" "Oh, nothing went wrong but the sermon; it went over the heads of nearly all, though I think about a half dozen caught some of it."

It is said of Dr. McAuslane, of Boston, that he always, on a Saturday morning, divides his sermon into two parts—one for the little ones, and the other for the adults in the congregation." Ministers who thus recognize the presence of children in their congregations have little cause of complaint that children do not attend the services they lead.

Mr. Moody's success in Great Britain began with a prayer meeting, at which only four persons were present.

When all is over, and our feet will run no more, all our hands are helpless, and we have scarcely strength to murmur a last prayer, then we shall see that, instead of needing a larger field, we have left untilled many corners of our own, and that none of it is fit for our Master's eye were it not for the softening shadows of the cross.

Dr. Hawes used to say that his style of preaching was molded by the criticisms of Dr. Emmons on a single sermon. Dr. Hawes read a paper to his tutor exuberant with rhetoric; "Joel," said the sage, "I kept school once. When I whipped the boys I always stripped the leaves off the rod"—drawing an imaginary rod through his fingers.

The Rev. Rowland Hill used to like Dr. Ryland's advice to his young ordinandi: "Mind, no sermon is of any value, or likely to be useful, which has not the three R's in it:

"Ruin by the fall.

"Redemption by Christ.

"Regeneration by the Holy Spirit."

The discourses of our blessed Saviour, when on earth, were personal in their character, such as:

"Ye are the salt of the earth."

"Ye are the light of the world."

"If thou bring thy gift to the altar."

"If thy right eye offend thee," etc.

"Unless ye repent," etc.

Any number of quotations could be made, showing the direct, earnest and personal manner in which the Lord Jesus addressed his hearers.

Mrs. Hannah Stover, of Bowdoinham, Me., says the Aroostook Times, has just claim to be the heroine of the Centennial year. She was born in Harpswell on the fourth of July, 1776, at nearly the same hour when the great bell was ringing out the glad news of the declaration from the old hall in Philadelphia. The old lady is in good health, and hopes to celebrate her own and the nation's hundredth birthday in July next. St. John sends greeting and good wishes to Mrs. Hannah Stover.

A collection is being made by the Smithsonian Institution to illustrate at the Centennial Exhibition the animal kingdom in the United States. This collection will embrace specimens of the animals of the United States which are hunted or collected for economical purposes; the products derived from the various species; also the apparatus or devices employed by hunters, trappers, sportsmen and others.

The Centennial Lake is now in process of excavation in the grounds north of Machinery Hall, West Philadelphia. It will occupy about six acres, its bottom will be fitted with clay, and its sides with pebbles. On its surface will float a few Italian gondolas, and besides these it will also be stocked with fish. A number of swans will beautify its surface.

It is an ill battle where the devil carries the colors.

Religious Intelligence.

—An address of thanks to Dr. Von Dollinger, for his efforts in behalf of the unity between the Greek Church, the Old Catholics and the Church of England, is being circulated for signature in Europe and America.

—At Istanos, an out-station of Broosa, there is such an awakening among the Greeks as has never been known before in the Turkish empire. During the week of prayer there was an attendance of about four hundred at each service.

—The total number of regular Baptist churches in the United States is 21,255; ordained ministers, 13,117. Additions during 1875: By baptism, 87,874; by letter, 32,515; by experience, 4,631; by restoration, 8,056. Diminutions: By death, 12,765; by letter, 31,517; by exclusion, 17,561; by erasures, 3,719. Total membership, 1,815,300.

IMPORTANT STATISTICS.—In his Allgemeine Missions Zeitschrift for November Dr. Grundemann gives the total number of converts from heathenism connected with Protestant missions, in 1873, at 1,537,27[illegible] as follows: German and Swiss missions have 127,414; British, 1,116,227; American, 183,571; Dutch 87,226; French, 11,000; Scandinavian, 8,830 converts. Assuming an average increase of one-tenth in two years which is not extravagant, the total present number would be 1,691,001.

—The Congregational Quarterly for January gives the statistics of the Congregational churches in the United States as follows: The number of churches is 3,435; church members, 338,313, a net increase over last year of 7,922; number of Sunday school scholars, 401,878, a net increase of 16,501. The benevolent contributions amounted to $1,241,011, a net increase of $52,876. The increase in membership is larger than in either of the preceding five years. Sixty-nine ministers died during the year. The number of "installed" pastors has diminished; the number of "acting" pastors has increased.

—The Congregationalist furnishes us two items of American Board news: "The Rev. H. H. Jessup, of the Syrian mission, Presbyterian, writes of the out-coming of an entire town of five hundred inhabitants, six miles from Beirut, from Maronite darkness to Protestantism. A chapel and schoolhouse have been hired, and a native preacher and teacher established there. A great proportion of the people attend the services held by the missionaries. Some of the young men have established a club to put a stop to lying, each member pledging himself to speak the truth. There is room even in Christian America for many such clubs."

"A weekly bulletin of Constantinople news, to the American Board is one of the signals of the cord which binds the missionaries in the region tributary to that city to their friends at home in a quick and living interest. Under date of February 2 came these items: "The Rev. Sanford Richardson, of Broosa, has been ordered by the Governor of Broosa to withdraw his helper from Soloz, on the ground that his religious belief is disagreeable to the people. Mr. Maynard, the United States minister, called the matter to the notice of the minister of foreign affairs, and received his promise of protection for the man." The Constantinople Home School has opened in the new building."

ROMANISM IN CANADA.—Father Chiniquy has sent the names of 450 converts from Romanism to Protestantism to the editor of the Montreal Witness since the first of January. In his letter he says: "Ah! let the children of God, bless the name of Jesus to-day; let all their tongues praise him for his marvelous deeds of mercy. Since the first of January to this day 15 days the mighty but still more merciful hand of the Redeemer has broken the chains of not less than 150, including the family of Baron Le Mejayer captives, who twenty days ago were the slaves of the anti-Christ. Oh! what a glorious thing! More than 100 of my dear countrymen who have washed their robes in the blood of the Lamb, and who have been made free within twenty days! I send you to-day their names. And what is more glorious is that this is, I hope, by the great mercy of God, only the beginning of a work which is suspected, neither by the Protestants nor by the Romanists. Yes, it is only the beginning of a work, the good results of which are incalculable for my dear Canada."

The Christian Intelligencer furnishes us with a detailed account of the last year's work of the Waldensian Church in Italy. From this statement it is evident that the missions in various parts of the country, and the old "valley" churches in Piedmont, are becoming more and more welded together into one organization of progressive and evangelical spirit. Nothing has helped so much in this direction as the revival services held during the autumn by the missionaries in the old valley parishes. Large congregations greeted them everywhere, and the representatives of the new work and of the old work learned to know each other as never before. The congregations throughout Italy have now been marked off into five districts, under the names of Piedmont, Lombardy, Tuscany, Rome, Naples and Sicily. In Sicily the work seems especially flourishing, and numbers are converts from Romanism. It is encouraging to note that progress is being made in what is so hard for Italians to learn—the habit of giving for the support of the ordinances of the church. The Waldensian Church has now, outside of the valleys, 10 settled congregations. There are 24 ordained ministers, 31 assistants in preaching, 33 teachers and 5 colporteurs. The number of communicants is 2,119; of newly-admitted members, 125; of candidates for membership, 308. In the 30 day schools there are 2,000 pupils, and in the 39 Sunday schools 1,400 children.—Independent.

Our Young People.

LOST BOOK-LEAVES.

Sixty little maidens
Coming through the door,
Pushing, crowding, muddling
A tremendous roar.
Why don't they keep quiet?
Can't you mind the rules?
Bless me, this is pleasant,
Teaching public schools!

Sixty little pilgrims
On the road to fortune!
How they fall to reach it,
Who will be to blame?
High and lowly stations
Blinded, every feature
On the common level
Here are brought together.

Dirty little faces,
Loving little hearts,
Eyes brimful of mischief,
Skilled in all its arts,
That's a precious darling,
Whom up-stairs I adore!
May I pass the water?
Please—may I go out?

Boots and shoes are squalling,
Slates and books are rattling
And in the corner yonder
Two pugilists are battling
Others cutting didoes—
What a combination!
Now under we grow cheerful
From sad lassitude.

The Praying Soldier Boy.

MR. EDITOR: There was in the late war a regiment noted for its great wickedness. From the general in command down to the common soldier, all seemed to be careless of their souls. At one time they had established themselves in winter quarters, and had arranged a hospital for the sick, of whom there were very many; some were dying, and among these was one man who was conscious of his condition, the doctor having told him that he could live but a little while longer. The poor fellow then begged the doctor to pray for him, but he refused, saying: "I can't pray; I never prayed in my life; but if there is a man in this camp who can pray, I will find him for you." So he hurried off, and, meeting the general himself, said: "General, there is a dying man in the hospital who wants some one to pray for him." "Well," said the general, "I can't pray; I never offered a prayer in my life; but I will see if there is a man in all this camp who can pray." He then had the whole army called into ranks, and there they stood, men of all ages—fathers, sons, brothers. The general then addressed them, saying: "There is a dying man in the hospital who wants some one to pray for him. If there is a man in these lines who can pray, let him step three paces in front." And children, what do you think? There stepped out from among them all a boy sixteen years of age! The astonished general said: "Can you pray?" "Yes, sir," answered the boy. "Did you ever pray?" "Yes, sir." "Do you feel that you can pray for this sick man now?" "Yes, sir." "Well, we will go with you," said the general; so he and all the men who dared to go went into the hospital to hear the boy pray for the dying man. The little soldier got down on his knees by the bedside, and as he prayed the dying man shouted with joy, the general and all his soldiers were touched and astonished, and the general said: "If I had a thousand such soldiers as this one I would not fear the whole world." So you see that in all this large army there was but one who was truly brave and wise, and he was a mere child. H. W. H.

From Our Little Friends.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: As I have read so many interesting letters from little children, I thought I would write you one also. Papa takes the ADVOCATE, and many others around our neighborhood, and I think it a very interesting paper. We have a very nice Sabbath School, and a great many attend; but I do not attend regularly on account of living so far from town. I am going to every-day school also. E. H. Cleland is my teacher. He is a Presbyterian preacher, and preaches for us every second and third Sabbath. We have another preacher also—Bro. Alexander. He has been preaching for us going on two years, and I think the people are very well pleased with him. I will close before I worry you too much. If you deem it necessary to publish this, I will promise to write more next time.

From your little friend,

CARRIE TRAVIS.

Peg and the Hare.

One hot summer day, when Mrs. Jones had been washing all the morning and dinner-time had come, she called Peggie, who had been rather more troublesome than common, and said to her: "Now, child, I can't do with you in the house any more till tea-time; so take your dinner and run out into the wood at the back of the house, and do not come back till I ring the little bell out of the kitchen door for you. There's only some hasty pudding for your dinner, Peg, for mother hasn't had time to make her little girl anything else to-day."

So saying, Mrs. Jones took a saucepan off the fire, poured some pudding into a large earthenware basin to cool it the quicker, added a spoonful of sugar, and handed the basin to Peggie. The child took it sullenly, and without thanking her mother. She was not in a good temper that morning, and was vexed at not receiving more attention. However, she dared not disobey; so out of the house she went and into the little copse. There she sat down, setting her basin before her in the grass. Suddenly there was a rustling in the bushes, and in a moment or two out sprang a great hare, and, quite as much surprised to see Peg as she was to see him, he remained sitting on his hind legs, and staring at her with all his might.

"Well, you are a rude thing!" said Peggie at last, glad to find fault with some one. "What did you come for? I didn't invite you to dinner."

The hare smiled. "What a droll little girl you are!" said he. "No, you did not ask me to dinner, and I am afraid I startled you somewhat; but I hope you do not mind my coming; you look rather dull, and what may do you good."

"Rather dull?" repeated Peg crossly; "so would you be if you ever had a washing day, when your mother was so busy with soap and water that she couldn't do anything for you. I would change with you in a minute, Mr. Hare, that I would; for your brown coat never wants putting in the tub, and you must be very happy, always doing what you like, and never having any troubles."

"I do not think you would change with me if you knew everything," said the hare rather mournfully. "You do not know how near starving I am sometimes, or how frightened I get when men, with guns, or with horses and dogs, come after me. You cannot tell how unhappy I am when a ferret or a fox kills my poor little children, or when my mate gets caught in a snare."

"Dear me!" said Peg, "I didn't think anything could be worse than washing days; but I had rather have them twice a week, and hasty pudding all the time, than have your troubles and dangers. Come a little nearer, Mr. Hare, and take some of my dinner; I dare say you are hungry."

Thus invited, the hare approached, and the two friends greatly enjoyed their meal, over which they chattered to their hearts' content.

The hare, of course, knew nothing about returning thanks for his dinner; so as soon as he had finished he said good by, and hopped off; but Peg, as she laid her spoon in the empty bowl, reverently bent her head and said: "Please, God, thank you for my dinner, and I am so glad I am not a hare; and I will try to be good on washing days."

Now whether all this really happened, or whether Peg fell asleep unawares, and dreamed it soon after she entered the copse, I leave you to judge. But it does not much matter if, in conclusion, you will just let me whisper a word or two in your ears.

I wonder, dear little friends, if your all have not some days when, from one reason or another, it is very hard to be good and contented? If so, let me tell you what will help you. Compare your lot with that of those around you, the poor, the sick, the forsaken, and then ask God for grace to be satisfied with the lot which he has seen best to give you.—Child's Companion.

A PLEASANT STORY.—The following admirable little story is published on trustworthy authority. A little boy, eleven years of age, residing in a small village in Bohemia, wrote, without the knowledge of his parents, to the Emperor of Austria, a letter, of which the following is a translation: "Mr. Emperor, at Vienna I should like to become a priest or a teacher. My father is a poor weaver, and has no money. Have the kindness, Mr. Emperor, to send me some money, that I may learn to be a priest or a teacher, just as you wish. I salute you, the Mrs. Emperor, and the children. Signed Josef Kenmesch." This letter duly reached the private secretary, and was forwarded to the Emperor in Hungary. The innocent style of it found instant favor, and shortly afterward the burgomaster of the village in which the lad resided received an official telegram to inquire and report on the case. All turned out satisfactorily, and the school inspector of the neighboring town of Zwittau was instructed to give the boy board and lodging, and every needful facility for his education, so little Joseph's ambition, thanks to imperial kindness, is likely to be satisfied.—Golden Gate.

LITTLE WILLIE.—One Sunday afternoon I undertook to tell my nephew, Willie a bright, affectionate little fellow, only two years old something about the goodness of God in giving him food and clothes, and a dear mamma to take care of him. He sat on a low stool at my feet, bending slightly forward, his elbows on his knees, and chin resting on his plump, baby hands, while his eyes were fixed intently on my face.

As I told him how God loved him all the time, and how he was always watching over him, the sweetest expression I ever saw came into his eyes, and, jumping up from where he sat, he raised his dimpled face toward heaven, saying impulsively, in his baby fashion: "I stan's up and tisses Dod!"

LITTLE SHUTTING DOORS.—Boys and girls will always show to strangers whether they are well bred and polite or not by the manner in which they open and shut a door. If they open it in a hurry and in a rush, or if they neglect to shut it, or shut it carelessly or with a slam, they show that they are not well behaved or polite. You should always open and close doors gently and carefully. The proverb says: "Actions speak more loudly than words."

The French do not bury in single graves, like their English brethren. They buy or hire a plot of ground four or five or nine or ten feet square, if they are rich, and there dig one grave deep enough for all the family. Over this is built a little house in stone—a chapel in the sides of which are written the names of the dead below.

Important.

The publisher has recently sent out lists of the ADVOCATE accounts to the preachers. We need not say to the brethren that it is a matter of urgency to the paper that collections be made and remitted with as much promptitude as possible. Our church papers in these times are sailing close to the wind, and it is only with care and vigilance that they can be kept agoing. Our subscribers and agents have done pretty well thus far. Will they suffer this word of exhortation, in which we urge them to continue in well-doing, and to send new subscribers, while they collect and remit with all practicable diligence. At $2 a year, postage paid, we must have a large list of paying subscribers and a liberal advertising patronage in order to keep out of debt.

The Spiritual Resurrection.

There has been of late much preaching and meditation on the resurrection. It is a topic that should not be dismissed with the Easter Sunday. The resurrection was the constant and habitual subject of apostolical preaching. Jesus and the resurrection were set forth on all occasions and at all times. Christ's resurrection was the greatest fact of all—the crowning miracle of the gospel. No fact is better attested, none so overwhelmingly demonstrated. It is the great seal of redemption by Jesus Christ, and confirms and establishes the claims of Christ as the Son of God and the Savior of the world. So certainly does Christ's resurrection assure our own that Paul affirms: "But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen." The literal resurrection of the body is one of the clearest and most prominent doctrines of the gospel.

But, while this is so, it is profitable to dwell upon that spiritual experience which the literal resurrection illustrates. As to believers this is the first resurrection—a resurrection to spiritual life, which goes before and assures the glorious resurrection of the body. "But if the Spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you." To know the power of Christ's resurrection is to have personal experience of the indwelling Spirit of God; and to be raised from the death of sin to the life of righteousness. Believing souls are quickened together with Christ, and are raised up together, and made "to sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Christians are exhorted: "If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God."

The hopes and consolations inspired by the doctrine of the resurrection of the body depend upon this resurrection of soul. The soul must be raised by grace before the body shall be raised in glory. For the sinner there will be a resurrection of damnation, of shame and everlasting contempt. Only those who have part in the first—the spiritual resurrection—will be raised in honor at the last day. "If by any means," says Paul, "I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." It was the resurrection to life that he was concerned about. For this he counted all things but loss, and suffered the loss of all things.

The main thing was, to know Christ, to be found in him, and to know the power of Christ's resurrection in his heart. The earnest assurance is in this divine and spiritual quickening. The character changed, the affections purified, the whole inward man transformed, are the present conditions without which the "house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens," cannot be ours. The felt assurance of sins forgiven, of a purified heart, and of being in Christ by faith, will alone enable us to make the personal appropriation: "But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Death of a Rich Man.

The death of A. T. Stewart takes away another of the three richest men in the United States. William B. Astor inherited millions, and his vast fortune grew by careful management without any active enterprise in business on his part. Stewart began comparatively poor in New York, in 1823, and was steadily successful and prosperous until the end. His wealth is estimated at something over fifty millions. This was the result of an active business career of fifty years. Vanderbilt has also made his own fortune—supposed to be seventy-five millions.

The success of Mr. Stewart was not due to good luck or to chance, but rather to business capacity. It does not appear that he was a speculator in stocks, nor was he a reckless Wall street operator. He made his money by legitimate trade and by judicious investments, and we have never heard of his being charged with a dishonorable or dishonest act. He was in active business to the end of his life, selling millions worth of goods annually, managing his enormous real estate investments, and giving personal attention to the details. His capacity for work and for details was something almost incredible. He certainly had a genius for trade, and was most exceptionally endowed for commercial and mercantile pursuits.

We cannot but respect such eminent ability, and, in a measure, we admire it. The mind that could build up such a colossal business and fortune, and administer all with ease and sagacity, was of no ordinary caliber. Genius in literature, statesmanship and in war awakens more enthusiasm, but this is the most rare and extraordinary. The number of those who are pre-eminent in the attainment of wealth in business is astonishingly small. This kind of talent is as seldom found as that which shines unrivaled in the domain of art. The elder Astor, Stewart and Vanderbilt stand alone in the list of New York millionaires who have got high up into the millions by their own energy and capacity, and have kept this eminence. It is well, perhaps, that it is so, and that the gifts necessary to the amassing of riches are sparingly bestowed. The concentration of wealth beyond a certain measure tends to impoverish the masses, and to close the doors of advancement to those who are at the bottom of the ladder. In this country, where there are no rights of primogeniture, the death of the rich man usually leads to the division and distribution of the gathered wealth, and the evil of endlessly accumulating estates is thus averted. If Mr. Stewart could have lived a hundred years longer, with powers unimpaired, he might have owned the most of New York city, and by his wealth largely controlled the affairs of the nation. It is fortunate for society that few men have the capacity to accumulate and keep large wealth, and that they must let go the purse-strings at the end of their allotted years.

We do not know that Mr. Stewart had any definite object in amassing riches beyond the mere addition to be accounted rich, and the gratification which he felt in the acquisition and control of his enormous resources. There is benevolence and public spirit in some of his investments. He built and owned Garden City, on Long Island, where people of moderate means were furnished with pleasant homes at a moderate rental, and the immense hotel in New York for working women which he had nearly completed was designed for the welfare of a large and worthy class. Both of these enterprises were in the line of benevolence, but they were also intended as safe and paying investments. He gave something to charitable objects, probably, and has done something to cause his name to be remembered as the benefactor of the poor. Sometimes he gave in a princely way, as when he sent a ship load of provisions to famine-stricken Ireland, and when he contributed $50,000 to the sufferers by the Chicago fire. For education and religion, so far as we are informed, he has done nothing whatever. God gave him the talent he had for money-making, a kind Providence shone upon him during a long period, he was permitted to reach the full measure of human life, and he died in the harness of successful business, and has left seventy-five or eighty millions behind him.

His life-work was to accumulate this fortune. Incidentally he employed thousands of people, payed heavily in taxes and customs toward the support of government, and did much to develop and improve the city of New York and its surroundings—an honorable merchant, a good citizen, an upright man. But what account will he have to render for the trust which God committed to him? He was just to his numerous employees, and has not forgotten them in his will. While his estate is bequeathed to his wife, there is mention of certain plans of benevolence which he had failed to carry out, and which are commended to his wife to be consummated by her. What these were we do not know, but we trust that they were such as became a man of the almost boundless wealth which Mr. Stewart possessed.

MY DEAR NEPHEW: When the last letter closed I was speaking of the sin and folly of boasting about one's own sermons, the sin appearing from the operation of the "law of faith." As this boastfulness is a mortal sin—utterly destructive to all true spiritual life—you cannot be too cautiously guarded as to its approaches. But it frequently expresses itself in other ways just as damaging to personal piety and the general cause, and just as offensive to good taste. I refer now to newspaper and verbal reports of the condition of the work. Two brethren meet. A. says to B.: "Well, Bro. B., how are you getting on in your work?" "Pretty well now; but I have had a hard time since Conference. When I took hold everything was torn all to pieces. You know Bro. C. was not much of a preacher, and no discipline at all. He just let things go on loosely, until the whole church became thoroughly disorganized, or nearly so. I tell you I have had a mighty hard time. Finances run down; no class meetings, no prayer meetings; but very few come to church; people unacquainted with each other. I was cast down, but not destroyed." So I went to work, stirred around, and manipulated the place the best I could. Got up a choir and a mite party, and things are looking much better. Finances have improved, and the people are coming out better, because they know one another. Expect to have a revival in July. Want you to come over, and bring your biggest sermons and do your best preaching. We will stay at my room at Bro. D.'s, and have a good time." Well the protracted meeting is held, and pretty soon we hear from it through the ADVOCATE. The report states how long the meeting lasted, how large the congregations were, how many joined, and how many were baptized; gratefully acknowledges obligations to Bro. A., who preached with great power; to the presiding elder, who, in passing through, passed and preached twice with his usual ability, and to a local brother for valuable services, and closes with the time-honored quotation: "The Lord hath done great things for us Lalien, whereof we are glad." Now if you will analyze that report right closely you will see that really very little is set down to the credit of the Lord, and really a great deal is set down to the credit of Bro. A.'s eloquence, and to the pastor's own skillful manipulation of the congregations and circumstances. This method of boasting is traditional—"venerable, come down to us from a former generation"—but not entirely out of vogue yet.

Some men take a different way, regarding this stereotyped report as too stale and old to agree with their own reputation for culture and originality and freshness. They prefer to tell the tale themselves of their heroic sufferings and herculean labors; to the congregations they served, at the end of the year, or at the close of their whole time of service. And they generally rehearse it in somewhat of dramatic style, and with somewhat of dramatic effect. The report embraces the number baptized, married, received, dismissed and buried; the number of pastoral visits made, the number of miles walked in making them and may be the quantity and cost of the shoe leather worn out in their peregrinations; the number of sermons preached, class meetings attended, love-feasts and prayer meetings held, and sometimes how much it cost out of their own pockets, above what the church has paid, to do this enormous work; and also the number of pages of books and church papers they have read, and occasionally the number of articles their own pens have contributed to the same. The people go away from church amazed at the grandeur of the hero that is among them, and saying: "What a prodigious worker! How self-denying a soul! How humble and devout a spirit!" One thing, however, you should not fail to observe, which is this: The reports do not tell the number of days they fasted, nor the number of times they prayed in secret, nor the number of dollars the right hand gave away, without letting the left hand know it. Why this omission, I cannot see; for if a man keeps a book of accounts he certainly, in all fairness, ought to set down his liabilities as well as his assets; and if an exhibit is made, common honesty demands a sight of the debit as well as of the credit side of the account. But, no; somehow or other, so far as I know, they never charge anything against themselves—never tell how many sermons they have preached without the helping presence of the Holy Ghost, how many prayers they have offered in the same way, how many pastoral visits they have spoiled by social chit-chat, or political partisan vituperation, nor how much money they have saved and laid up since they "forsook lands and houses for the gospel's sake," and began the self-sacrificing work of an itinerant. These men, to hear them tell it, always find the church in a very bad condition, and always leave it in a very good one. Their predecessors, by shameless indifference, or gross neglect, or hungling ignorance, made a very hard place for them; but by industry and skill they have removed all old difficulties, so that their successors will have a most happy and prosperous time. But my own observation is that they leave matters in no better condition than they found them—sometimes actually worse off. When egotism is transferred to the religious consciousness it becomes pharisaism; and I am afraid that in these cases the transfer has taken place, though will not say positively it is so. But, my dear nephew, whether it is simple, contemptible egotism, or old-fashioned, hateful pharisaism, I feel bound, in the beginning of your ministerial life, most solemnly and earnestly to warn you against such conduct.

You will be required by the Discipline to make reports enough—too many, I fear—twelve to the Church Conference; four to the Quarterly Conference, one to the District Conference, one to the Annual Conference, where also you and your work will be reported upon by the presiding elder, who, if true to the traditional character of his office, will be sure to give you your full measure of praise. If the nineteen public reports required by law, during the year, of yourself and your work are not enough to satisfy your egotism, then it must be boundless; and you had better go at once upon the boards of the theater, where, without the slightest suspicion of pharisaism, your vanity may have the largest liberty of display. If you are not forced, like St. Paul, to vindicate the divineness of your call by an appeal to your personal history, or unless there is some very singular phase of spiritual life, or some uncommon and specially marked operation of the Holy Ghost, the knowledge of which will, in your godly judgment, redound to the edification and comfort of the church at large, there will be no necessity for these lengthy verbal and newspaper reports. "Make full proof of your ministry," and say, I am "an unprofitable servant"—when you say anything at all.

Affectionately,

YOUR UNCLE JOHN.

William Winans Clarke died at Vicksburg, Miss., on the eleventh instant. The remains were brought to this city, and the funeral took place on Friday afternoon, March 11, from the Felicity Street church, where a large company assembled to pay the last tribute of affection to the memory of this estimable young man. His childhood and youth were spent in connection with this church and Sunday school; it was the church of his honored father, Judge J. C. Clarke, who died in 1855, and of his venerable mother, who still lives in Brooklyn, N. Y., and it was meet that the service should be at the place hallowed by so many sacred and precious associations. Willie was named for the venerated Dr. William Winans. He died in early manhood, aged thirty-three, and in the assured hope of a glorious resurrection. Rev. Dr. Watkins, the long-time friend of his parents, was with him in his last days, and we are informed that the closing hours were marked by great peace and joy. One of the hymns sung at his bedside, "I would not live alway," was, in accordance with his own request, sung at the funeral service.

The postoffice address of Rev. H. H. Montgomery is Hazlehurst, Miss.

Our Doctrines and Methods.

We make the following extract from Bishop McTyeire's account of the North Carolina Centennial, as published in the Western Methodist:

The North American Review for January, in its leading Centennial article, says of Methodism in the United States: "The rise of this great and influential body must be viewed as the most signal religious fact which the past century presents." One hundred years ago it hardly existed—only 25 preachers, 11 circuits and 4,921 members. Now the statistics show, of all its branches in the United States, 20,453 traveling preachers, 21,381 local preachers and 3,173,229 members.

The Baptists come next—they began under Roger Williams, 1639, a hundred and thirty-five years before us—and now number 13,351 ordained ministers and 1,761,710 members.

The Presbyterians organized their first presbytery in 1701, and now number 5,790 ministers and 613,398 members.

The Protestant Episcopal Church may be said to have been here, under legal patronage and protection, in advance of them all, and now numbers 3,140 ministers and 273,092 members.

The census of the United States for 1870 presents these figures:

	Church edifices.	Val. church property.
Methodists	21,326	$ 8,871,121
Baptists	12,982	11,067,198
Presbyterians	7,961	14,255,253
Protestant Episcopal	3,661	9,371,440
Roman Catholic	3,806	20,355,700

A noteworthy fact is the position of Congregationalism—seventh on the list. At the end of the Revolution its position was in front. It was strong in its clergy and its institutions. Its ministers had taken the popular side in the war; whereas, in this respect, Methodists were unfortunate, all their first missionaries from England, except Asbury, having quit the country, and left an ill odor for their American brethren to overcome.

To say nothing of the Arminian scheme of doctrine, Methodism made good use of what was called a "lay ministry." Thankfully accepting educated men and turning them to account in her ministry, Methodism—taught of God and consenting to follow his leading—accepted the service of men of religious experience and Christian zeal and sound sense, even though not technically educated, and sent them forth to preach the gospel to perishing multitudes. A hundred years ago Connecticut—a stronghold of Congregationalism—enacted a law that no person should be recognized as a minister of the gospel unless he were a graduate of Harvard or Yale, or of some other accredited college. Congregationalism consented. The Baptists were wiser. They favored education in the ministry, and have done much to promote it; but at the same time, like the Methodists, got vast advantage by laborers who did not answer to the arbitrary standard of the Connecticut "blue law." Though congregational in polity, and Calvinistic in doctrine, the Baptists have thus left the Congregationalists pent up in New England.

In North Carolina the Presbyterians were well established, at the end of the Revolution, among the best population in the world—the Scotch-Irish. They extended from Orange county to Mecklenburg—quite across the State, along a line of settlements higher up than Salisbury. Adhering to the "blue law" above quoted, that excellent body of Christ's people are here still, mainly in the regions then occupied; while the Methodists, who entered the State half a century later, have long since compassed it with churches and pastors, and have societies and Sunday schools in twenty counties of North Carolina where organized Presbyterianism has no existence.

There must be something but only in the Arminian interpretation of the gospel, but in the Methodist way of propagandism.

Our itinerant ministry was just in time to follow up the itinerant civilization of this country—to keep up with it, and to save it from infidelity and heathenism.

As for what was called "lay preaching," see the methods of Methodism, to reach and save the masses, at last prevailing. What are Moody and Sankey, or Whittle and Bliss, but local preachers?—or, if you please, "lay preachers?" Their sermons and songs remind us of what our pioneer preachers lived and died at. The inquiry meetings that follow direct appeals to the conscience of the multitude—and all; to Methodists they are not new, and we rejoice to see them at length accepted by churches heretofore "straitened in their own bowels."

It may be inferred what points were stressed—the cardinal doctrines of justification, sanctification, and witness of the Spirit—the cardinal polities of connectionalism, conservatism and itinerancy. These were elaborated and illustrated not seldom by the biographical sketches from time to time furnished. The spirit-uality of Methodism was insisted on. It addresses the understanding, and the conscience likewise. The mind is recognized, and the emotions are not cashiered. The heart is greater than the mere intellect. If this theory occasionally leads to tears or shouts in the congregation, and it should be, "very tempestuous round about"—even so let it be. "To spread scriptural holiness" was the original objective point. Intent on this, Methodism was regardless of ecclesiastical organization for a time, and the outward form was at length evolved from this purpose and life. That form is adapted to that end—revivalism is its normal condition.

A grand entertainment is to be given by the Ladies' Bethel Association of New Orleans, at Grunewald Hall, on Friday evening, April 21, 1876. We have been favored with complimentary tickets. The object is a worthy one, and we trust the entertainment may turn out pleasantly and profitably.

Their Tactics.

The General Conference of the Northern Methodist Church meets in Baltimore in May. The question of fraternity will have full consideration. It does not require a hundred eyes to discern the maneuvering now begun all along the line. The tuning-fork has been struck, and their papers are humming the same note. Even the conservative Methodist, of New York, has announced "fraternity impossible" on the ground taken by our General Conference and advocated by our papers, with a minor exception.

We must ignore the Plan of Separation, and then they will fall upon our necks. The plan protects our property and vindicates our reputations. Without it we are unarmed, and Southern Methodism is the "great secession." When Northern Methodism tried to break through the plan the courts ordered them out.

In some quarters there are threats of coercion. They propose to win our affections, like the Romans the Sabine wives, by force. The present Supreme Court, "organized to convict," is held over us in terror. But there are bribes for us just peeping out from behind fraternal coat-tails—"disputed church property." Give up the plan and all will be harmony. So said the wolves to the sheep: "Send away your mastiffs; they are all the trouble."

The Northern Methodists are coming on an "unrestricted" and "unqualified" party to create a diversion. They are reckoning wrongfully. Noise is not numbers. One gun-shot hen on a stake rail will deafen the tread of many oxen turning the rows.

It is natural for certain persons restless as a magnet in a nail factory and light as cider down; to whirl with every gust. They are ever in a fraternal fidget. They live in a mirage of the millennium.

There is a coarser class burning with the rude ambition of the colored captains of the corn-pile. They are eager for noisy eminence and leadership of loud chorus.

Then there is the Geyser that must have vent for periodic swash of sympathy. It's his forte and her forte to gush. These people have no following beyond the hysterical, the chimerical and the Vigars of Bray. Joab took Abner aside to speak quietly to him. David's opinion of "unrestricted fraternity," with an old-turned and wily slogan: "Died Abner as the fool dieth." Richmond Christian Advocate.

A New Church Register.

R. J. Harp has laid on our table a new Church Register prepared and published by him, and for sale at the Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans. It is a complete Church Register, historical, statistical, comprising a general index; an alphabetical register of church members; register of official members, of baptisms, marriages and deaths; register of Annual, Quarterly and Church Conferences; tables for church collections; and an annual summary of the yearly work and condition of the charge. The volume contains 113 pages of the best quality of record paper, 10½ inches in size, and is very handsomely ruled and headed. From a careful examination of this work we cannot think of anything desirable in a church record that is not provided for. The tables for church collections and annual summary are very well arranged, and a new and most commendable feature. A record kept according to this plan will be complete, and the arrangement is so admirable that it can be kept with comparative ease to the pastor. A few blank pages are left at the end for insertion of obituaries, historical notes, and other matters of interest in the current history and affairs of the church. Every pastoral charge should have a register of this sort. To procure one will be money well spent. This register is substantially and handsomely bound in cloth, with morocco back and corners. Price $5, by mail or express.

The Christian Observer, of Louisville, Ky., appears this week as a neat and pastoral pamphlet of eight folio pages. The Observer, so far as is known to us, is the first religious weekly that has tried to combine the advantages of the large page and the pasted sheet. The improvement in its form is the publishers assure us the precursor of others for which arrangements are being made. The Observer is among the best of our exchanges.

Bishop Keavanaugh for a time had thought that he would be able to extend his visit to this coast until next fall, but recently he is advised that urgent business in the East will require his attention soon. He proposes to spend Sunday, the twenty-third instant, in San Francisco, and take his departure for home on the twenty-fourth.—Pacific Methodist, April 7.

It will be seen by reference to a notice on the eighth page that the Crystal Springs camp meeting, Mississippi, is appointed to begin on the second of August.

Our venerable brother, David Ayers, requests us to state that his address for the present is Ocean Springs, Miss.

Rev. J. W. Dickey, preacher in charge of Aldngdon circuit, Holston Conference, is dead.

A PULPIT VICE.—The New York Tribune is generally charitable in its judgment of preachers. It refers to what it regards a vice in many modern preachers in the following terms:

Striving to say smart things in epigrammatic form is a vice of many modern preachers which brings much riddle on the pulpit, and with the unthinking some contumely on religion. Dr. Talmage, of Brooklyn, is afflicted with this habit. Dr. Fulton, of the same city, is another offender. Mr. Moody occasionally falls into the error, but less frequently than one would naturally expect from his peculiar position and constant strain. Dr. Hepworth lately talked about seeing the autographs (or was it monograms?) of Moody and Sankey on the souls of certain converts who had united with his church. And now Dr. Deems tells from the pulpit that it is his habit to pray on the first day of each month for all of his flock whose names begin with A, on the second day for those who begin to spell their names with B, and so on until the alphabet and calendar are simultaneously exhausted. It is no-touchy to attribute this spreading vice to the example of Mr. Beecher, who in the pulpit is often guilty of expressions which create laughter. But his imitators ought not to forget that Mr. Beecher's "Beecherisms," as they have come to be called, have thought and power and often rich poetry in them, and that, however grotesque, they are tilted with a truth and human nature which the simplest person in his audience at once recognizes and feels.

We were agreeably surprised on Saturday last, says the Baltimore Episcopal Methodist of April 15, to receive a visit from our esteemed and venerable brother, Rev. Dr. Sargent. It will be gratifying to his many friends to know that his health has greatly improved. He is one of the few revered men who still linger among us, specimens of the glorious type of Methodism, whose presence, we trust, will never die out among us. May a kind Providence deal gently with the declining days of one whose life has been so fraught with useful labors to the church.

Clarence Clayton writes in ask that became of his poem, 'Waste basket, Paper mill.' Some of it may be in the sheet which he is now perusing. It was too rich to go all in one paper, so we distributed it.

Love not the world, for it is a moth to a Christian's life.

MARRIED.

FITZPATRICK—CARLETON.—At the residence of Mrs. Maria Carleton, March 15, 1876, by Rev. S. [illegible], Capt. John V. Fitzpatrick to Miss Liz. Carleton, all of this city.

SHERLOCK—CHILDERS.—At the residence of the bride, April 2, 1876, by Rev. A. J. Jones, Jr., James Sherlock to Mrs. Childers, all of Webster Parish, La.

RAMSAY—CHADWICK.—April 6, 1876, at the residence of Mr. William Chadwick, in Sumter county, by Rev. C. B. Galloway, Mr. J. Milton Ramsay, of Sumter county, to Mrs. Mary E. Chadwick, of Noxubee county, Miss.

KENYAND—CAMERON.—On the twenty-second of February, 1876, at the residence of the bride's father, in Crenshaw county, Ala., by W. M. Jones, Mr. W. L. Kirkland, of Pike county, Ala., to Miss Martha C. Cameron.

Publisher's Department.

AT FIFTEEN CENTS AND SAVE US $1,200.

The publication price of the ADVOCATE is $2 per annum—not $1.75, $1.50 or $1.25. At these reduced rates it costs us, including postage, fifteen cents, some twenty cents, the way we have to assess them, they are passing, when we transmit them, they are passing the expenses. We cannot afford to do this at present rates, as we do when sent to ministers or ministers' widows, and pay the price of publishing.

Each subscriber's bills should not be more than two months, while he is, if we lose fifteen cents by the subscription, 1,000 months to over Twenty Thousand Dollars in the new postal law we properly the postage of subscribers, during one year, eighteen. We have paid out One Thousand Dollars [illegible] expenses for this year of bills, and the trifling expenses [illegible] subscribers, we hope they will send the full amount of bills. When our agents send what they collect, without receiving commissions, we expect them to pay their expenses.

SORE WASH AND EYE LOTION.—In another will be found an advertisement of Owen's Sore Wash and Eye Lotion, with testimonials of Dr. Hussey, the inventor, the Natchez City Hospital physician. Those articles are on sale at the drug store of L. L. Lyons. We know nothing personally of these remedies, but all we have heard is favorable.

INDIAN TURNIP PECTORAL BALM.—We call attention to the advertisement of this to Indian compound by Dr. Bellew. H. Lapeyre, chemist. Mr. Lapeyre is a reputable standing, and well known as a druggist. Those who know him well have placed the skill as a pharmaceutist.

FANCY AND STAPLE GROCERIES.—Those in need of anything in the line of fancy and staple groceries should call at the store of Mr. John S. Twomey, corner of Magazine and Philip streets. He has a very tempting assortment of luxuries as well as staple articles of good quality, at reasonable prices. We take pleasure in directing attention to his card in another column.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FURNITURE.—Mr. R. Ringrose, at 172 Camp street, has a second to none of new and elegant furniture, as well as a great deal of second hand furniture of all kinds, put in thorough repair, for sale at low prices. He has an extensive jobber and dealer, and is also engaged in repairing and moving furniture.

FANCY DRY GOODS.—The Jackson House, corner of St. Ann and Chartres streets, is a corner displaying a most attractive appearance of dry goods. In fact this store is the most fashionable and offers the greatest variety of any in the city, where it is located, and it is easily surpassed anywhere.

EXTRA OLIVE SOAP.—The soaps of Procter & Gamble have attained a high reputation. They are well known all over the country for their superior qualities. We invite attention to the card of O. A. French, general agent, 30 Camp street.

DRY GOODS.—Our readers in the city should read carefully the advertisement, in another column, of Hasselmann & Adams, as they are offering special inducements to country buyers.

THE Premium Engraving, The Three Graces, advertised in another column, is one of extraordinary size, and in its execution nothing has been sacrificed or slighted. It portrays the three Christian graces, Faith, Hope and Charity, represented in the forms of three female figures, to produce the highest type of loveliness in pure womanhood. Each figure is more than one third the size of the original, and is a most desirable ornament for any Christian family.

Farm, Garden and Household.

Bad Cooking a Social Curse.

"The day perhaps will come when even the daughters of the rich will not think it beneath their dignity to learn how to make bread and pastry, how to roast a joint or cook a potato." Now, it would seem that this was not a very extended nor difficult amount of culinary knowledge to be required of a young woman who is ready to venture upon the sea of matrimony, but it will be considered quite large enough to begin with if we compare the houses in which we get a potato or a light piece of bread with the number of households in the community. It may be set down at once that you cannot get a well-cooked potato in any hotel. The servants in the houses where people would like to live well, and know good cooking when they see it, are, in nine cases out of ten, under no genuine discipline. The woman of the house does not know or does not care. A well-cooked potato, put on the table and eaten just at the proper time—and it does not exceed three minutes—is something which many men, whose butcher bill amounts to hundreds a year, know nothing of.

It is something which is quite important to understand, and yet which many people never learn, that a good meal depends upon good cooking, and not upon cost. The joint or the steak which it is impossible to cook so as to be tender to-day, will, in a few days, be in perfection; a broiled steak or chicken is as rare as chamberlers in Pawtucket. Ninety-nine one-hundredths of the cooks, hired or wed, fry everything—which is simply to say that they spoil it. One would think it impossible to injure sweet corn, and yet it is quite easy to allow it to remain in the water long enough to lose a great share of its sweetness. There is not only economy but ease in good cooking. For the ordinary male person, a few things made palatable suffice. The wife who knows how to cater to one or two whims in eating, and how to roast and boil, and devil a lot of cold meat and make good bread, may defy all rivals, whether of animated or inanimated attractiveness. It might be worth while perhaps to inquire how it happens that the girls can master music and languages, and all sorts of accomplishments, but are unable to bake or brew, or boil an Irish potato.—New York Evening Post.

The Value of Humus as a Renovator of Poor Soils.—We have recently been experimenting by way of renovating plots of impoverished ground which have been plowed and sowed, and the light crops removed for more than one hundred years past, without one pound of fertilizing material being returned as an equivalent for the crops removed. After sowing the seed of red clover and several sorts of grass seed in mellow plots of such ground for a number of times without success, we have abandoned all efforts toward producing red clover or grass until the mellow seed-bed can be supplied with sufficient humus to promote the growth of such small plants as red clover and timothy grass; soon after they appear above ground. The seed would germinate readily, and the young clover and tine grass would appear as thick as the plants could stand. But as soon as the limited quantity of plant-food in the kernels was exhausted, growth ceased, and the young plants withered and died, solely for want of the small allowance of pabulum which the spreading roots derive from humus. Commercial fertilizers of several sorts and in generous abundance were employed to supply the demands of the growing grass and young clover; yet the grass and clover both failed utterly, except now and then a lonely spear, until humus was supplied to the soil.

After the ground was plowed about four to five inches in depth, four bushels of Indian corn and two bushels of oats were sown per acre and harrowed in. When the corn had grown about one and a half feet in height, all crop ceased for lack of nourishment. The light crop was then turned under. In autumn two bushels of rye per acre were sowed and harrowed in. As soon as the rye had headed, the next season, the crop was plowed under, and four pecks of Pedigree per acre were sowed and harrowed in. In seeding, one bowl of the grain was scattered at the distance of every other furrow and covered with the plow as the last was being plowed. As soon as the blades appeared that corn was plowed under. These three crops of green manure plowed under, with shallow harrow slips, furnished an abundance to promote the luxuriant growth of young clover and grass, which these plants hitherto had never failed to show.—Practical Farmer.

Underdraining.—Quite a number in the upper part of this county [illegible] six years that have been in use from the last 70th of [illegible]. Yield, first year, two ladies, [illegible] eight-six bales; fourteen hundredths and fifty pounds seed cotton per acre, accurately weighed. The land is tolerably level, of a color that is [illegible] rather waxy. It has had each year from twelve to eighteen two-horse loads of stable manure applied to the poorer spots; and, excepting 1873 and 1874, the remainder of the field has been treated with commercial fertilizers, at the rate of three, four and sometimes five dollars' worth per acre. There has been yearly a gradual increase in the yield, last year the greatest of all, though not accounted a good year for cotton in this region. Year before last, after paying for fertilizers, ginning, bagging, ties, transportation to market and cost of selling, there was left to the farmer something over [illegible] per bale, and last year, despite [illegible] price, about $[illegible].

These facts don't chime with the poverty theory about which some are so clamorous. They show, too, what for the improvement of that kind of land there is nothing like King Cotton, as much as he has been abused.

On the same little farm, wheat, oats, corn, clover and millet have been grown; and every acre cultivated is more productive now than it was ten years ago; but the increased productiveness of those fields has been far behind that of the cotton land. Commercial fertilizers have not yet paid near so well on anything else. Perhaps I should except clover. Last spring I sowed on a clover patch plaster and Soluble Pacific, leaving a rod or more space between them. The effect of the plaster is only perceivable—not more than ten per cent. The Soluble Pacific increased the yield at least one hundred per cent.—Correspondent of Southern Home.

The Southern Rural says: "Where meats smoking is practiced on a large scale, a house adapted for the purpose should be erected. A very good substitute is obtained by means of an empty sugar hogshead. In the inside bottom fix a sufficient number of hooks to suspend the hams. Get a quantity of sawdust—oak is best—lay it on the ground in a circular form, so that it may be covered by the hogshead. Turn up the hogshead, so that the mouth is on the ground. Hang up the hams on the hooks, set fire to the sawdust, and, if a little draft of air is required, prop up the side of the hogshead about an inch with a small stone. The sawdust will smolder, and the hams may be used as soon as smoked." This method has been followed in Pennsylvania for more than half a century, and answers very well when the hams are few in number.—Guantanamo Telegraph.

The Tomato.—A dry, rather poor soil is best for tomatoes. This will check luxuriance and throw them into fruitfulness, and as soon as the plants are heavy-laden with fruit they can be helped to grow it of good size and rich color by the use of liquid manure-water or dressings of solid dung, as mulchings. Neither must the plants be allowed to flag for want of water nor suffer for lack of food. A heavy crop of fruit in different stages of growth proves a great strain on their strength and resources, and they must be supplied with abundance of food and water.—New York World.

To Cook Beets.—The true way to cook a beet is to bake, not boil it. Thus treated, and sliced either in vinegar or in butter, it is exceedingly palatable and nutritious. Boiling extracts the most valuable part of this vegetable.

Mamma—"Do you know it is very rude to say 'shut up?'" Little girl—"Is it very rude, ma? I think I can be much ruder than that."

Scientific.

—The London Lancet directs attention to the great value of chloride of lead as a deodorizer. It is prepared by dissolving half a drachm of nitrate of lead in a pint or more of boiling water, and pouring the solution into a bucket of water in which two drachms of chloride of sodium have been dissolved. When the sediment has subsided, the clear supernatant fluid is a saturated solution of chloride of lead. A cloth dipped in this solution, and hung up in a room, will instantly sweeten a fetid atmosphere; or, if the solution be thrown down a sink, water closet or drain, or over a mass of dung or refuse, a like result will ensue.

—Rev. Gen. Meares Drought writes to the London Times from Ireland: "For three years I have lived in a town, and during that time my sitting-room has been free from flies—three or four walking about my breakfast table—while all my neighbors' rooms were crowded. I often congratulated myself on my escape, but never knew the reason of it until a few days ago. I then had occasion to move my things to another house, remaining on for two days longer. Among other things moved were two boxes of geraniums and coleoptera, which always stood in my windows, the windows being always open to the full extent, top and bottom. The boxes were not gone half an hour before my room was as full of flies as those around me, and I am now writing at my breakfast table with twelve dead bodies in the slop basin, and everything on the table crowding with fresh arrivals. This, to me, is a new discovery, and perhaps it may serve to encourage others in that which is always a source of pleasure, and now proves also to be a source of comfort—window gardening."

—In a communication to the French Academy of Sciences M. Bergeret points out the influence of the sulphates in the production of goiter. He states that before the year 1835 all the inhabitants of Saxony in the Vosges were either goitrous or cretins. They then drank water derived from a bank of gypsum, which on analysis was found to furnish one gramme of sulphate of lime per liter, besides the sulphate of magnesia. But in 1835 the potable water was derived from a spot situated far above the bank of plaster; and since then, according to M. Bergeret, goiter has both diminished, the children are no longer subject to it, and before long the disease will probably have disappeared. He also makes the somewhat singular statement that, under the conditions of excessive work, a man has circulating in his blood an abnormal amount of sulphates, absolutely the same as if he had drunk waters loaded with gypsum; in support of which statement he cites various experiments, which appear to leave no doubt as to its correctness.

A MARVELOUS RESUSCITATION.—Most of our readers will be aware that seeds such as those found in the mummy cases of the Pyramids, which have lain for long periods of years in a desiccated state, will germinate when placed amid their natural earth. Professor Von Heldreich, of Athens, has recently met with an analogous instance of long-delayed germination, in the seeds of a species of poppy, Fumaria, which are proved to have been in a dormant or potential state for fifteen hundred years. The "slag" or refuse metal from the silver mines of Laurium, being again examined and turned over, for the purpose of having the lead they still contain extracted, the seeds, which were deeply buried and imbedded among the accumulated slag, are now springing into life and vitality on being restored to the genial influences of their native light and air. The age of the accumulated slags has been variously stated at fifteen hundred years, but this long age may be exceeded in the parts of the mass. The germs or eggs of animal life also appear to exist, in some cases, in a dormant state for considerable periods. The Rotifer or minute animalcules inhabiting our pools may themselves, and their adult forms, be dried up by the sun from their waters, and be blown about as mere dust-specks, and may revive and return to perfect vitality on being moistened with water. These facts increase the puzzling nature of the physiologist's question: What is life?"

"Best men are moulded out of faults."—Shakespeare.

New Orleans Markets.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, April 18, 1876.

Our city trade has been more active the past week, owing to the presence of our friends from the country. We notice several of our leading dry goods, grocery, hardware and crockery establishments doing quite a lively business, notwithstanding the cry of the croakers, who seem never to tire of talking about the downfall of New Orleans. The fact is, we are no worse off than the cities of the West, North or East, for there the merchants complain of slack times also; and were rates of freight lower up our streams the trade would speedily return to us from those sections now going to St. Louis, Chicago and Louisville, for our market is the cheapest for breadstuffs, provisions, dry goods, etc.

COTTON.—The cotton market for the past week has shown no animation. The daily sales exhibit a steady, legitimate demand. The speculative feature was not so manifest as a few weeks since. Several factors call the movement sluggish, while the Exchange reports it steady. Sales for the week, 64,800 bales, being nearly the amount cleared; and receipts, 14,072 bales. We refer our readers to the following table for fluctuations of prices:

DAILY OFFICIAL EXCHANGE QUOTATIONS.

	Low Ordinary.	Ordinary.	Good Ordinary.	Low Middling.	Middling.	Good Middling.
Wednesday	9	9	10¼	11	12¼	13
Thursday	9	9	10¼	11	12¼	13
Friday	9	9	10¼	11	12¼	13
Saturday	9	9	10¼	11	12¼	13

Thursday	12	12	12
Friday	12	12	12
Saturday	12	12	12
Monday	12	12	12
Tuesday	12	12	12

The New York market likewise has shown but little life. Sales not large for spots, while in futures we notice considerable doing.

In Liverpool the week's sales foot up 43,000 bales, against 61,000 bales to same date last year. Week's receipts, 91,000 bales, of which some 62,000 bales were American. Middling Orleans quoted at 6¾d., while last year, on the same date, it brought 8d.

SUGAR AND MOLASSES.—Market quiet and steady. Demand good for local and Western trade. Stock in first hands quite reduced, and receipts light, although now and then a boat lands a fair cargo. We quote sugar: Inferior 6c., good common 7c., fully fair 7½c., choice 8½c., centrifugals 7½@8½c., yellow clarified 9@9½c., white clarified 10½@10½c. Molasses: Inferior fermenting 20@25c., common fermenting 25@30c., centrifugals 30@40c., choice fermenting 50c.

HIDES.—Have declined a little—some say 1c., ¼ lb.—and market languid. Country dry-salted 10c., and half price for damaged. Deer skins 20c. ₱ lb. for large and heavy cuts. Beaver and otter $1.50@$1.60.

TIMBER MARKET.

Yellow pine logs, of 20 inches diameter and over, $16@$17 ₱ 1,000 feet.

Cypress logs, sound timber, free from shake and pecks, and 25 inches in diameter, $15@$16 ₱ 1,000 feet.

Black walnut logs, averaging 34 inches in diameter, and not less than 14 feet long, $20@$25 ₱ 1,000 feet.

White oak logs, of 20 inches in diameter and over, $14@$18.

Poplar logs, of 20 inches and over in diameter, $5@$7 ₱ 1,000 feet.

All rafts are carefully measured, and cubic contents reduced to board measure.

Cotton wood.—For large sound logs, $2 25@$2 50 ₱ cord.

Ash logs, of 12 inches and over, $2 25@$2 75 ₱ cord.

Sycamore logs, $2.50 ₱ cord.

Logs measured in cubic measure and contents reduced to cords.

Demand is good for wood logs at present. There is an occasional call for magnolia, beech and cherry.

MONETARY.

Bankers and capitalists report money plenty. First-class commercial paper scarce, and readily taken at 8 per cent. per annum; transactions somewhat larger this week than last. First-class mortgage paper can be placed at 9@10 per cent. per annum. Second-class commercial and mortgage paper remains unsalable except at high figures.

The sales at the Stock Exchange disclose no unusual movement in the stock of any of our local corporations. We quote Factors' and Traders' Insurance Company, $20.75 per share, Mechanics' and Traders' Insurance Company, $70 per share, New Orleans Insurance Company, $31 per share, Louisiana Savings Bank, $16 per share, Citizen's Savings Bank, $115 per share.

Pastors will please inform themselves fully as to the condition of their charges, so as to be able to answer the questions directed in chapter 2, section 3, page 61 of the Discipline.

We extend a cordial invitation to all ministers and delegates the privilege of attending this Conference.

WILLIS H. LEE, P. E.

ALABAMA CONFERENCE.—The Monroe District Conference will convene at Milton, Fla., on Friday, May 26, at nine o'clock A. M. The district stewards will meet at the same time and place.

Preachers in charge will please read section 3, Discipline, page 11, and be ready to report as therein required. To the seventh days on of this session we desire to give special prominence.

COUNTRY ORDERS.

1876.--SPRING.--1876.

PARTIES RESIDING IN

Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Arkansas,

AND ADJACENT STATES, WHO BUY THEIR

DRY GOODS FOR CASH,

Are invited to send to us for samples, which will be forwarded to them

FREE OF COST AND POSTAGE PAID,

and where we are favored with orders that exceed $50 the Freight Thereon will be Prepaid at our Expense. Where the order exceeds $20 we will Pay the Cost of sending the money to us, whether by Express Money Order, Registered Letter, Bank Draft or otherwise.

The new postal law permits parcels weighing four pounds or less to be sent by mail, at the rate of one cent an ounce, so that parties ordering less than $10 worth can have their purchases sent to them through their postoffices at a very slight expense. Parties sending to us for samples should be careful to write their names and addresses as plainly as possible, and where they desire packages sent by mail they should make provision for the postage, unless the order exceeds $1, when it will be forwarded at our cost. The Postage on Parcels must be Prepaid.

Goods sent C. O. D. to all points where the Express Company or Packets have Agents.

As a Matter of Accommodation we will purchase articles outside of our line, which are required for Fancy and Staple Dry Goods, but we do not pay the freight thereon unless the order for Dry Goods exceeds $50. For instance: If a party orders a piece of cotton, $6, and a hat, $3, the order would not be entitled to have the freight paid by us; but if the order was for a piece of cotton, a dress pattern, $5, and a hat, or any other article not in our line, $10, the freight would be prepaid on the whole. We make no charges for purchasing articles to a limited extent, and always do the best we can for our patrons.

Articles not corresponding to order can be Returned at our Expense.

Should we not be able to fill the order the money will be Returned at our Expense.

We make no charge for Cases, Baling, Strapping, Drayage or Insurance.

Orders should be addressed to the firm to insure prompt attention.

The personal attention of one of the partners given to country orders.

We have been in the business more than

TWENTY YEARS,

and the steady yearly increase affords a gratifying record of Fair Dealing, to which we point with pride. We are already beginning to receive

THE OLD STONE MASON.

BY FREDERICK LOCKER.

A showery day in early spring—
An old man and a child
Are seated near a scaffolding
Where marble blocks are piled.

His clothes are stained by age and soil,
As hers by rain and sun;
He looks as if his days of toil
Were very nearly done.

To eat his dinner he had sought
A staircase grand and vast,
And here the dutiful child had brought
His scanty noon repast.

A worn out workman nodding old,
A blooming child of light,
The stately palace steps—all made
A most pathetic sight.

I had sought shelter from the storm,
And saw this lowly pair,
But none could see the Shining Form
That watched beside them there.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 18.—Celestial news per steamer Crocus: Centennial exhibits continue to arrive from various parts of China. Two formidable insurrections are disturbing the peace of China.

The prime minister of Japan is preparing to visit Europe and America.

Two hundred houses were recently fired in Yeddo.

An unknown disease, which kills almost immediately, has depopulated several villages near Soochow.

NEW YORK, April 18.—Henry C. Bowen has withdrawn from the Congregational Union. He states that he is heartily in sympathy with Drs. Storrs and Biddington, and his reasons for withdrawing are similar to theirs.

HOUSTON, TEX., April 18.—The fourth Texas State Fair commences on the Fair Grounds, in this city, May 2—and continues five days. Great preparations have been made.

RIO GRANDE CITY, April 19, 3 P. M.—Mier was taken yesterday, at one P. M., by Naranjo and Vara with four hundred and fifty men. All the Lomitose officials and employees have gone to Guerrero. The citizens made no resistance; the revolutionists entering without opposition. Naranjo is expected at Camargo this evening.

Large forces of government troops are on the way to the Rio Grande, and some hard fighting may be looked for within a few days.

ANN ARBOR, MICH., April 19.—Prof. Watson reports the discovery, on the night of the sixteenth instant, in constellation Virgo, of a new planet hitherto unknown.

QUINCY, ILL., April 19.—The levee south of this city has broken. A large portion of bottom lands are flooded on the Illinois side, opposite Hannibal. Houses and farms are washed off.

NEW YORK, April 19.—This was the last day of the great revival. $50,000 have been collected, but $75,000 are still needed.

WASHINGTON, April 20.—Ex-Attorney General Williams, examined by the House Committee, on Expenditures in the Department of Justice, testified to the payment to John J. Davenport, formerly United States commissioner, in New York, out of the secret service fund, of $30,000 for election purposes.

Upon being pressed Judge Williams acknowledged that the money was paid by direct order of the President.

The naval and postoffice appropriation bills are completed, with a reduction of $8,000,000 in the two.

PITTSBURG, April 22.—One hundred and fifty frame cottages on the Methodist camp meeting grounds at Tarentum burned. The cottages were generally of four or five rooms, and of neat architecture. The fire will prove a disastrous one, and may seriously interfere with the arrangements for the national camp meeting which was announced to be held on the grounds in August. The loss is about $50,000.

FOREIGN.

LONDON, April 20.—The Levant Herald of April 12, published at Constantinople, says that at Hillah, a town of Asiatic Turkey, 60 miles south of Bagdad, from March 28 to 31 inclusive, there were 66 new cases of plague and 42 deaths; at Bagdad there were, from March 28 to April 1, 70 new cases and 75 deaths. The plague has now crossed to the left bank of the River Tigris, which had previously escaped it.

A dispatch to the Reuter Telegram Company from Berlin says the maintenance of complete agreement between three Northern powers is affirmed. From all quarters, moreover, it has been decided not to take any further steps in the Eastern question without a previous understanding among themselves and with the other guaranteeing powers.

The Prince of Wales sailed yesterday from Gibraltar for Cadiz. He will visit Madrid and Seville before going to Lisbon.

HAVANA, April 22.—Mexican dates to the thirteenth are received. The revolution in Jalisco has made little progress. The government troops have been generally successful.

Roseardo Marquez has been taken prisoner, and was being tried by courtmartial.

The pronunciados occupied the entire State of Moorales.

The revolution in Sonora and Sinaloa continued. In the interior States revolutionary movements were of no consequence. Gen. Escobedo is raising troops in San Luis Potosi.

Lerdo was pressing men into service, which caused much ill feeling. The seat of war was in the States of Oaxaca and Puebla. Gens. Alatorre and Rocella had retired to Tehuacan.

Gen. Alatorre was unsuccessful in his efforts to take the city of Oaxaca, having met with a reverse. He abandoned his wounded on his retreat. It was supposed he was awaiting reinforcements. It was rumored he had tendered his resignation.

Gen. Loaiza, at the head of one thousand five hundred troops, had occupied Chalchicuautla, in the State of Puebla, the rebels flying.

The revolutionists had reoccupied Jalapa. The rebels had again cut the railway between Vera Cruz and the city of Mexico, and trains were only running to Puebla. Gen. Figuera, at the head of a body of revolutionists, has destroyed the railway at Orizaba and Paso del Macho, demanding $25,000 from the directors. The State of Chiapas was in a state of siege.

SAN SEBASTIAN, April 22.—The Junta of Guipuzcoa held a very stormy sitting yesterday, which terminated in the refusal of the deputies for San Sebastian to further participate in the debate.

The inhabitants and many deputies declare if the fueros are in any way curtailed the Basque provinces will seize the first favorable opportunity of definitely separating from Spain and proclaiming their independence, under foreign protection.

LONDON, April 21.—A telegram, dated April 22, from the Barbadoes Defense Association, in Barbadoes, to the West India committee, says that riots have occurred throughout the island; plantations and houses have been sacked, animals destroyed, and an enormous destruction of property taken place.

Over forty rioters have been shot. The troops are actively employed. The city of Bridgetown is threatened, business suspended, and families are seeking the shipping for safety. The rioters say they have the Governor's sanction for their actions. The immediate recall of the Governor, John Pope Hennessy, C. M. G., is requisite to save the colony.

MATAMORAS, April 21.—Yesterday Gen. Diaz paraded the National Guard, about eight hundred strong, and presented them with battle-flags. After making a stirring speech he requested all who would volunteer to march to the interior to step to the front. Only one officer and two men came forward. The whole regiment was then ordered to their barracks and disarmed. This morning the rumor prevails that the revolutionists were badly defeated near Monterey, and the whole cavalry force left the city hastily in that direction. Diaz remains and is conscripting Mexicans to increase his force.

From the Work.

PAULDING, MISS.—Mr. Editor: Through God's goodness I reached here, on the thirteenth of January. The house which had been rented for us was not furnished, but we were conducted to the residence of Bro. W. M. Brame and lady, where we found everything that was necessary to make us comfortable. On the evening of the fourteenth we went into our house. The next morning a bill of groceries was placed within our reach, which made us feel at home. In addition to this, a nicely-dressed fat turkey was sent to us by our good Bro. Brame. I found we had no house of worship of our own. The church was burned several years ago. I commenced, a few weeks ago, with a subscription list, to see if we could not rebuild. I got $450 in this little town and community. I appealed for help from other places. The following is a list of those who responded, and the amounts given: Enterprise, $28.50; Meridian, $5.50; Jackson, Miss., $62.75; Hazlehurst, $2.50; Brandon, $7.25. Of the amount I received from Jackson, Bro. William L. Nugent gave me $50. Other brethren to whom I appealed have made me no reply. I have a promise from Brandon of more—from a noble firm of Methodists. I look for it, knowing it will come when they can spare it. The lumber for our church is being sawed, and by the last quarterly meeting we expect to present a nice little church.

The congregations all around the work are good and attentive. They are paying up the assessments at nearly all the churches. A steward announced to his congregation, last Sunday, that he wanted a certain portion of their assessment, and soon had the money. So you see how we do business. Yours fraternally,

D. P. BRADFORD.

APRIL 11, 1876.

JACKSON, MISS.—Mr. Editor: We are now closing the third week of a very interesting and profitable meeting. Several conversions, and up to date ten accessions to the church. One venerable man of sixty-nine years has been happily converted to God. Bros. Hines, Woodward and J. B. K. Smith rendered valuable assistance.

CHAS. B. GALLOWAY.

APRIL 22, 1876.

"What does 'Good Friday' mean?" asked one school boy of another. "You had better go home and read your 'Robinson Crusoe,'" was the withering reply.

Letter from California.

MR. EDITOR: The past winter has been an extraordinarily wet one. I suppose no less than forty inches of rain has fallen in this place since the first of November, while I notice that in at least one place in California it has exceeded eighty inches. It is an old saying at home, "More rain, more grass," that is good for California, since the most important crops are hay and grain. As a rule, the wetter the winter the more abundant the crops. I trust it will prove true this year. But the rains are over at last, and we have been having most delightful weather for two or three weeks past. After this time we expect but little rain—only a shower occasionally during April and May, after which it will cease altogether until fall. Now is the time for one to visit California to fall in love with it. Everything—save the rocks—is beautifully green. Pasturage is excellent. Clover and wild grasses of all kinds are abundant. California, I admit, is a great and lovely country, but I must say that in many respects it has been overrated. The soil is good, but not so good as some people would lead us to believe. While at home I have read articles from this State in which it was claimed that the soil produced from forty to sixty or more bushels of wheat to the acre, the climate a perpetual spring, etc. The truth is that while those large crops may occasionally be produced on certain lands, I am confident the average field of wheat throughout the State will not exceed fifteen bushels per acre. The climate in this part of the State is certainly delightful—only a little disagreeable during the rainy season. But in the valleys of the Sacramento and San Joaquin it is considerably warmer during the summer season than at the South. Fever and ague abound. Again, immigrants are urged to come here for "cheap homes" "plenty of railroad and government land unoccupied." I suppose it would be a hard matter, in this part of the State, to find a quarter section of land (government) on which a man could support a family. There is scarcely an opening in the mountains where some one has not settled. I learn that there is considerable land on the San Joaquin, and about Tulare Lake, not taken up, but it is in a section where they have but little rain, and is worthless unless it can be irrigated. The most of the best lands was long since taken up by grants. It ranges in price, valley lands from $10 per acre upward; mountain, for stock ranges, from $8 up. But little of it will pay interest on the investment. If you ask: "Where is the country?" I refer you to the Southern States. It is very true that since the war our people have been much discontented. The war swept their property from them; those who were formerly their slaves were made their rulers. Hence they have been ready to find fault with everything—soil and climate not excepted. No portion of the United States, of any size, can compete with the Southern States in climate. Certainly none can produce so great a variety of crops. True, California may claim to do it, and as a State it may. Here we raise one thing in one part of the State, something else in another; in one part potatoes do well, in another part wheat, and so on. There you can raise corn, cotton, sugar, molasses, rice, peas, potatoes, tobacco, small grain, fruits, vegetables, etc., all on the same farm. Your soil is certainly as good as the average. Any soil will wear out, here or elsewhere, unless fertilizers are resorted to. Let the people of the South be contented. If you have a home, keep it; establish manufactories, be independent. I prophesy that in twenty years from to-day the South will be recognized as the choice part of the United States. Do not understand that I am dissatisfied with California. I am not, by any means. My Master has work for me to do, and by his grace I expect to do it.

I was kept awake, a few nights since, by dancing, across the way, by some of the members of that dancing church which I spoke of in my last, in company with others. Festivals and fairs are frequent. They are to have a grand fair next week, which, I learn, is to break up with a dance. In fact they have been known to hurry through prayer meeting to go to a dance. I think the suggestion of a member to a certain church below, that they had better put the pews on rollers, so that after preaching they could roll the seats out and have a dance, would apply to them if it would to any one. A few days ago one of our members was accosted by a saloon-keeper, who, he says, "requested me to take a chance in a raffle for a picture he held in his hand. I stopped a moment to look at the picture, and he urged me to take a chance, saying he had gambled for Christ's sake until midnight a few nights before."

The people are beginning to be aroused here on the Chinese question. If they continue to pour in as they have they will soon take the country. Give me the negro in preference every time. Let Southern people be contented with the negro, and call not for the Chinaman. Our government is doing very wrong to encourage Chinese immigration. Meetings are being held in various parts of this State protesting against it.

I started in with three appointments. I now have seven, which extend over an area of about six hundred square miles; still giving half my time to Cloverdale. The four additional appointments are in tolerably thickly-settled neighborhoods, where they were entirely without preaching. In one of these I asked a man if there were any church members in the community. He replied by saying he would be ashamed to own that he lived in a neighborhood where there were no church members. But I have since learned that there is not a church member in the district, though there are over fifty children within the school ages. As a rule the people all through this country are intelligent, no matter how far back in the mountains you get. There is a great work to be done here by our church. We only need money and men.

The public schools are a success, and are open from six to ten months in the year. The average salary of teachers is about $80 per month. Teachers undergo a very severe examination before they are granted certificates. They have had quite a time in one district, within the bounds of my circuit, with a negro. He persists in a determination to send his child to school. The whites are unwilling to send with him. They have made various propositions, such as putting him in a separate room, teaching him at different hours. He refuses to compromise—wants his child to sit with the whites and recite in the same classes. I am fearful he will break up the school entirely. Last year the trustees employed a teacher at $70 per month expressly to teach him. He went one day. Unless the trustees establish separate schools for them they are compelled to admit them in the same schools with the whites.

But my letter has already grown too long. So adieu.

Yours truly,

W. P. ANDREWS.

Conference Claimants.

MR. EDITOR: Please give place to a few words to the members and pastors of the Mississippi Conference with reference to the collection for Conference claimants. And, first, I will remind our dear brethren, lay and ministerial, that the whole amount raised in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference last year, for this purpose, was $1,658.60. The number of superannuates is eleven, and the others who are rightfully claimants twenty-two, making in all thirty-three who are justly claimants upon every Methodist in the bounds of the Conference. Much is written, and properly so, on the duty of giving and collecting for missions, foreign and domestic, but very little about this important matter of caring for the worn-out veterans of the cross, and the loved ones of deceased brethren once the standard-bearers of the truth in our ranks. Let us wake up all over the connection on this vital point. Our church promises this claim, and the pastors are charged with its collection. If we present the claim, properly represented, the people will respond. What is $1,658.60 among so many claimants? We have assessed by the joint board of finance for this purpose, this year, $2,500. Shall we get it? Rather, shall we not double it? What say my brethren in the ministry? Commence at once, keep it up all the year, preach to the people, tell them the nature of the claim and the necessities of the claimants, and if you do you will be surprised at your success. No pastor ought to feel that he has done his whole pastoral duty until he has collected every dollar assessed to his charge. Many will contribute privately, if called upon and suitable explanations given. Let us all get the burden of this work on our hearts, and it will be sure to succeed. Methodism means success. Its machinery is all right only let us work it. Brethren, ask the people to read this appeal in behalf of a dear and important interest of the church. Let us be just. R. D. NORSWORTHY.

Dom Pedro In New York.

The Emperor of Brazil, Dom Pedro De Alcantara, and the Empress, says the New York Observer of April 20, arrived on Saturday afternoon, and without ceremony proceeded to their quarters at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. The Emperor commenced at once his tour of sight-seeing, going to one of the theaters in the evening, having a serenade at eleven o'clock; at twelve o'clock he visited the Herald establishment to witness the stereotyping and putting to press of a daily paper. His Sabbath was a medley, secular and religious. Early in the morning he drove to the Central Park, and inspected the reservoir and other Croton works; then went to St. Patrick's cathedral, where he was addressed during the services by the vicar general; in the evening, with his suite, he attended the Moody and Sankey services at the Hippodrome, where he was apparently one of the most deeply interested auditors; at the close of the service, late in the evening, he visited the News Boys' Lodging-House, where he was received by the president of the Children's Aid Society, William A. Booth, Esq.; the boys sang several hymns, and the Emperor inspected the whole building, dormitories and all; thence he went to a station of the fire department, and witnessed the sounding of an alarm and instant preparation for a fire; and he closed his round by visiting a police station.

On Monday morning the Emperor left his hotel at seven o'clock to visit the wharves, which he did without being recognized. In the course of the day he visited the Normal College, some of the public schools, St. Luke's and Bellevue Hospitals, and in the evening left for San Francisco by the Erie road, in a Pullman hotel car which was engaged for the whole excursion. The Empress remains in the city until his return in time for the opening of the Centennial Exhibition.

The Emperor is a man of great intelligence, highly educated, and a liberal ruler. He is a Roman Catholic, but his Romanism sits rather loosely on him, as may be inferred from his Sunday evening attendance upon the preaching of Mr. Moody. His empire is in much the same attitude toward the Pope as the kingdom of Italy, and he is quite as independent as Victor Emanuel.

Card of Thanks.

To the generous ladies who so kindly interested themselves, and labored with so much zeal and spirit in getting up and carrying on the Centennial Bazar, in aid of the Seashore Camp Ground, the trustees desire to record their grateful acknowledgments and return their sincere thanks. They have pleasure to report net proceeds of the entertainment, after all expenses paid, of over $600.

PHILIP HALLARAN, Sec.

NEW ORLEANS, April 26, 1876.

Mr. Gladstone's question concerning the compatibility of an acceptance of papal infallibility with fidelity to the civil government receives some light from the following, taken from an Italian Ultramontane journal:

"It is allowed to take the customary oath to support the State; but there is no need of accompanying the oath with an expressed restriction. It suffices that that restriction be made beforehand to the church. One taking an office under the government ought to declare before the church that in taking the oath he intends to preserve all his liberty of conscience for the cases where the civil functions assumed should be in opposition to the ecclesiastical laws."

Dr. Prime, editor of the New York Observer, received from a correspondent this request:

"To Inquirer:—Please give us a common-sense letter on the second coming of Christ."

To which he replies: "I do not know a word about it except what is in the Bible, and that you can read and understand as well as I can. If I get any new light on the subject I will write immediately, but whether it be a 'common-sense letter' or not I will leave you to judge."

The thirty-fifth annual Council of the Diocese of Louisiana assembled at the Church of the Annunciation, corner of Race and Camp streets, on Wednesday, the twenty-sixth of April, the Right Rev. Dr. Wilmer, Bishop of the diocese, presiding.

A MUNIFICENT GIFT AND A MUSICAL FEAST.—The Messrs. Chickering, of Boston and New York, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, have generously presented to the Vanderbilt University one of their magnificent grand square pianos. It came through Mr. Dorman, of the Music Emporium, Nashville, who complemented it by adding a stool and cover. The occasion was made memorable by a grand concert at the Vanderbilt, April 11, when the chapel was crowded with the lovers of music. Mrs. Blandner, organist of McKendree church, and teacher at Dr. Ward's Seminary, prepared a recherche programme of classical music, which won golden opinions from our most fastidious critics, while we of the lower sort only wondered how the fingers and the voice could go through all its mysteries. No one so vividly recalls to us the bird-like tones of Jenny Lind as Mrs. Craig, whose marvelous modulation transcends that of the Swedish Nightingale, in the estimation of those who have heard them both. The McKendree choir rendered valuable aid in sweetly discoursing some sacred pieces for the special delectation of Bishops Wightman and McTyeire, the editor, and others of the same sort, who were present, and greatly enjoyed the dulcet entertainment. The exercises closed with the doxology in Old Hundred, and the benediction by Bishop Wightman.

ARRIVAL OF REV. DR. RIGG.—Rev. James H. Rigg, D. D., president of the Wesleyan Training Educational Institution at Westminster, England, and one of the fraternal delegates appointed by the British Wesleyan Conference to the forthcoming General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says the New York Christian Advocate of April 20, arrived by the Celtic, of the White Star line, on Sunday last. On Monday he made a brief visit to the book-room, and to the Preachers' Meeting, where he was most cordially greeted by Bishop Janes, the various General Conference officers at our publishing headquarters, and by a large number of ministers. Dr. Rigg seemed in good health after his long voyage, and gracefully and appreciatively responded to the many hearty, personal welcomes which he received.

The Congregationalist advises people to commit the following to memory:

"Brother Jonathan commenced business in 1776, with thirteen States and 875,025 square miles of territory, which was occupied by about 3,000,000 of civilized human beings. He has now a family of 43,000,000, who occupy thirty-seven States and nine Territories, which embrace over 3,000,000 of square miles. He has 65,000 miles of railroads, more than sufficient to reach twice and a half round the globe. The value of his annual agricultural production is $2,500,000,000, and his gold mines are capable of producing $70,000,000 a year. He has more than 1,000 cotton factories, 780 daily newspapers, 4,500 weeklies and 625 monthly publications. He has also many other things too numerous and too notorious to mention."

A dispatch from Rome, of the seventeenth, says: Negotiations between Spain and the Vatican have been suspended. The Spanish government has announced that it will accept the concordat of 1857, except the clause decreeing religious unity. Spain will await fresh proposals from the Vatican before resuming negotiations. It is announced that the Pope has written an autograph letter to King Alfonso, reminding him of his promises to maintain religious unity and the concordat. The Pope encouraged the Carlists in their revolt, hoping to make Don Carlos a tool. He ought to eat his fruit now without complaining, even though it be bitter.—New York Observer.

William Cullen Bryant, Theodore D. Woolsey, Alexander H. Bullock, Horace White and Carl Schurz, men of national reputation, have joined in an invitation to citizens who love country rather than party, purity of administration rather than transient political success, to meet in New York city on the fifteenth of May, in a free conference, "to consider what may be done to prevent the national election of the Centennial year from becoming a mere choice of evils, and to secure the election of men to the highest offices of the republic whose character and ability will satisfy the exigencies of our present situation and protect the honor of the American name."

The Bavarian Pfalzer Zeitung says that the Bavarian minister of war has been stringently admonished from Berlin to discontinue the exemptions from the conscription hitherto accorded to priests and theological students. The Zeitung says that at the next conscription a fully ordained Capuchin priest and a number of students will be required to serve.

Since the beginning of this year the German empire has a uniform currency, and the medley of pistoles, ducats, gulders, krentzers, groschen, and the hundred other coins that formerly were such a vexation to travelers, have all disappeared from circulation.

It is no great misfortune to oblige ungrateful people, but an insupportable one to be forced to be under obligations to a scoundrel.—Bailey.

My Defense.

MR. EDITOR: In the Alabama Baptist, of the sixteenth of March I see an article written by one of its associate editors, in which he says: "The circuit preacher of Butler is on the war-path." As I am the preacher to whom he alludes, will you allow me to make my defense through the ADVOCATE? After disclaiming any attempt "to get up a controversy anywhere," and making some other observations, he says: "It seems that the points of unhappiness with our Butler county circuit rider are two: first, we alluded to the decline of infant baptism in this country; whereas the circuit preacher says 'that in one small circuit in Alabama there were over three hundred infants baptized last Conference-year.' Inasmuch as calling statements in question is the order with this preacher, we shall take the liberty of disputing the above. When he proves his statement we will then be time enough for some brother now in there to explain for us."

We shall neither explain nor attempt to prove the above statement which he makes for us. We simply deny it. We made no such statement. But we do not propose to allow him to escape with the acknowledgment that he simply "alluded to the decline of infant baptism in this country." In his centennial explosion at "Ebenezer church, in Butler county," his effort was to unchurch all Christians not of his sect, and among other historical absurdities he said, in substance, "that all other denominations were rapidly becoming Baptists." To prove this statement he asserted that "infant baptism was dead as a regular church ordinance—practiced only by sects or individuals privately." We shall hold him to this statement—he cannot escape. If he denies it he raises the question of veracity between himself and the most intelligent men of this community. If he acknowledges having made the statement he antagonizes facts, for two lengthes out of thirteen of Methodism, to say nothing of other pedobaptist denominations, baptized about eighty thousand infants last year in this country. If, however, this negative averment is correct in saying that only a "few individuals baptize their children," then pedobaptist principles prevail to a much greater extent in this country than we supposed.

Again, he says: "His second ground of murmuring is found in an allusion which we made to the progress of Baptist principles in exalting the word of God to a position of complete authoritativeness; that, instead now of placing a Discipline in the hands of the young Christian, they are more disposed to give him a New Testament. For this the circuit preacher asked the congregation to pray 'God to paralyze all such tongues.' We have just this to say of this prayer: The man who is so stupid as to believe that the "circuit preacher" or any other Methodist could desire the literal and physical paralysis of any man's tongue has our fullest consent to enjoy his opinion.

But to his "allusion." As a second argument to prove that "all denominations were becoming Baptists," he stated that the "former practice of pastors was to give each member a Discipline on his reception into the church, but now the practice is to give him a New Testament." He cannot deny these statements, nor can he explain them. They are several intelligent, reliable and responsible gentlemen in the community who will be qualified to his having made them substantially as we have stated them above.

A preacher of that church, living near us, defended them with vehemence in conversation with a lady of this community on the evening of the day they were made. One of their female members—and, so far as we know or believe, the most intelligent member of their church here—defended these statements, asserting that giving the Discipline to members on their reception into the church was the practice of Methodist preachers under her own observation in the State of Mississippi.

On the day after we exposed this Ebenezer deliverance one of their deacons said to one of the "circuit rider's" stewards that he "thought at the time that Bro. Renfroe's remarks about infant baptism and the Methodist Discipline were unealled for." In fact no one thought of denying these things until after this "Arabbesque circuit rider exposed them.

For taking the liberty to call in question his wild statements, he seeks to intimidate by making the most bombastic threats that we have read for a long while. He tells Methodists to "lie low and keep dark;" that they have a "record which will not do for exhibition;" that they have a "revolutionary history," and that they "must not make too much noise," lest they "attract his fire." He tells them that he is "perfectly willing to shell the woods in that direction." Well, if he has no better gun than the one he flashed down here, he will do Methodists no harm. Not even the "woods" would take "fire" from his "shell." "Much water" would quench all the fire in him. We will say for his benefit, and information too, that Methodist principles have been picked at by such nibblers for more than a hundred years, and still the Methodist Church moves on in her grand march to victory, bidding defiance to all the "shell" and all the "fire" of such men, and to-day numbers three million two hundred and thirty-eight thousand and sixty-six communicants in this country.

He gravely charges the Methodist people, through the "circuit rider," of the "attempt," in former times, "to silence the tongues of Baptists by putting them in jail, by chaining them to the whipping post, and in some instances did absolutely cut out their tongues." If this was written by a man of information, his manifest intention was to strengthen the prejudices of his people, and stir up in them the worst passions of human nature. What a wonderful talent all his sort" have of sniffing their people into tears over the imaginary persecutions of Baptists! It would make his head ache to point to the time and place when and where Methodists inflicted punishment upon Baptists by either of the above modes of torture. That Baptists have suffered persecution no one denies: but that they have suffered persecution only in common with other Protestants no man of information will affirm. Smitchered for something better to write, he brings up the old fowl story, the application of which is about this: "Circuit preacher, you must hush, absolutely you must hush, or we can never make the people believe that ours is the only church that God will recognize." If you will not heed this respectful advice, I must say to you, sir, that I have scared your people into the wisdom of silence everywhere else." If this article is a good exhibit of his wisdom and talent, the alarm should be in another direction, and he seems himself to take it, for he immediately turns the "circuit rider" over to "a certain Skinner at Pineapple," either to skin or tan his hide. Well, we know but little of his "Skinner." We regard him as a Christian gentleman, and for that reason we believe that he will have enough to do to look after his own business. We suppose, however, that the editor might be induced to come down and hold while his "Skinner" skins. We now have the facts before the public, and shall take no further notice of this article, nor any other that its author may write.

Systematic Theology,

OR: THEOLOGICAL CATENA DE TWENTY SIX LINKS.

MR. EDITOR: There are many persons who rend the Bible and form their opinions from isolated passages, without any reference whatever to the connection such opinions or doctrines may have with the general teaching of the Holy Scriptures. Such persons are liable to fall into gross errors. There evidently is a unity in the doctrines taught in the word of God; consequently, when a doctrine is not fully specified, it may be inferred from the attributes of God, and other doctrines clearly taught. As far as my judgment goes, being guided by the teaching of the Holy Scriptures and aided by the standard works of our church, I cannot find a flaw or break in the links of the following catena:

1. That there is a God.—Gen. i, 1; Ps. xix, 1-3; Rom. i, 20.

2. That God is perfect in goodness, justice, holiness and truth.—Luke xviii, 19; Deut. xxxii, 4; Isa. xliii, 15; Ex. xxxiv, 6.

3. That God is impartial.—Second Sam. xiv, 14; Eze. xviii, 32; Second Peter iii, 9.

4. That God cannot will an unholy act.—Rom. xii, 2.

5. That whatever God decreed was in accordance with his will—Isa. x, 22, 23.

6. That God never decreed that a certain portion of the human family should live and die in sin. If he had thus decreed, the sinner would have to suffer forever for having complied with the will of God.—Matt. xxviii, 14; John vi, 40; Mark iii, 35.

7. That the unchangeable purpose or decree of God is that all who repent, believe and endure to the end shall be saved.—Matt. x, 22, xxiv, 13.

8. That the Old and New Testament Scriptures were given by the inspiration of God.—Job xxxii, 8.

9. That man was made a holy being.—Gen. i, 27, v, 1.

10. That God gave man the capacity of willing and choosing.—Jos. xxiv, 15; First Cor. vii, 37.

11. That it was by his own free will and choice that he disobeyed God.—Gen. ii, 16, 17; Jer. ii, 13.

12. That man has the power, by the grace of God, to choose the good, and reject the evil.—Jos. xxiv, 15.

13. That Christ possessed a human soul and body.—Luke i, 31-35; Isa. liii, 10.

14. That the fullness of the godhead was inseparably united to that human soul and body.—Isa. ix, 6; Col. ii, 9.

15. That Christ in that two-fold nature acted and spoke as a servant sent.—John v, 30-36.

16. That Christ acted and spoke as simply a man.—Mark xiii, 32; Matt. xxi, 18; John iv, 6, v, 9, xi, 35.

17. That Christ spoke and acted as a God.—Luke vii, 48; John xi, 43.

18. That the benefits of the mission of Christ extended to all who suffered by the fall of Adam.—Rom. v, 18; First John ii, 2; First Tim. ii, 4.

19. That Christ was touched with the feelings of our infirmities.—Matt. viii, 17; Heb. v, 2.

20. That Christ did not design to sport with the feelings of the human family when he invited all to come to him and be saved.—Matt. xi, 28; Rev. xxii, 7.

21. That man has the power, through the already imparted grace of God, to obey his calls.—Tit. ii, 11; Deut. ii, 26, 27; Josh. xxiv, 24.

22. That all the calls of God may be rendered effectual by being obeyed.—Jos. xxiv, 19, 20; Jer. xxvi, 13; Heb. xi, 8.

23. That God will irresistibly convict the sinner, but will never irresistibly convert him.—John i, 11, 12, iii, 18-21, v, 40.

24. That a distinction should be made between belief founded on testimony and saving faith. Belief does not extend beyond an assent of the mind to a given proposition. Faith is an active, moving principle of the mind, in which the head, the heart and all the affections are concerned. The devil believes and trembles; so does the sinner; but faith enables a man to rejoice. Faith looks into futurity.—Heb. xi.

25. That all men have the power, by that grace which hath appeared unto all men, to repent, exercise faith and obtain pardon.—Tit. ii, 11-13; Rom. v, 15.

26. That election to eternal life is conditional, and that man must be a co-worker with God in order to make his election sure.—Second Peter i, 10, 11.

This catena has many other links; but the twenty-six links here noticed are all long and strong. It is a chain that cannot be broken; and, if thoroughly studied by every theological student, there will be but little danger of running into the extremes of Calvinism, or the meshes of Unitarianism, Sociuianism or Universalism.

W. SHILLMAN.

EXCELSIOR, MISS., March 8, 1876.

Duties of the Pastor.

MR. EDITOR: There are perhaps no duties more important or more difficult to perform properly than those of the pastor. His mission is one that has for its object the salvation of souls and the glory of the Creator; and his duties are difficult on account of man's carnal nature, and the power that satan has over the minds and hearts of men.

But it is to be feared that there are some pastors who do not have a proper sense of the difficulties, importance and responsibilities of their office. The most important duty of a preacher is to preach the gospel, and to urge upon men the importance of an immediate acceptance of its offers of salvation; and he should strive to do this well; not to use the figures of rhetoric and the graces of oratory only, and to please his hearers by his eloquence, but to present in a clear, forcible manner the truths of the gospel, to preach a present salvation by "repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ." It is to be lamented that some are not thus pointed and zealous, but seem to attach more importance to the manner in which those truths are delivered, and of the words employed to express them, than of the truths themselves. And it is a sad fact that there are many "fine sermons" that have in them but little about Christ and his redeeming work; and there are many "fine preachers" who have but few seals to their ministry. The preacher should preach as if the salvation of souls depended on it, and earnestly strive to lead sinners to Christ, and not to show himself learned, eloquent or great. But while preaching is the most important of the preacher's duties, there are many others of great importance, and which, if neglected, hinder his usefulness. It is made his duty to "visit from house to house, to associate with his people at their homes, to learn their spiritual condition, to strengthen and encourage such as are weak and wavering, to cheer the despondling, to stir up the lukewarm and backslidden to a sense of their duties, and rouse them to an active discharge of those duties." He should pray with them at their homes, and endeavor to get his feelings in sympathy with theirs, and thus inspire a feeling of unity in religious thoughts, interests and duties.

Another duty is to "diligently instruct the children in every place," to catechise them in regard to their knowledge of the truths of the Bible, to ascertain if they have correct views of the nature and importance of religion, and, by a kind, gentle deportment toward them, win their confidence and love. One of the surest means of reaching a parent's heart is to win the love of the children; and if the family like the preacher around the fireside, they will be apt to attend and like his preaching. But there are too many preachers who neglect these duties, who do not visit their people, who neglect the Sunday school, the class meeting, the prayer meeting and love-feast, and it is to be feared that many of them are not as spiritual as they should be, who do not enjoy or preach "Christian perfection." Brethren of the ministry, let us study to show ourselves workmen approved of the Lord, and strive to win souls to Christ, and advance the interests of his kingdom.

J. J. NIXON.

Vanderbilt University.

MR. EDITOR: How would you like to hear from Vanderbilt? Every member of our church has an interest here, and they should feel interested. I know you are anxious for its prosperity and proud of its prospects. There have been some in our church who have questioned the good results of such an institution as this. I am not an advocate of theological training unless it is accompanied with pentecostal "training." A young preacher of the Holston Quarterly Conference asked a preacher what course must he take in order to prepare himself for the ministry. The reply was to go first "through a course of the Holy Ghost." Rev. H. H. Montgomery, writing to me, says: "I hope all the young preachers of the Vanderbilt will be burning lights, with much heat, in the church. Let every one seek earnestly for the anointing from the Holy Ghost, so that all their learning may be as blazing torches and heated furnaces. Then they will be a power for good in the church—like polished shafts in the quiver of Jehovah."

Dr. Summers has about forty-three preachers taking his lectures. Of course we all cannot help loving the doctor for the great interest he takes in us. Before the lecture, generally, the doctor will give out a hymn, and after singing it may be he then will tell us of the importance of keeping the heart right. Mr. Editor, do you think there is a great chance of formalism under these circumstances? The doctor is now in the heart of Christian "theology." His lectures are impressive, deep and masterly. Dr. Shipp is in the right place. His classical education, his sociable nature and his devotion to the cause of Christ make all love him. Dr. Granbery, too, is the "right man in the right place." His Virginian disposition, his long experience in the ministry, and his extensive learning, with piety, make him beloved. Dr. Summers teaches us how to defend our articles of religion; Dr. Shipp how to interpret the word of God, and Dr. Granbery impresses on us our fearful responsibilities.

The commencement will be on the twenty-first of June. We will be glad to have you come up then, and if you come be sure to visit Wesley Hall and see twenty-seven preachers living in brotherly love. As we thank God that peace is in our land, and the centennial year finds us enjoying national freedom, we should send up praise to our Father that we have a Vanderbilt to welcome the next century of our freedom. Your brother in Christ,

INMAN W. COOPER.

A Hindostan work on music says that music is the painfully-acquired art of speaking loudly in a shrill voice.

OBITUARIES.

MR. EDITOR: It becomes my painful duty to record the death of another good man who has fallen in the midst of life and usefulness. At ten o'clock on Sabbath morning, March 5, Bro. THOMAS J. MOORE, of DeSoto parish, La., departed this life in full hope of that which is to come. He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church South from the days of his youth, and had served it for many years as steward and Sunday school superintendent. He was richly endowed by nature with vocal musical talents, which he had cultivated to a high degree of perfection. During the last several years of his life he was devoted especially to the interests and labors of his Sunday school at Bethel, in his own neighborhood. Here he had the most interesting Sunday school that I ever saw in a country place. It numbered about ninety scholars, whom he kept supplied, by his personal efforts, with Sunday school literature. He had so perfectly instructed the young people to sing that it was absolutely charming to be at his school and hear them. A few months before his death he had obtained Moody and Sankey's hymns and music; and, oh! how thrilling it was to hear him sing some of those famous pieces! I can but feel sad and sick at heart when I know that I shall hear his voice no more. Last spring he had a picnic for the children of his school, and Thomas Armstrong, president of Mansfield Female College, who is his cousin, delivered an address to the children. That day, while Bro. Moore led the children in song, whom he had so thoroughly trained for the occasion, we imagined that nothing earthly could afford him such delight. A heart and voice so long attuned to heavenly themes on earth can find no difficulty in the heavenly world, to join in the song of the redeemed unto him who loved us and washed us in his own blood," etc. He leaves a wife and children, and a whole community to mourn his loss.

JOSIAH BLACKWELL was born in Marlboro district, S. C., May 31st, 1793; emigrated to Wayne county, Miss., in the year 1816, and died November 9, 1875. Bro. Blackwell was attacked with a cancer on the face, which gave him excessive great pain; and as his days passed by this affliction were more severe, until he was confined to his house and bed. Before his death he was helpless that he had to be moved by the assistance of those who attended his sick-bed, and as the disease increased in its rapidity his sufferings were greater and greater still; he was always cheerful, and never murmured against the will of God. He ever displayed the Christian graces of submission and patience in every high suffering into the glory of his Maker. He added not affliction to his own burden, but to that of his friends and relatives who were around him by their complaint, but rather upheld and comforted, and that were about us both, at times, by the sweet consolations of the Spirit, and the delightful companionship of his Savior, encouraging and strengthening all by exhorting them to be ready to meet death in peace. It was interesting and profitable to all to see The gracious work of sweet adhesion, as displayed so gloriously in the case of Bro. Blackwell. Religion never was seen to better advantage than in his case, and none could fail to see that in him "patience had its perfect work." Bro. Blackwell was also among the oldest Masons in the county, and was buried with all the Masonic honors. May the God of all peace be with and perfect in acquaintance, and bless all who are left to mourn his loss.

DIED, in Hale county, Ala., May 10, 1875, SARAH DEAN, in the twenty-second year of her age. She professed religion when fourteen years old, and joined the Methodist Church at Liberty, Harrison circuit, as soon as she reached the proper age. She was a consistent member of that church until her death. Her disease lasted sixteen days, and seemed to be conscious from the beginning that she would die, as expressed herself, and did. She did not wish to get well. While suffering with a pain in the head she said: "When I am dead my little head will ache any more." To the bereaved parents we would say: "Grieve not. The Good Shepherd has taken the gentle lambkin to the eternal fold, where you may join her, and feed forever on the green pastures of love."

MRS. TYRTHIA T. T. PERRY, wife of Rev. Dow Perry, died at the house of her son, Rev. O. S. Perry, in Tallassee, Ala., March 29, 1876. She was the daughter of Rev. Turner and Martha Flint; was born in Jasper county, Ga., July 3, 1811; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church in 1831, was married to Rev. Dow Perry in 1834, and was buried at Mellonough, Ga., in 1838.

Modest and retiring in disposition, she was to be well known to be appreciated. She may be truly said that as an earnest sincere Christian, a kind, affectionate and devoted wife, a friend and obliging neighbor, she had few equals, and no superiors that could be reasonably expected. In all the relations of life she was good or the best that circumstances allowed. Indeed, I might say of her as was said of Dorcas, she was full of good works and almsdeeds which she did. She suggested the sixth verse of the 90th hymn, and requested that the 3d, 4th and 5th verses of the 91st hymn, in the Methodist Hymn Book, be sung on the occasion. The sermon was preached by her pastor, Rev. E. W. Sikes, to a large and grieved husband and nine surviving children, from her absence from that church where she was the center and delight of so many hearts. [illegible]

ON MONDAY, the third of April, a large number of friends and relatives of [illegible] G. Culliver, in Cedar Point, [illegible] by the last tribute to the memory of MARTHA C. CULLIVER, wife of Mr. Culliver. She was born in [illegible] county, Ga., November 24, 18[illegible]. Cedar Parish, La., April 2, 1876. For [illegible] Disciple Illness and great suffering, she endured with Christian fortitude. [illegible] the fall of 1873 she was converted, and soon afterward joined the Methodist Church, in which she lived and died. During her last illness her husband conversed with her frequently on the subject of her future home. She had no fears. Her peace was made with God, and she felt that [illegible] was. The family graveyard belonging to [illegible] G. Culliver contains more than [illegible] dead; however, the other dead of the [illegible] family, she was not to rest. Before she was laid to rest the Lord and Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, was sustained by [illegible] who knew her was to be found in the house of mourning, and wept and said: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord from henceforth," after a wedded life of [illegible] years. If there was no hope beyond the grave, such solitude and [illegible] spots

AVA CURTIS DAY, son of Zadock and Jane M. Day, was born February [illegible] near Petersburg, Williamsboro, and on the twenty-seventh of July, 1875, gathered of the flock.

He was good natured, especially to his parents and sisters, and the [illegible] child of his intelligent father, who [illegible] him something over a year, to another [illegible] death, he walked. That of [illegible] was a remarkable [illegible] being in full [illegible] of her predictions. A short while [illegible] his father's death, when only about [illegible] years, he told his mother, in a [illegible] to himself, that he and his father [illegible] the Lord had recently joined the [illegible] church, and for the [illegible] had memorized a verse as his [illegible] little talking God, instead of at the [illegible] school, he would so soon be called upon [illegible] depend for a seat in heaven.

There is one more vacant chair around [illegible] family board, but one more seat filled [illegible] one less child on earth, but one more [illegible] in heaven. Sorrow on earth, joy in heaven.

A. M. WATSON.

ALICE GENEVRA, eldest daughter of Nancy E. and George L. Barfield, was born April 10, 1873, and died March 24, 1876. Her short life was spent in Newton county, Miss. Little Alice was sweet, gentle, obedient; and very intelligent for one so young. Her sickness lasted sixteen days, and she seemed to be conscious from the beginning that she would die, as expressed herself, and did. She did not wish to get well. While suffering with a pain in the head she said: "When I am dead my little head will ache any more." To the bereaved parents we would say: "Grieve not. The Good Shepherd has taken the gentle lambkin to the eternal fold, where you may join her, and feed forever on the green pastures of love."

Whenever you perceive that you have a disrelish for spiritual food, for prayer, and for reading and pondering God's word—be alarmed, your spiritual life is in danger.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross we have in our composition.

Children of the Clouds.

...of these imperishable clouds rain
...the first-born child; it may be
...ded that it is, too, the favorite
...nson of vapor. But, notwith-
...nding its eminent position in the
...ily, it cannot be said to be alto-
...ther a credit to its relations. Rain
...nconstestably possessed of some
...st remarkable capacities—its tal-
...ts are brilliant, its influence is
...rmous; but the value and the
...ty of its qualities are inestimably
...inished by the capriciousness,
...willfulness and the disorder with
...ich it employs them. Of course
...has the excuse of having been
...ominably brought up, like all its
...nded, and of never having had
...dvantage of good examples at
...me, for neither weather nor vapor
...clouds set their younger rela-
...s a pattern of steadiness, of regu-
...ty of regularity of conduct. But,
...ever may be to blame, the fact
...s that the merits and defects
...rain are so intermingled that it is
...times very difficult to distin-
...sh them from each other. Open-
...ded, generosity and niggardly
...tice; the gentlest and tenderest
...sses and the fiercest blasts of
...per; the most dashing and im-
...uous public speaking, and the ...st and most painful silence, are
...ixed up together in this richly
...owed but wildly wayward nature.
...g is the second of the children
...clouds—so, at least, we may fairly
...ppose; for, though the succes-
...e of birth of the offspring of the ...s have not been regularly in-
...ed in the family Bible of nature,
...ally does book extremely proba-
...that fog came upon the earth
...diately after rain. Indeed
...e wise men who cabalistic

..., composed of water globules,
...those globules have not thirst.
...the characters of the two kins-
...are as unlike as their external
...rance. Rain is a spendthrift
...rests about his substance in
...y direction; fog is a miser who
...s together all he has. Rain is
...ddly in motion; fog is always
...ent and lazy. Rain is active,
...and noisy; fog is stagnant,
...y and silent. Fog is inanimate
...s of his brother gets into his
...as much as possible, and spends
...y fallaciously to prove that, as
...common mother, cloud, can de-
...o earth entire in the shape of ...ground son, it is altogether needless
...her to tumble down there in
...s under the name of the elder
...Unfortunately, however, the
...pressions of fog, it is of no
...of use to us, while its liquid
...ve is indispensable. It seems,
...ed, to know this, for it likes
...ecially to stop in inaccessible
...s on mountain-tops or out at sea,
...scarcely any one can look at
... it were ashamed of its condi-
... It is true that it does visit us
...sionally on dry land, but, in a
...y, hesitating sort of way, and it
...y presumes to show itself among ...broad daylight. Most of the ...r members of the family of
...dy—with all their faults—have
...redeeming qualities; but fog is
...lessly objectionable; it is ugly,
...ss, stupid and dirty.

...e third child is a daughter. She
...in the winter mir in the white
... that was given to her at her
..., and, though she is now as old
...he north wind, she has never
...ged her robe. Cold, still, spot-
... and majestic, she seems alto-
...r out of place amidst her coarse
...ions; they are a disorderly popu-
... she is a stately queen. Silent,
..., and so white that her very
...e means purity, she stands above
... Pallas Athene of weather.
...movements are soundless; she
...es all around her; she effaces
...thing she touches; all signs of
...re hidden beneath the noiseless
...she spreads. Immaculate, irre-
...ble and eternal, she possesses an
...lness and a grandeur which are
...al.

...ere ends the list of the offspring
...ond. Dew is her little brother,
...er child; for, like her, he issues
...t from their common mother—
...ly while vapor suspended in the ...sphere. He is consequently,
... as he is, the uncle of rain, fog,
... and hail. He has the merit of being the one single member of the entire family whose manners are always perfect; he is a charming, laughing, bright-eyed little fellow—a blithe and sparkling morning visitor, who opens the day for us with smiles. He, like his superb niece, snow, has a name which we have adopted as an emblem; as she is purity, so he is freshness; and well indeed does he symbolize that word—for what else is fresh like dew? This baby boy of vapor is the great jeweler of nature; it is he who sprinkles her with flashing gems; it is his bright handiwork which makes the leaves and grass-blades glisten in the early sun; his workmanship is indeed so brilliant that we almost doubt its origin, and have some difficulty in believing that he is really of the same rough race as weather and its brood. But the proof thereof is close at hand—he can freeze, he can become hoarfrost; and then, alas! when his drops have turned into crystals, he thaws, and disappears in dirty water, as is the habit of his lineage. Poor, little, charming dew! He does deserve a better genealogy.—Blackwood.

A Honeycomb for Christ.

Jesus Christ had arisen from the dead. His heart had begun again to beat after cessation. He came up among his disciples. Something must be offered him to eat. What was it to be? The land was wealthy in honey. The travelers to this day tell us that that country is all a-hum with bees. The honey is to be found in the rock, and sometimes dropping from the tree-branches. There is an instance in olden times where Jonathan dipped his rod into a pool of this liquid, gathered upon the ground, amid the forests of Ephraim. We are told, in the last chapter of Luke, that they brought a honeycomb to Jesus. He ate it. It must have been refreshing to him after the abstinence of the grave. Is there nothing for us to bring to Jesus that will be pleasant to his taste? Were the disciples the only men who could gratify Jesus? Is the honey all gone? Will Christ accept nothing from his people now? Is it to be all taking on our part, without any giving in return for what we take?

We have a better intimation to give. Jesus says in the canticles to the church: "Thy lips drop as with the honeycomb." Jesus will accept that which we bring to him. There is as much honey now for Christ as there was in the time of the disciples. We may bring to him the honeycomb of prayer. It is very sweet to the Savior's taste. We are apt to think only of our end of the prayer—of the blessing that comes to us, instead of the blessing that goes to Christ. Prayer is not only an advantage to us, but it is an advantage to Jesus. Does it bring comfort to our souls—it takes joy to his. Is there not extreme satisfaction in this to every Christian man and woman? After we have so maltreated Jesus by our wanderings, after we have so often broken his heart, is it not a joyful consideration to know that we may come and give him a positive exhilaration? Is all for us and nothing for Christ? If he breaks bread for the five thousand in the wilderness, shall not my Lord eat of the same loaves? If he turns water into wine, shall he have nothing of the beverage? Ayé. He says that when the banquet is spread it shall not only be a satisfaction to us, but it shall be a satisfaction to him. We are promised that not only we shall sup with him, but that he will sup with us; he sitting down beside us in our prayer, comfort coming to our souls, positive joy and satisfaction going to his. If we make an investment we expect a revenue from it. If the Lord Jesus Christ has given to the world pardon, peace, righteousness and salvation, shall he get nothing in return? An earnest Christian service is very sweet to the taste of Christ. Every kind word uttered, every noble deed done, traverses the heart of the Lord Jesus Christ with a supreme satisfaction. He looks out upon the earnest, humble, honest, faithful, loving Christian, and derives from his conversation and conduct joy unspeakable, and full of glory. When we remember what a hard time Jesus had on earth—how he was hounded from place to place; what pain struck through his head and his heart; how he was assailed by human venom and infernal strategy; how he went from pain to pain, from groan to groan, from darkness to darkness—shall it not become satisfaction to us that we may bring joy to his soul by an earnest Christian behavior? The field opens before us as Christian men. There never was so much to do for Christ as there is now. He sends forth his men into the highways and the hedges. A glorious banquet has been spread. He tells you and me to go out and invite the people to come to it. O that now we might bring the honeycomb of a grateful service; that every day and night of our lives might be an exhibition of the goodness and mercy of God; that we might go everywhere telling what God has achieved for our souls!

We are glad to know that though our work on earth is so imperfect, and the joy we bring to the heart of Christ is so limited, we shall at last render a glorious service. When they shall come from the east and from the west, from the north and from the south, a great multitude that no man can number, standing around about the throne, there will be a circle of martyrs and apostles, a circle of all the redeemed, a circle of the loved ones who have died in Jesus! O that will be the anthem of the redeemed! That will be the Sabbath of the ages, and the trees of the heavenly wood, like the forests of Ephraim, shall drop with honey, and Jesus, like Jonathan of old, may dip his scepter into it.—Christian at Work.

Anecdote of Dr. Fisk.

Forty years ago the Calvinistic divines of New England were shy about asking Arminian preachers into their pulpits. They used, however, to invite Dr. Fisk to lecture on temperance. On one occasion the doctor went to fulfill an appointment of this kind in a rural town of staid old Connecticut, in the vicinity of Hartford, where the congregation had been accustomed to the ministrations of one man for the best part of half a century, and who thought their minister the chief light of the century. The doctor, just then inaugurated as president of the new University of Middletown, was the guest of the good parson on Saturday night, and the arrangement was for him to lecture on the absorbing topic of those days—temperance—in the afternoon, at the Baptist church, and in the evening at the Congregational. Meanwhile nothing was said as to how he should occupy the usual hour of service on Sunday morning. The settled preacher was charmed with his Methodist guest, his polished manners, his intelligence, and ready power of conversation on all possible topics. They conversed together on Saturday evening, and Sunday morning till the bells rung at the old orthodox hair, half-past ten, for church. Still nothing had been said to Dr. Fisk about preaching. At bell-toll they started together for the "meeting-house." As they entered the portal the preacher was called aside by one of his deacons, and, after a hurried consultation with a few of the chief men, returned to Dr. Fisk and said:

"I am sorry, sir, I did not last evening ask you to preach to-day. My deacons say the people are anxious to hear you."

"I can preach if you desire it," said the doctor in reply.

"But you have no sermon with you."

"We Methodist preachers usually carry our sermons in our heads."

"Well, sir, if you can preach on such short notice, and would not deem such an invitation discourteous, it would oblige us very much."

"I can try," said Fisk.

And try he did, and preach he did; one of his most eloquent discourses, and wound up with a peroration that dissolved the whole audience in tears. Turning suddenly round as he ended, he asked the preacher to close the services. Tears were running down the good man's cheeks, and, with convulsive voice and sobs and gestures, he burst out:

"O no, sir! no, sir, I can't, please, sir, please excuse me. You close."

After prayer he announced that Dr. Fisk would lecture on temperance in the Baptist church in the afternoon, and deliver the same lecture in his church in the evening. Still wedded to the idea that the doctor had a manuscript prepared for the occasion, whereas the gentle, full-charged orator spoke for an hour and a half in the afternoon, and as long in the evening, without repeating himself, or tiring the hundreds that hung breathlessly upon his strung thoughts and mellifluous periods.—Dr. Hyde, in Ladies' Repository.

Good Men.

As every man's life is a plan of God, so every man is an instrument of God. His moral issues are chiefly beyond this world. The place for which God created a given man may be in readiness for him. The door which opens upon it may be ajar, already "on golden hinges turning." Bells "beyond the stars heard" may be calling him. Combinations of instrumental forces in the great system of co-working with God may be summoning him with a concentration of converging yet hidden reasons, of which we can only say that they are the mind of God. Their utterance through the flat of death is the voice of God. God wants this man just there, just now. Nobody else can be his substitute. Eternal purposes have fashioned the man for the place, and the place for the man, with eternal patience; and have marked on the dial, which is never set back, the hour and the minute at which the interests of the universe and God's own strategy require that the two should come together.

A mechanician constructs a certain axle, tempered and burnished, to fit the hub of a certain wheel, which again he fashions as elaborately to fit the axle, so that comprascope detects no flaws; and now nothing can take the place of either but itself, and each is labor lost without the other. True, they are only an axle and a wheel, each a single one, a minute one, a fragile one; not costly in material, nor remarkable in structure; but in the absence of either the chronometer which should decide the arrival of England's fleet at Trafalgar must hang motionless.

Every good man is such a fragmentary and related instrument in the hands of God. He is never for an hour an isolated thing. He belongs to a system of things in which everything is dovetailed to another thing. Yet no two are duplicates. Nothing can ever be spared from it. The system has no holidays. Through man's most dreamless slumbers it moves on, without waiting for delinquents. When and how and where his shadowy life here shall lead him up to the eternal service may be a circumstance in the infinite convolutions which it will not do to postpone or to antedate by a hair's breadth of time.

A good man may go from earth to heaven to take a place which archangels cannot fill, simply because angelic mind has not been created, nor instructed, nor disciplined for that place; and the place has not grown out of the contingencies of angelic service. Angels may "leap upon their harps" in waiting for the coming man.

Religious Intelligence.

—A short time ago the Empress of Japan opened a normal school for girls with an appropriate address.

—Australian Methodism, although but a quarter of a century old, numbers 30,000 members, and 328,000 attendants upon its public services.

—A new and promising mission has just been commenced by the Methodist New Connection in the southeast part of Chihli, in the district of Yang-Hsin, about thirty miles from Chu-chia, China.

—The Fingoes, a tribe in Native Kaffraria, have been so impressed with the value of the industrial school of the Scotch Free Church at Lovedale that they have subscribed £7,500 for a similar institution among themselves. Friends in Scotland added an equal amount, and Dr. Stewart has gone into the Trans-Kei territory to begin the work.

—The American Bible Society, at its meeting March 2, received encouraging reports from its work of distribution in Russia, France, Mexico, Italy, Turkey and India. $50,000 were appropriated to its foreign work. 6,600 Books for home fields, and 2,000 for foreign circulation were given. $50,495 were received in February, and 47,623 copies of the Scriptures issued.

—The ladies of the Baptist mission to the Chinese in Portland, Ore., report, as the result of the year's successful work, the conversion of fourteen Chinese youths, one of whom is preparing for the ministry; an increasing moral and civilizing influence over forty other pupils in their schools, the majority of whom have renounced idol worship, and a strong impression on the Chinese population of the superiority of Christian customs.

—The new Anglican church at Cairo, Egypt, was recently consecrated by the Bishop of Jerusalem. It is not forty years since Christians in Cairo were obliged to live in designated quarters and conform to certain burdensome rules, while they were liable, as they walked the streets, to be treated with the utmost scorn, and to suffer all manner of indignities. Surely the world is becoming more liberal, and growing wiser as it grows older.

—The statistics of the Wesleyan Methodists in Germany, for the year ending December 31, 1875, are as follows: Chapels, halls and other preaching places, 208—increase in the year, 13; preachers including those on trials and agents, 29—increase, 3; local preachers and exhorters, 88—increase, 4; Sunday schools, 31—increase, 10; Sunday school teachers, 142—increase, 2?; Sunday school scholars, 2,371—increase, 81; full and accredited members not including those on trial, 2,341—increase, 241; hearers, 6,901—increase, 774. The Wesleyan stations are, nearly all in Wurtemberg—Vienna in Austria, and Augsburg, in Bavaria, being the principal ones outside of Wurtemberg.

ITALY.—An Italian correspondent of Le Semeur Christianisme writes: "I had the pleasure of visiting Naples, where, hitherto so excellent a work has been done by the schools presided over by a large unsectarian committee. The Rev. Mr. Gray, who has lately been settled in the Scotch Church in Naples, was able to remove a heavy deficit which oppressed the work last spring, and will take the active place which Mr. Buscarlet used to occupy on the committee. All the different branches of native mission work will shortly be represented in the capital of the South. The Rev. Mr. Jones, in the Wesleyan interest, has built up a strong cause. I had the pleasure of worshiping in his splendid new church, in the very center of Neapolitan bustle and stir, and of hearing therein the eloquent monk Ruggieati, the Gavazzi of southern Italy. Like Gavazzi, he is a large-hearted and patriotic man, and so has incurred the accusation of preaching politics; but on the best authority, I was assured that he was an earnest preacher of the cross. I am told that Ruggieati's influence on the educated classes of Naples, particularly the young men, is great and wholesome, and that his week evening lectures and discussions are thronged."

—The Missionary Magazine contains an account of the Baptist movement in Sweden. It is furnished by Rev. A. Wiberg, formerly a minister of the Lutheran Church, but since 1854 the leader of the Swedish Baptists. It appears from this sketch that the Baptists of America have contributed nothing to the work except money and moral influence. Under the direction first of the Publication Society, and now of the Missionary Union, only Swedes have labored for the evangelization of their countrymen, and the whole movement has a thoroughly native character. A delegation of English Baptists who attended the second general conference of their Swedish brethren, in 1858, spoke of the assembly as composed of young, energetic, well-informed and good-tempered men—men clear and sharp in their distinguishing views, both of dissent and baptism; ready to labor for God and to suffer; accustomed to act together, and impressing their visitors with the conviction that for the Swedish Baptists there was a future full of promise. Many revivals have marked the preaching of these men, and have extended their beneficial influence into the State church. Free use has been made of the printing press, and the lead has been taken in the Sunday school movement. At the close of 1871 there was a membership of 10,160, organized into 225 churches, with 67 places of worship and 141 pastors. For the supply of the smaller preaching stations, 17 missionary societies supported 90 preachers in whole or in part, at a cost of $5,336. Severe persecutions have been endured in the way of fines, imprisonment and bentings; nor has full liberty yet been accorded to the young church. The parish rector can still forbid a Baptist to preach within his parish, the marriages of Baptists are illegal, and their funerals must be conducted by State-church ministers.

Our Young People.

THE SPARROWS' MAY DAY.

BY ALFRED NELSON.

Said Mr. Sparrow to his wife,
One morning in the early spring,
"Dear Mrs. S., upon my life,
I've come across the grandest thing

"A brand new house, with ridges to boot,
A mansard roof, and all complete;
We'll take a floor to-day, my dear,
And you must keep it nice and clear.

"The situation 'tip-top'—
None better where one can hop,
And quite within the reach of all
The window sills where the crumbs fall.

"So off they flew in haste to see
The grand new house, and, dear me!
Didn't they chatter in and out!
Sparrows knowing what they were about!

Good Mrs. S. with straw in mouth,
Picked out a room that faced the south;
For very prudently thought she
The sun will warm both nice and free.

But Mr. Sparrow did declare
The sun would surely scorch her there;
And as the flight was very high,
The little ones would fall and die.

At last they settled with each other
The first floor front to be the best;
And now they did begin anew
To build a cozy little nest.

Then both flew up, they both flew down,
With straw and rags and bits of lace;
They were the busiest birds
And each day long as busy as bees.

At last the nest was all complete.
And Mr. Sparrow says to me,
And keeps on the look-out so sharply that Then Mrs. S. flies up with pride

And when the little ones appear,
Won't Mr. Sparrow sleep and eat,
And say to Mrs. S., My dear,
Our brand-new house is just the thing.

From Our Little Friends.

LOUISIANA, WEST FELICIANA, April 15, 1876.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: I have been thinking a long time of writing to you. I am a little boy ten years old. I live in Liberty. I am attending school. Papa is the minister in charge here of the Amite circuit this year, and Mr. D. W. McLean is sent here to assist him. Papa is away most all the time on the work. We have a flourishing Sabbath school; we have forty scholars. I have two little sisters who go with me to Sunday school. How I love to read your paper, especially the Child's Corner. I do wish Grandpa Goodale would give us some more of his stories. I think he must be a very good old man. I am afraid you will not like so long a letter. I will close.

Your true friend,

STEPHEN RAINEY.

Ting-Shen, the Rice Merchant.

Opposite to the chapel in Hong-kong there is a rice shop kept by a man called Isaac Ting-Shen. Like all the other Chinese, he was very anxious to be rich; and to that purpose tried to deceive every person that bought from him, and to cheat those who sold rice to him. He thought there was no harm in this, because it was his business, and every other merchant did the same. He used to go to the heathen temples and burn gilt paper and incense to the gods, presenting tea and fruits at their shrines, not so much to be pardoned for his sins as to get them to help him to cheat more, and to cause more people to come to buy rice from him.

One day he was standing leaning at the door of his shop, counting how much money he had, and thinking how he could cheat the next person that came to his shop. He saw a number of persons going into the chapel opposite, and afterward coming out again. He asked what kind of a place it was, and, being told that it was a place of worship that the barbarians built, he thought he would like to go in and see what kind of idols were in it, and what kind of offerings were laid on the altars.

At last he resolved, and ventured in; but he was astonished. He looked round; he could see no images at all, no candles burning, no offerings, no incense; but there he saw a barbarian, speaking to the people out of a high place, the pulpit; so he listened to hear what he was saying. He was telling the people about Jesus Christ; that God was a holy God who must punish sin; that he looks into the heart and writes down every bad thought; that he listens to everything that we say, and writes down every lie; that he sees all we do, and writes down our sins in his book to judge us at the last day.

Ting-Shen started when he heard this, and said to himself: "This is like thunder piercing my ears! Painful! lamentable!"

He listened again, and he heard the teacher tell of the love of God that sent his own dear Son to die for sinners, that all might come to him and be saved. He invited every Chinaman to come and give himself to Jesus—to repent of his sin, and to live a new life of holiness to God. Poor Ting-Shen left the chapel amazed and confounded. The keeper of the chapel, called Asun, observed his distress, and spoke words of comfort to him; but Ting-Shen replied: "I seem as if I were awakening up from a dream; like from drunkenness, at last coming to reason again."

The rice merchant became a regular hearer in the chapel, and listened attentively to the preached word of God; and in the evenings he would go over to Asun, the keeper of the chapel, and sit conversing with him on the way of salvation. All the Chinese believe Englishmen to be barbarians, and far below themselves in learning and philosophy. Ting-Shen, however, thought that, although the English were not learned, they at least knew the true God better than the Chinese. One day that Asun invited him to go to the mission-house he gladly accompanied him to the college; but what was his astonishment to see the library filled with large books concerning religion and science, such as the Chinese knew nothing about! He saw hundreds of volumes filled with the writings of men who learned the doctrine of the true God; he was filled with joy, and astonishment. "Behold!" said he to himself, "these are no barbarians; their book-shelves are full of classical books, and I perceive that the meaning of the sacred book (the Bible) is this: most important thing—the salvation of man's soul."

Ting-Shen was now resolved to offer himself to the missionaries as a convert. He therefore wrote a letter to them, telling them that he was formerly wickedness itself; that he believed now in Jesus Christ as his Savior; that he now prayed morning and evening that God would take away all his past sin and wickedness, and, being penitent, he would not dare to commit his former transgressions. He was kindly received by the missionaries, who rejoiced over the repenting sinner. For four months he attended the Bible class for instruction, and being examined twice as to his faith and knowledge, and his reasons for becoming a Christian, he was baptized along with another Chinese, named Kwan-Sang.

At first he wished to give up his business as rice-merchant, because, he said, "I cannot continue to buy and sell rice without lying and trying to cheat." When he went to buy rice he thought he must always say it was very bad, and when he was selling it thought he must tell the people that it was very good. But the missionaries told him that he did not need to do so; for when he was buying good rice he might say: "That may be very good rice, but I will give you no more for it than what I told you, and if you do not give it to me at that price I will go to some other person and buy from them;" and then, when he was selling rice, by could tell the people the price that he could take, without telling them any lies. Besides all this, when the people knew he would not tell lies to them, they would rather come to him than to any other who would try to cheat them if he could. Ting-Shen said he would try their plan; and I believe he has found it more profitable in the end to be honest, and have a good character, than to cheat and have a bad character.

Ting-Shen was baptized on the twenty-second of August, 1874, and on the second Sunday thereafter he partook of the Holy communion with the other Chinese converts.—Correspondent.

A Shot at a Tiger.

Hunters in India judge of the proximity of tigers by the actions of the monkeys which inhabit the same jungle, and when they find these creatures on the ground they are generally off their guard, supposing no tiger to be near. An Englishman tells how he was surprised once from trusting too much to this sign, but fortunately killed his enemy very dead, indeed.

One day in the Betul country, in 1855, after hunting long in the heat of a May day for a couple of tigers, who remarks were plentiful all about, we came up to a small pool of water at the head of a ravine, and saw the last chance of dividing them vanish, as I thought, when a troop of monkeys were found quietly sitting in the rocks and drinking in the water.

I was carelessly descending to look for prints, with my rifle reversed over my shoulder, and another step or two would have brought me to the bottom of the ravine, when the monkeys scented, with a shriek, up the bank, and the head and shoulders of a tiger appeared from behind a bowlder, and stared at me across the short interval.

I was meditating whether to fire or retreat, when almost from below my feet the other tiger bounded out with a terrific roar, and they both made off down the ravine. I was too much astonished to obtain a speedy shot, and I was by that time, too well acquainted with tiger-shooting to risk an uncertain one, so they escaped for the time.

I quickly regained my elephant, which was standing above, and followed them up. It was exceedingly hot, and we had not gone more than a couple of hundred yards when I saw one of the tigers crouched under a bush on the bank of the ravine. I got a steady shot from the howdah, and fired a three-ounce shell at his broad forehead at about thirty yards.

No result. It was most curious, and I paused to look; but never a motion of the tiger acknowledged the shot. I then went around a quarter of a circle, but still the tiger remained motionless, looking intently in the same direction.

I clutched up rifle in full cock, growing more and more amazed, but the tiger never moved. Could he be dead? I went round to his rear, and approached close up from that direction. He never stirred. Then I made the elephant kick him, and he fell over. He was stone dead—converted without the movement of a hair into a statue of himself by the bursting of a large shell in his brain. It had struck him full in the center of the forehead.—Youth's Companion.

A PLEA FOR NOISE. "Oh, Johnny!" cried a nervous mother, "do have some pity on my poor head! Can't you play without shouting so?"

Poor Johnny drew up the tape reins with which he was driving two chairs tandem, and called out in a loud, hoarse whisper: "Get up Whoa?" But at length, finding little pleasure in this suppressed amusement, he threw down his reins, and, laying his hand on his breast, said, with a long breath: "Oh, mother, it's full of noise in here, and it hurts me so to keep it in! Don't all little boys make a noise when they play?"

"Yes, Johnny, I believe they all do," replied the lady.

"Oh, then, mother dear," cried Johnny in winning tone, "please to let me be a little boy!"

We will join poor Johnny heartily in this petition. Please, mothers, let your sons be little boys while they may. Time is bringing on apace life's toils and cares. Let them have a free and happy childhood, that when your heads are low in the grave they may point back to those days and say: "We were happy children, for there was always sunshine where our mother was."

Their Portion In Due Season.

The faithful and wise steward, for one thing, must be a full man himself, "to give them their portion of meat in due season." In order that he may feed the flock of God he must know what gospel meat is, and where it is to be had. He is a purveyor of food for the soul, and he must abound in resources, and in tact and discrimination in their distribution. He can do nothing well in this line unless he has fed his own heart, and has a taste that has tried and appreciated the savor of every part of the provided store.

And yet it will not do for him to minister simply to his own frames and moods, thereby in a very obvious manner preaching himself. There is a constant tendency to give to others only that for which we are ourselves hungering. The peculiarities of our own temperament, the conflicts, the depressions or the exaltations of our own inward exercises, become the staple of our teaching. This, in a certain measure, is almost inevitable, and, if properly tempered, is a source of profit and strength to the hearer. But it may be carried too far, and result in a very partial and inadequate presentation of the truth. Preachers sometimes fall into a drift of topics which have kindled their own enthusiasm, and absorbed their thought to the exclusion of every other aspect of the divine teaching. They run into hobbies, and become one-sided, and fail in that wholesome variety which is needful to the spiritual growth and health.

Self thus often stands in the way of giving the people their portion. The preacher's thought must not be altogether upon his own tastes and needs, but he must study the condition and wants of those whom it is his business to feed. He must get out of himself, and often as far away as possible from what is most tempting and appetizing to himself, in order that his flock may be furnished with their portion. There is an evil and criminal way of preaching self in the place of Christ—the self of vanity, pride, covetousness, and ambition—but this measurement and selection of gospel food exclusively by the standard of their own present necessities and desires is the weakness of good and spiritually-minded men.

What do the people require at this time? This should be the determining principle. There are various classes, as the young and the old, careless persons, penitent seekers, and young and growing Christians. To give them their portion, in due season, something to meet the wants of all and to save all, should be the aim. The sermon that is most convenient for the preacher, and that is most in accord with his own state of mind, may not be that which the congregation is in a condition to hear with the greatest profit. To reach the best results there must be preparation for the immediate occasion, there must be flexibility in the method and application, and wanderings and digressions to meet the wants of exceptional cases. There are those who need strong meat, and who can neither thrive nor be satisfied without it; while there are others who must be fed with milk adapted to babes in Christ.

Congregations whose spiritual feeding has been through the same pastor for a number of years will reflect with tolerable justice the character of their religious food. Whether they have been fed on gruel, thin soups, confectionery, or nourishing and wholesome diet, will appear with equal clearness. There is something due to the people—the Lord's household and the appointed ruler is guilty of unfaithfulness and of robbery if he withholds their portion. The preaching, to meet the divine requirement, must be full, discriminating, timely. The approved steward is both faithful and wise—full and provident in resources, and wise in their distribution. He does not shun to declare the whole counsel of God, while he is careful that each warning and reproof shall be suited to the occasion, and to the character of those to whom it is directed.

A hinderance is often noted in the people themselves. Paul never did finish his discourse about Melchisedek probably, although he returns to the subject again. "Of whom," he says, "we have many things to say, and hard to be understood, seeing ye are dull of hearing." The disciples often tried the Master's patience by their unbelief and dullness, and it is ever more or less true of the unconverted that "this people's heart is waxed gross and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed." There is this difficulty in giving the household their portion in due season. But it is sometimes increased by the very effort to overcome it. The sauce and the condiments are often more than the gospel meat; and by ministering to a fickle and unspiritual taste a morbid religious appetite becomes the established condition. The Galatians had become bewitched by false and unwise teachers, and many a congregation now is affected much in the same way by the manner in which they are taught. They are afflicted with an almost incurable disorder that leads to the rejection of sound doctrine. They have been ruined by a false style of preaching. In the attempt to make the gospel attractive and palatable the truth has been emasculated, and so diluted and perverted that it has lost its power to save.

Much directness of address must be used in order that each may receive his portion. If the preacher were showering gold pieces upon his audience every one would contend for his share, and pocket the whole if he could. But where only the word of God is dispensed the reverse of this is seen. Every one is anxious that his neighbor should gather the most of it, and he forgets himself in his concern for the spiritual welfare of others. The sermon should be almost as direct and personal as the address on a postal card, and the internal marks should be such that it cannot easily fail to reach its intended destination. As Joseph sent messes to each of his brethren, so the preacher will often do with reference to those whom, as the flock of God, he is sent to feed. The marvelous facility which hearers have in throwing off the message and applying it to others can be overcome only by a close personal appeal to each man's conscience.

The Savior's most solemn and emphatic warning is to the steward—to the servant who dispenses, rather than to the household who are to receive, the gospel provisions. We once heard a venerable Bishop say to a conference of preachers: "You preach to others, but who shall preach to you?" It was to Peter and his fellows that Christ addressed his words of admonition: "Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning." It was for them, as wise and faithful stewards over the Lord's household, "to give them their portion of meat in due season." The benediction upon the faithful and wise preacher is: "Blessed is that servant whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find so doing."

A Religious Incident Worth Relating.

MR. EDITOR: Last night I attended Mr. Hammond's "overflow" meeting—one of them. Although there were several ministers present, the meeting was conducted by Gen. Crittenden, a well-known lawyer of this city, who was converted at the revival here two weeks ago. A good deal of the time last night was devoted to the relation of conversion and experience of new converts. One of the persons brought forward for this purpose by Gen. Crittenden was a gentlemanly-looking man of thirty-five, evidently a man of culture, and a good speaker—spoke with much feeling, and affected the large congregation profoundly.

It seems there is in the city a Philosophical Club, otherwise an infidel club. He had long been a member. Went to the revival meeting to study human nature and influence, and to strengthen his philosophy. Understood "religion" very well, but here was an opportunity to sound it deeper. One evening, at the "inquiry" part, a little girl of thirteen or fourteen spoke to him about his soul, etc. She seemed to know him; said his philosophy would not stand the test. Spoke to him again the next night, and warned him against his "philosophy;" spoke of Jesus as the only true philosophy; said she was a minister's daughter, but did not learn her name. He was struck with her unaffected sweetness, simplicity and innocence, but hoped she would not trouble him more. Stayed away some on her account, but every time he went that girl found him out, and would persuade him against his philosophy. Her appeals were accompanied by the Spirit of God. He was convicted, discarded his "philosophy," embraced Christ, and now stands here, before hundreds who know him, a saved man; never knew what true happiness and true manhood were before, etc.

While this man was speaking, perhaps twenty minutes, I noticed that the Rev. Dr. Sunderland, a Lutheran minister of the city, who sat in the pulpit behind him, seemed most unusually affected. I was near enough to notice him carefully. As the man stopped and was about to sit down, Dr. Sunderland stepped forward, and, detaining him, said: "Now let me tell the rest of this story;" and, both standing, related as follows:

He had never seen this gentleman before, but knew of the existence of the Philosophical Club. A week or ten days ago his little daughter Hattie, or whatever her name was, spoke to him about a gentleman at the meeting, whom she called her philosopher; said he was a member of the Philosophical Club; she felt an interest in his behalf; had spoken to him, and she seemed affected; wanted her father to see and talk with him; described his person; said she knew who he was; and on a number of different occasions she spoke of the matter at home, always calling him her philosopher, or her penitent philosopher, and was anxious for him (Dr. Sunderland) to find him out. He wanted to do so, but the little girl could not see him when there was opportunity. And this very morning, at the breakfast table, she spoke of her penitent philosopher; knew he was or would be converted, etc.

The rest of the incident is not easily written—at least I do not know how to write it. There the two men stood—had never seen each other before—strangely introduced—the remarkable ageney of the little girl—the daughter of the one, and the angel-leader of the other. The effect already produced on the congregation by the converted man, and now this remarkable coincidence, made the entire scene truly affecting.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 11, 1876.

Death of Hon. Trusten Polk.

Rev. J. W. Cunningham, writing from St. Louis, April 17, says:

"The death of the Hon. Trusten Polk occurred at his residence, in this city, on Saturday night, the fifteenth instant. He awoke with violent coughing, and died in two hours. He had been engaged in writing till eleven o'clock, and had slept half an hour. Gov. Polk was a graduate of Yale College; came here in young manhood from Delaware; early became a member of the Methodist Church, and has ever been a most devoted Methodist and Christian. He was a successful lawyer, was Governor of Missouri, and a member of the United States Senate, from which he retired to espouse the cause of the South in 1861; was in the service of the Confederate States till the close of the war, and since then has been engaged in the practice of his profession here.

"He has been a lay delegate to every session of the St. Louis Conference, and a member of the two General Conferences since lay delegation was adopted. His house has been a home for our Bishops in their visits to St. Louis. It is the common sentiment here that his death is the heaviest bereavement that has ever befallen our church in St. Louis. His funeral service will occur on Wednesday afternoon, at the Centenary church, with which he has been so many years connected, and I venture to say there will be one of the largest assemblages present ever seen at a funeral in St. Louis. He leaves a wife, three married and one single daughters, who will have the cordial sympathy of the multitude who mourn his death."

The Journal of Agriculture, in an excellent sketch of Mr. Polk, says:

"He commenced life with rare advantage of intellectual and moral culture and social connection. He was descended from one of the oldest and most distinguished families of Delaware, his native State, and had received a university education. He emigrated West in 1835, and located in this city and State when society was in a formative state and position, and success was open to competing of honorable ambition and personal merit. To those advantages were added the force of character and admirable habits of industry, method, promptness and exactness in attention to business, and courteous as well as dignified bearing in the intercourse of public and private life. Gov. Polk was also well and widely known in this city and throughout the country, in his relation to the Methodist Episcopal Church South, as eminently a Christian man. From his childhood, in all periods and all stations of life, he avowed his Christian profession, and adorned it by a godly life. He was one of the most prominent members of the church to which he belonged, and has uniformly been honored with distinguished positions, and has served zealously and efficiently in its local and general councils. At the time of his death he was a member of a commission appointed to treat with a similar commission to be appointed by the Methodist Episcopal Church, with a view to adjust the controversies between these two great divisions of Methodism, and restore friendly intercourse between them. Gov. Polk leaves a widow, the daughter of Mr. Curtis Skinner, to whom he was married in 1837. A son died in infancy; of other children, three daughters are married and one remains single. The funeral obsequies took place on the nineteenth, and were an occasion of much interest. The members of the bar and prominent citizens were in attendance in vast numbers."

Brazil Mission.

Our missionary to Brazil, Rev. J. J. Ransom, has reached that country, and writes an interesting letter to Dr. Kelley, dated near Santa Barbara, February 16, 1876. We give the letter in part:

The Methodist Episcopal Church has no missionaries in Brazil, nor has there ever been a Methodist missionary here, except Kidder, who wrote one or two books about the country. The Northern Presbyterian Church has nine missionaries and six native preachers in the empire, three of whom are in Rio. They have more than six hundred members in the empire, nearly one-fifth of whom are in Rio. The English embassy has a chaplain who acts as missionary in Rio—of course he is paid by the English government. Passing lightly over the beautiful city, and its far more beautiful bay, I merely mention these missionary items.

I visited Campinas and the Mission College of our Southern Presbyterian brethren, Morton & Lane, located at that place. The college is perhaps the most elegant building in Campinas, a town of some twenty thousand inhabitants. It is of brick, while most of the Brazilian houses are of dirt. The college and grounds have so far cost the church about $30,000, and if it is completed this amount will probably be swelled to some $75,000 or $90,000. There are connected with the school three regularly ordained ministers, Messrs. Morton, Lane and Boyle, and also one Mr. Dabney, a graduate of Randolph Macon, of the class of 1873; I who will return to the States to complete his theological course and be ordained. These men are doing a great work, and much praise is due the unmarried ladies connected with the school, as well as the families of the missionaries. There are in the college about one hundred pupils at present.

From Bro. Newman I received a most cordial Christian greeting, as well as from his family. I find that Bro. Newman has failed to obtain the American school by which I expected to sustain myself—an American emigrant has forestalled me. However, I regret this very little, as I am fully convinced that a residence among Americans is by no means desirable for one learning Portuguese. The two branches of the Presbyterian Church have occupied all the towns in this province at which I would care to locate for founding the mission, with one exception. Piracicaba, of which Bro. Newman wrote, is the only important place in the province where there is no missionary located. Piracicaba will never be a center of influence for the empire, but its geographical location insures its rank among the towns of the province. It has more than eleven thousand inhabitants within the corporate limits, with extensive suburbs. I propose (D. v.) to go there next week. A prominent lawyer of the place has written Bro. Newman urging him to establish a school there. My plan is to go to Piracicaba, secure board in some educated Brazilian family, and, as soon as I am able, open a school for Brazilians. I make no doubt that I shall be able to support myself from the start, if not by teaching, by manual labor, while studying Portuguese.

I should prefer to begin in a larger place than Piracicaba but for the reasons detailed. It might be well if I could visit some of the more important towns of the South. Port Alegre is farther south a large town—the largest in the southern part of the empire—and has no missionary, and is on virgin soil in a province destitute of missionaries. Sooner or later we must have a mission in Rio. But here is an open door and a call—things a Methodist loves by tradition; and so, on the whole, I suppose I had best begin at Piracicaba. When our school is once started Bro. Newman will move to Piracicaba, and we shall have Miss Annie Newman in the school. She speaks Portuguese well, and can teach all that girls are usually taught in this country. But we shall need some ladies of attainments like Miss Henderson, who was at Campinas until she returned to the States with a shattered constitution. Look out for these persons now, as well as for male assistants, that they may be ready when needed, for we will certainly need them.

Miss Annie Newman is translating Bishop McTyeire's catechism, a task for which I suppose she is fully competent. How about publication? The work will be accomplished in two or three months.

Dr. Taylor on Reading the Scriptures.

NINTH LECTURE AT YALE DIVINITY SCHOOL.

Preaching is as much an act of worship as are prayer and praise. The fact that God prepares preachers and hearers to meet each other should inspire in both a devouter sense of reverence toward God in delivering and listening to a discourse. Now the sermon and service act and react on each other. The earnest prayer and inspiring hymn animate a minister for his sermon; and an impressive sermon produces a hush of reverence in the closing prayer, and an enthusiasm of heart and soul in the closing hymn.

The first indispensable qualification for the leading of public worship is a filial heart. The true worshiper is he that worships the Father. It is significant that the simple, comprehensive prayer which Jesus taught his disciples begins in the words: "Our Father!" Christ thus sets definitely before us what God is to us before we present our petitions, and it is important that we realize the full meaning of these words. I think much of the lifelessness and artificialness of our public devotions result from the fact that we have not received "the spirit of adoption." The spirit of adoption and of supplication are one. All unnatural and unreal formalism will be impossible when we realize the meaning of "the glorious liberty of the sons of God." In our praise, too, our songs cannot be vapid and uninteresting when we recognize God as our Father. Above all things else we need a fresh baptism with "the spirit of adoption".

As to the reading of God's word, the day has gone by when the public reading of the Bible can be regarded as a work of supererogation. The example of Jesus is the highest possible warrant for bringing it into the foremost place in the sanctuary. This exercise should produce in us such reverence that as we read the people will be hushed into attentiveness and listen, not as unto us, but as unto God.

Be careful always to select such a passage as is adapted to public reading. Have in mind, too, the circumstances of your people, and the subject of your sermon. A rich treasury of comforting and sustaining sayings are the Psalms and four gospels, and the experiences of the apostles. What, too, in your own devotional reading has been helpful to you, you will find helpful to others. Neither overlook the practical nor doctrinal portions of the Bible. Religion is a creed and a life, as well as an emotion. At one time we may set forth the doctrine of the incarnation by reading the first chapters of John; at another that of the atonement by reading the third chapter of Romans. Now we may read the Law, and now the Sermon on the Mount. Do not leave your selection of passages to the mood of the moment, or the hap-hazard of the morning. Give doctrine, reproof, correction and instruction due attention, and therefore lay all parts of the Bible under tribute. Explore its unfrequented portions, where are found some of its richest lessons.

Circumstances must guide us as to the length of selections; only do not let them be too brief. Many pastors deal homœopathically with the Scriptures. This is wrong. While reading, moreover, give your whole attention to it: Forget, for the time, both sermon and prayer, or your reading will be lifeless and perfunctory. So read as to stir up your people to search the Scriptures. Endeavor to indicate the meaning by your mode of reading. Good reading is good interpretation. A minister's reading, indeed, quickly reveals whether he be a reverent student of the Bible and a careful exegete. A passage cannot be read well till it has been studied well. Extempore preaching may do for some; extempore reading for nobody. Careful preparation may make this exercise as effective for conversion and edification as any sermon.

Ought the reader to indulge in running comments? Much depends on the qualifications of the minister and the character of the congregation. The success of many here is not to be envied; that of others is due to a peculiar aptitude, without which it had best not be attempted. The inability of some congregations, however, to give their attention long to one subject will justify pithy comments; only do not mix them up in discriminately with the reading. Let the Scripture stand out distinctly in its own unapproachable sublimity. Comments of real worth will result only from such careful preparation as you give your sermon.

Finally, encourage your people to have the Bible in their hands, that they may follow you. In America the Bible is a stranger in the sanctuary. This is a serious evil which should be remedied. The Bible must be in the pew if it is to keep its place in the pulpit.

TIME OF SEASHORE CAMP MEETING.—By a notice on the eighth page it will be seen that the time, as finally determined upon, for the opening of the Seashore camp meeting is Thursday, July 13, and not August 2, as published last week. Remember the time is July 13; and let our friends from far and near make arrangements accordingly. The trustees, after due conference and careful consideration, have reached the conclusion that the nineteenth of July will most nearly meet the convenience of the people and preachers generally.

A convention of the Protestant foreign missionaries in China is to be held at Shanghai, May 10.

How They Live.

The New York Methodist has a friend who wishes to know how the evangelists get along. Here is what the Methodist says:

A Western friend writes that he has become interested in the circumstances of Messrs. Moody and Sankey: He repeatedly reads and is incessantly told that these men "work for nothing and find themselves." He encounters a sharp-pointed inference that everybody should go and do likewise, especially ministers. He is not very reverent, for he is a little stirred, and wants to know "if Mr. Moody takes in washing and Mr. Sankey runs a sewing machine." Who pays Mr. Moody's board, and whether he boards in the ordinary way, or is miraculously fed. "Do his clothes wear out, as mine do?" says that inquisitive friend; "and if they do wear out, how does he get new clothes?" After all this and much more, our friend hints that, being a poor minister, he wants to understand this thing, so that he may do right hereafter. Hitherto he has eaten food and worn out clothing, but will stop if that is wrong." He has "let people pay him a small salary; never found it necessary to limit their payments; and, having no goods, stocks, farms, etc." Emma thinks, feels constrained to quit preaching or be paid for preaching. "Is this right?" "How did Mr. Moody become able," he goes on, "to do this thing? I once paid him $5 for helping me at a pinch (and his help was cheap enough), but in those days he was a good deal such a mercenary element as I am. Did the Lord set him up for life in England?" He adds: "There is no use in keeping back the facts. Tell us the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth on this subject." No doubt a good deal of nonsense has been uttered about a very plain matter. Moody and Sankey receive, we believe, a regular weekly allowance sufficient for their modest support and that of their families. We do not know how much they receive; and we do not believe our friend really wants to know. They did not amass a fortune in England, and we are assured on good authority that they refuse to take more than a modest support now. We believe, however, that good and not evil would follow the publishing at the end of the Lord's-throne greetings a detailed statement of expenses, including the amount paid to the evangelists.

In trying to avoid the appearance of making money in saving souls these excellent brethren have gone to the other extreme, and laid burdens on poor men faithfully preaching the gospel at cost, and just much below cost as they possibly can. The committee are probably largely responsible for the popular delusion our correspondent is combating, that something can come of nothing, that it is a sin to pay money for pastoral services, and that if the evangelists cost nothing people ought not to pay for less useful preaching. It is very plain that men who devote their time and strength to preaching must either live upon the fruits of their previous industry or be supported by the public, and we are not aware that preaching has ever been considered a special privilege of the rich.

Bishop Lane, of the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church, says in the Western Methodist of April 22, called to see us on Monday last. A welcome visit of a good man it was. The Bishop had just held the Memphis District Conference. He reported the work in his charge, and throughout the church, in a promising condition. We inquired of the Bishop as to the union of the several branches of colored Methodists, and in reply he expressed a willingness to see the union on a proper basis, but he did not believe in working directly for it; preferred attending to his own appointed, regular duties as the best way of promoting union, or whatever other result may be in the order of Providence. The spirit of Christ in the branches is better than union without that spirit, and at the same time will promote union, if that be God's will.

Sunday School Anniversary.

The thirtieth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will be held in Carondelet Street church on Sunday, the fourteenth day of May, 1876, with songs, speeches and exercises by the children, commencing at four o'clock P. M.

On Sunday, the seventh day of May, at the same hour and place the schools will all meet for practice together of their songs; and on Saturday, the thirteenth of May, at the same place and hour, they will meet for rehearsal of their songs, pieces and exercises.

W. H. FISTER, President.

NEW ORLEANS, April 21, 1876.

Rev. Baxter Clegg, writing from Waterproof, April 19, says: "The country is doomed to an overflow. How long it may last or how deep is not now to be known. From a break in the levee on Sunday, at high times, the river fell one and one-half inches here yesterday. Cisterns, tanks and overflows are trying the faith, hope and charity of the Waterproof people."

The Bishops' meeting is to be held in Nashville on Wednesday, May 3; the Book Committee, May 4; and the Board of Missions, May 5, 6. All who expect to attend those meetings will inform the Rev. W. M. Green, secretary of the Preachers' Meeting, Nashville, that homes may be provided for them.

Books and Periodicals.

THE MARINER'S PROGRESS, OR CAPT. CHRISTIAN'S VOYAGE IN THE GOOD SHIP "GREAD TIDINGS" TO THE PROMISED LAND. By Duncan Macgregor. New York: Robert Carter & Bros. 1876.

An allegorical dream, somewhat after the manner of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress. The author has evidently drawn largely from the immortal work of the Bedford dreamer, and adapted the materials to the conditions of a voyage. The conception is pretty well carried out, and the similitude rather happily and ingeniously sustained throughout. So far as we have examined, doctrine and experience are in accord with Scripture, and the book is calculated to interest and instruct the juvenile reader. It is a 12mo of 370 pages, handsomely bound. For sale by R. J. Harp, Southern Methodist Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

A HISTORY OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, FROM THE DISCOVERY OF THE CONTINENT. By George Bancroft. In six volumes. Author's Last Thoroughly Revised Edition. Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1876.

Not long since we gave a somewhat extended notice of this centenary edition of Bancroft's great historical work. Volume 2 embraces the colonial history from 1660 to 1748, and contains 508 12mo pages. The unequaled facilities possessed by Mr. Bancroft in the preparation of these volumes, and the many years of labor and research which he has bestowed upon them, together with the delightful and attractive style in which they are written, have caused this great work to be universally regarded both in Europe and America, as the best history of this country yet produced, and as a standard authority. The remaining four volumes will be issued at intervals of one month. Price, $2.25 a volume. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

LITTLE FRIENDS AT GLENWOOD. By Mrs. H. Mathews. New York: Robert Carter & Bros., 1876.

The author has attained an envied reputation as a writer of stories for the young. This work appears to be equal to her best. It is lively and picturesque, and wholesome in its moral lessons. A good book for the children. For sale by R. J. Harp, Depository, 110 and 112 Camp street, New Orleans.

A FORTHCOMING Book by Dr. Haygood.—We learn with very sincere satisfaction that Dr. A. G. Haygood, the recent Sunday school secretary of our church, and now the popular president of Emory College, has prepared a volume—now in press, and to be issued in a few weeks—that treats of the spiritual culture of children, and the relation of parents, teachers and Sunday school teachers to this work. The introduction is written by the venerable Dr. Lovick Pierce. The book will be 12mo, about 300 pages, gotten up in the best style, and bearing the title: Our Children: 1. The Family. 2. The Sunday School. We await with interest the appearance of this important contribution to the literature of the church.—Southern Christian Advocate, April 19.

LITTELL'S LIVING AGE. The numbers of the Living Age for the weeks ending April 15 and 22 contain: The Jewess, Woman, by Constance de Rothschild; What she came Through, parts 1 and 2, by Sarah Tytler; The Myth of Demeter and Persephone, part 2, by Walter H. Pater; The Life and Labors of Francis Deak, 1803-1876, by Karl Blind; The Fair of St. Jacqueme, by the author of "Patty;" A Glimpse of the Koren, by C. A. G. Oldridge; Servia, from the British Quarterly Review; Some Aspects of Friendship, Blackwood; Principal Shairon Spiritual Evolution, Spectator; The Hurricanes, Spectator; The Bobby, a Sketch in Paris, Blackwood; Humor, Cornhill; Heslop Island, Saturday Review; Art Needlework, Pall Mall Gazette; and other valuable articles, together with choice poetry and miscellany.

The Record of the Year is the title of a large monthly magazine published by G. W. Carleton & Co., New York. Frank Moore, Editor. The May number has: The Moody and Sankey Revivalists; The Babcock Trial; Bagge Tinkham's Visit to Lord Byron; Life and Labors of Homer Bushnell; Death of John Forster, the Historian; Polygamy in Utah—How and What It Is; Trumbull's Sunday Pilgrim's Progress, and other articles in great number and variety. The price of this magazine is $3 per annum.

The St. Nicholas for May is even more varied and sprightly than usual. The articles and illustrations all make the young folks crazy with delight. In the table of contents are: The Cat and the Countess, Animated Shot-Guns, Windsor Castle, The Boy Emigrants, A Peep at Old Lombardy.

Scribner's Monthly for May has: Portraiture of William Penn, The Late Pocahontas, Bowdoin College, The DeFoe Family in America, Staring With the Eyes, John Gutenberg, Revolutionary Letters, and other articles. The number is handsomely illustrated.

—The Aldine, part 8, has been received. The illustrations are: Spring Violets; The Day is Done; The Bishop, Grand Menon Island; The Bon Homme Richard and Serapis; Scenery in the Thuringian Saale; The Rettenbach Alp, near Ischil, Austria.

—The Galaxy for May has: Players and Play-Goers Twenty-Five Years Ago, A Plea for a Patriot, War Memories, Aztec Mythology, The Pursuit of the Dollar, Phenomena of Sleep, Seeking a Lost Art, and other articles.

—"Flags of All Nations Grand March" is the title of a piece of music published by W. H. Boner & Co., Philadelphia.

—We have received the catalogue of Wesleyan University, 1875-6.

MARRIED.

HUTCHINSON—BRIDGES.—At the residence of the bride's father, in St. Helena parish, La., April 12, by Rev. G. B. Taylor, Miss Sallie W. Hutchinson to Mr. J. E. W. Bridges.

SUMMER—BENNETT.—At the residence of the bride's brother, Dr. William Bennett, in Rankin county, Miss., April 20, 1876, by Rev. Levin Miller, Prof. A. L. Summer, principal of Piperville Male and Female High School, Harperville, Miss., to Miss Flora A. Bennett.

PAY FIFTEEN CENTS AND SAVE $1,200.

The subscription price of the Advocate is Two Dollars per annum, but $1.75 will be taken. A few subscribers deduct fifteen cents; one to pay for postage, and some twenty-five cents for expense of remitting. We wish to assure them that they are taking no money to pay their expenses. We cannot afford to take the risk of remittances, as we do, when sent in money orders or registered letters, and pay the expense of remitting.

To each subscriber this should not be more than fifteen cents, which is less, if we take fifteen cents from each subscription, it amounts to over Two Thousand Dollars per year, which expenses for postage. In view of this and the trifling expense to subscribers, we hope they will send the full subscription price. When our agents remit what they have collected, without receiving the commission, we cannot expect them to pay the expense.

THE QUICKEST TIME ON RECORD.—The Pan-Handle and Pennsylvania railroad route to New York, Philadelphia and the Centennial grounds has a national reputation, as it has many accommodations and advantages not possessed by other roads. The route is laid with steel rails and the track well ballasted from Jersey City, Chicago, St. Louis or Cincinnati, the tracks are stone ballasted and steel railed, and the night and day coaches for convenience and comfort cannot be surpassed. Tourists throughout, who have crossed the Alleghany mountains by the Pan-Handle route, publish to the world that there is nothing equaled by the Alps in Europe, and that the comfort is not surpassed in any respect by the English roads in regard to speed, for it is a speed track route. For full particulars of this central line apply to Gen. W. M. Wadleton, Cincinnati, Ohio, most direct to the East and West.

CABINS AND LUMBER.—Those who wish to observe economy in building or improving their property will consult their own interest by seeking the mechanical advice of W. W. Carre, Esq., who has brought the price of material and work, especially in cheap cabins, to the very lowest rate. These cabins are a great convenience to planters who wish to get hands sufficiently supplied with carpenters, as the cabin can be put up ready constructed, except the simple work of putting together, as marked, by following the directions. This can be easily done on any plantation. We invite attention to his advertisement to another column.

NEW ORLEANS CITY RAILROAD COMPANY.—As will be seen by the advertisement of the above named company, the regular trains are now running over the New Orleans, Metairie Cemetery and Lake road, leaving the Metairie Ridge and lake every half hour from 5 A. M., the last train leaving the cemetery at 7 P. M. The New Orleans cities will receive a full dummy, to which the cars will be taken from the City Station, running through to the lake without change making trips every half hour. Fare to the lake ten cents. This will open a most convenient, expeditious and pleasant line of connection with Lake Pontchartrain.

FIFTY YEARS AGO.—We invite attention to the advertisement of Lyons Fertilizer, familiar to every planter. Steam saw mill and miller in our country. The fertility it will keep in evidence fifty years, as the enterprises of the city and country have been much indebted for the efficiency with which it has furnished and repaired machinery in every department of work; besides which there has always been expressed sympathy and liberality toward southern enterprise.

SHAKSPEARE IRON WORKS.—The above named iron works of Messrs. Shakspeare, Smith & Co., located on Girod street, between Baronne and Dryades, is well known to all who have work to do with machinery in this city. They have the requisition of doing work well and with dispatch, and, as will be seen by their advertisement elsewhere, they are prepared to do any kind of work that is likely to be wanted in this country, or that can be done anywhere else.

HARDWARE AND CUTLERY.—Charles D. Lallande, Esq., 38 Tchoupitoulas street, is one of the largest importers and dealers in foreign and domestic hardware in the city. The house has been long established, is well stocked, and the proprietor has abundant means to avail himself of the advantages of the trade. We invite a new century of those interested in the purchase of hardware to his stand in our columns.

WE CALL the attention of our friends to Rogers' Nitrate of Magnesia. It corrects acidity, and prevents bilious and malarial fevers incident to this climate, and is a cooling aperient during the heated period. See advertisement.

BRASELMAN & ADAMS.—Send in your orders from the country for dry goods. The above firm will fill them with dispatch, and at reasonable prices. Read their advertisement.

MESSRS. VANDUZEN & TIFT, proprietors of the Southwestern Railroad Depot, have the pleasure to announce to the public that they have added to their establishment a first class restaurant, where all the substantials of the season can be had at all hours during the day. Their bill of fare will be supplied with the choicest delicacies of the market, and will be served in the most tasteful manner. Their bar will be supplied with the choicest brands of wines, liquors and cigars. Their restaurant is under the management of Mr. Thomas Hall, late of the Commercial Hotel, Vicksburg, Miss., and Mr. Hall's reputation as a caterer to the public is a guarantee that the meals served at the restaurant will be of the best. Messrs. Vanduzen & Tift propose to show that Depot No. 6 of the Jackson Railroad is second to none.

CROOKED MEATS.—Our attention has been directed to the superior excellency of the corned beef, sugar cured ham, beef tongue and fresh beef, put up by the Wilson Packing Company, of Chicago. This company has opened Messrs. Smith Bros. & Co., Nos. 83, 85 and 87 Poydras street, as their agents in this city, and we predict for them a very large trade. The products of this company certainly are to be commended for their purity and excellence. Let those who are in want of any of the articles named call on Messrs. Smith Bros. & Co. and take a look at the premises.

Visitors to the city would do well to visit Noyes & Offer's new warerooms for China, Glassware, See advertisement.

The Buffalo Lithia Waters.

REMARKABLE relief of GRAVEL, and still more remarkable relief of DYSPEPSIA of thirty years' standing. A person who for five years lived upon Crackers and Tea, eats Bacon, Cabbage and Turnips.

Case of Capt. James Covington, a well-known and highly respected citizen of Halifax county, Va.:

MT. LAUREL, HALIFAX CO., VA.,
February 9, 1876.

COL. T. F. HOOKE—Dear Sir: Some eighteen months ago I was attacked by a very painful affection of the bladder. Under the treatment of two physicians of high standing I grew steadily worse, until my sufferings were beyond description, and I was compelled to resort to morphia almost constantly for relief. I was unable to give any attention to my business, and had despaired of relief from any source, when in September last I was advised to try The Buffalo Lithia Water.

Though within less than a day's ride of the Springs, my condition was such that I was unable to get to them, and consequently sent for the Water and used it at home. At or about it for a few days, I was so far relieved that I could do without the morphia, and continued to improve for some six weeks, when I had an attack of gravel calculus, from which I was relieved by the discharge of a large gravel, since which I have discharged three smaller ones, with but slight pain. I am now able to ride on horseback or to walk at pleasure, and I am now attending regularly to my business affairs.

I had been for thirty years a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and for the last fifteen years had been throwing myself a-water from my stomach.

For five years I had not been able to eat Animal or Vegetable food of any description, and during that period lived upon Crackers and Milk, and other similar articles. And using the Waters for gravel I was relieved of Dyspepsia.

I myself, Rachel Covington, Families and Acquaintance that I write, without exception, testify to the water as being No. 1, and believe all that is said in its favor.

Respectfully yours,

JAMES COVINGTON.

Mr. Covington's case is under slight change in the following statement since the first publication. It is but one of many similar cases relieved by the Waters. They are for sale in the cities of our country, half gallon bottles at $5 per case in advance. The Springs remain under my address.

COOKED MEATS.

CORNED BEEF.

We have no comments to make in reference to our Corned Beef, except to call the attention of the trade to the fact that our Fourteen Pound Cans are warranted perfect, and are comparatively cheaper than the old-style package. The popular way of handling this article is for the Retail Dealer to open the can and cut the meat to quantities to suit his customers.

SUGAR CURED HAM.

To meet a demand from the trade which we have had for over a year, we are now packing SUGAR CURED, COOKED HAM, packed in the same style as our other goods. Successful as we may have been with our Cooked Corn Beef, we have no doubt of having more marked success with this article. The packages slightly, and the MEAT IS SIMPLY PERFECTION. We guarantee perfect satisfaction, and you cannot fail to handle this article profitably.

BEEF TONGUE.

We take special pride in offering this article to the trade; it is the "Creme de la Creme" of all our goods. Nothing of the kind has ever been offered to the trade that can compare with it in excellence. It surprises ourselves, and is entirely free from the Rosin of the TETON'S, which is really nothing but Corned Beef. Try a case, and recommend it in the highest terms to your trade. The goods warrant it.

FRESH BEEF.

This article is excellent for Pot Pies, Stews, Mince Pies and Smoked Beef, and is a necessary for Bakeries or the Tea Table.

Hints on Coffee.

Prof. Daniel C. Eaton, who occupies the chair of botany in Yale College, in the course of a lecture on coffee, brought out the following points:

Coffee, as it comes to us, is commonly called the seeds of the coffee tree, and for common usage this statement is sufficiently correct. But it has long been known to botanists that a grain of coffee is really something more than a seed. It is really a seed enwrapped in a horny portion of the fruit, and is therefore more strictly analogous to a peach pit, which is the stony inner portion of the fruit with the seed contained in it. The tree is not large, generally from six to ten feet high in cultivation, but, when allowed to grow freely, perhaps, three times that size. The leaves are of good size, handsome, polished and evergreen, not very unlike orange leaves. They grow in pairs on the slender, straight branches. The flowers are little clusters of fragrant, white stars, and it is said that in a coffee plantation, there is no time when some flowers cannot be seen. The flowers are succeeded by green berries, which ripen to a beautiful red, and look not unlike rather small cherries, except that they are closely clustered along the branches.

In 1875 the whole production of coffee in the world was estimated at 715,000,000 pounds, of which Brazil furnished 400,000,000, Java 150,000,000 Ceylon and San Domingo each 40,000,000 Cuba and Porto Rico 25,000,000, Venezuela and Sumatra as much, and all other countries, including Arabia, Costa Rica, Jamaica etc., only 14,000,000. From these figures it will be seen that only one man in three drinks Java coffee, and probably only one in one hundred gets any Mocha, and yet you will find it difficult to buy a pound of coffee in this city to-morrow which the dealer will call Rio. It is all called Mocha or Java, or possibly Maracaibo.

By far the greatest part of the coffee used in the United States is Brazilian or Rio coffee. Indeed Brazil produces more coffee than all the rest of the world put together. There are marked differences in the appearance of some of these coffees, as well as considerable difference in flavor. Taking three of the best known kinds, for example,—Rio, Mocha and Java—we notice that the grains of Java are larger than either of the others, and of a slight yellowish-brown color. Rio coffee has rather large grains, then Mocha, and the color is usually considerably darker and somewhat more inclined to greenish.

In flavor Java is more mellow than either of the others, and Mocha is richer and spicier than Rio, while Rio is the strongest of the three, and, indeed, is perhaps the strongest of all coffees. It is true of a coffee that the fewer broken and discolored grains in it the better the coffee, and no cup of coffee can be really excellent unless all imperfect grains are removed before the coffee is roasted.

The best coffee here obtainable is an equal mixture of Java and which is called Mocha. As the grains of one are much larger than that of the other, they should be roasted separately, but ground together.

The common cheap ground coffees contain usually a little coffee, and here the bulk is supplied mostly with either peas or rye. Chicory is too high-priced to be used to any great extent, and the people who think that if their coffee is not really pure, it contains only a little chicory, are probably drinking peas and rye, made dark and bitter with burned sugar. The higher sounding the title of the coffee the poorer the quality, as a general thing.

Camellias.—The camellia is one of the most admired exotics in our conservatories, and when we read that in its native countries, China and Japan, it forms a good-sized tree, and is often planted in long rows along the borders of highways, the imagination is at once at the conception of these elegant avenues at the season of bloom. To think of camellias as large as maples, and covered with red or white flowers of peerless beauty! But a late writer ruthlessly dispels the enchanting vision. "Lovely as the flowers of the camellia are singly," she says, "the tree itself in full bloom is by no means an attractive sight. A camellia tree with one thousand flowers on it might be supposed, with its compact growth and its shiny leaves of high green, to be an exquisitely beautiful object, but it is nothing of the sort. The flowers, as they begin to fade, get to be a dingy brown, and hang a long time on the tree, and a camellia tree in full bloom is by far the largest proportion of its flowers withered and ugly. As a flowering shrub the camellia is not comparable to the poinsetta, with its mass of intense scarlet bloom, looking like a richly-colored silken drapery hung on the branches of the tree, or to the white datura. A datura shrub in full bloom, with its thousands of pendant fluted bells reflected in a pool of water, is a thing not soon to be forgotten."

Cutting Corn Fodder.—A method of curing partly dried corn fodder is to cut it with a fodder cutter into chaff, and mix it with straw cut in the same manner, then pack it away in a mow, tramping it down closely. A little salt is scattered among the layers as they are packed in. When this put up fermentation takes place, and a gentle heat is produced, which improves the straw, making the whole equal and even in flavor, so that it is readily eaten by cattle or horses. Those who have the material might usefully prepare a quantity of fodder in this way as an experiment. American Agriculturist.

Paint the Floor.—Nearly all earth colors should be used in painting floors, and the rapid wearing off of a coating of oil paint on a floor is a sure indication that white lead has been mixed with the paint. This is generally the case, since it causes the paint to cover better and spread easier. Even the employment of a varnish that has been boiled with litharge should be avoided, and one boiled with borate of manganese preferred. It is also very important that the first coating should be perfectly dry before a second is laid on.

Silent Men.—Washington never made a speech. In the zenith of his fame, he once attempted it, failed, and gave it up confused and abashed. Throughout the Constitution of the United States the labor was almost wholly performed in Committee of the Whole, of which George Washington was the chairman, for he made only two speeches during the convention, which were of a very few words each. The convention, however, acknowledged the master spirit, and historians affirm that, had it not been for his personal popularity, and the thirty words of his first speech, pronouncing it the best that could be united upon, the constitution would have been rejected by the people. Thomas Jefferson never made a speech. He couldn't do it. Napoleon, whose executive ability is almost without a parallel, said that his greatest trouble was in finding men of deeds rather than words.

Scientific.

The third portion of M. Th. von Heuglin's "Reisen nach dem Nordlichen Eismeer," etc., consists of a compilation to the fauna, flora and geology. The greater part of this division of the work is occupied with a systematic account of the avifauna of Spitzbergen. The ornithological part includes a good deal of very acute and critical bibliography, which the labors of various previous writers on this special subject had discussed; an extended synonymy of the fifty species observed, with special reference to works bearing directly upon the subject in hand; and much descriptive and miscellaneous matter. In this department of science Heuglin has steadily improved since the publication, a few years ago, of his papers on African birds, which excited no little adverse criticism. In the present instance he has had time thoroughly to digest his observations, and the article may be considered as the final sum of the numerous papers on this subject he has already presented to different scientific periodicals. Martens, Phipps, Parry, Keilhau, Torell, Malmgren and Newton are the principal authors whose earlier labors are detailed and discussed.

For many years past the pear in the United States has been subject to an attack known as fire-blight. Even in the midst of health have branches, die suddenly during the summer season—at least it appears so to the observer—who does not know of anything wrong till he sees the younger green leaves become withered as if the branch had been cut from its parent tree. Many leading horticulturists have supposed the contagion due to the attack of a species of fungus, which, germinating on the bark, finally girdled it, and in this way caused death; but this view is rather speculative and derived more from analogy, the unknown, than assumed from the known. Dr. Addison Hyatt, the pharmacist of the microscopical section of the Philadelphia Academy of Sciences, has carefully examined fresh specimens, and feels positively that fire-blight is the work of a fungus. He says it originates first on the outside of the bark, causing at once changes in the cells. These gradually rupture, and are filled with dark pigment grains or spores, which characterize the contagion. It also and rapidly destroys, forming a complete circle round the limb. From the cambium layer the fungus travels by this to all parts of the system, destroying all as it goes, and these become those little black pellicles or pellicle spores, the germs of the fungus, cannot be examined from a single observation. The plant is extremely small, therefore only being revealed under a hundred diameters, although the cells subjected to examination were so thin that daylight could be seen into every cell. This sets the cause of the pear fire-blight at rest. Whether there is any predisposing cause for this fungoid development remains to be found out.

A recent school examination when the question was asked: "Who was the founder of the division of Poland into empires after the death of Alexander?" And a girl promptly answered: "Bismarck."

An old record book of a Connecticut church, dated 1787, says this: "For making a noise in church, Ann Bolton, spinster, is to sit two days in the poor pew, and pay a fine of five shillings."

"Professor, looking at his watch—We have a few minutes, I should like to have any one ask questions, if disposed.—Student: What is it, please?"

Somewhat is right and not to do wanton outrage.—Confucius.

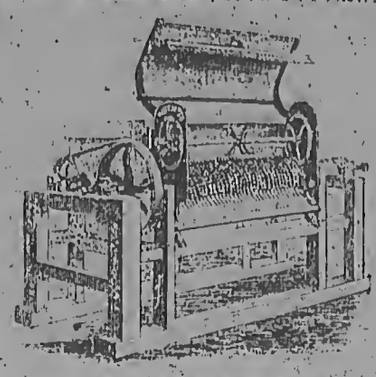
DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED

"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.

PATENTED JULY 15, 1873.

Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons and several recent improvements have been added. It obviates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head fastens the lint and carries the fibre to the cleaner with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time with a given steam or animal power than any other gin. The seed being ginned very close. The length of the staple is increased, producing cotton of this description of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the gin before the bales are sold. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

New Orleans Markets.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, April 25, 1876.

MONETARY.

The transactions over bank counters, as well as on the streets, have been larger this week than last, but rates are unchanged.

The assistant United States treasurer has, we learn, been exchanging silver for fractional currency. We hear that change is already becoming scarce, owing, as is supposed, to the shiny pieces being laid away for worse days.

Gold is bought mainly for custom-house purposes, and fluctuates but little. Exchange quotations are 113¾ @ 114.

There is no material change in the prices of stocks or bonds. Stock market quiet.

COTTON.

During Wednesday, Thursday and Friday the market was steady but quiet. On Saturday the New York market declined ⅛c., and ours also. On Monday a still further decline of ⅛c., and again to-day quotations are reduced ⅛c. The demand is fair. Brokers find it difficult to obtain even-running lists. Our tabular statement gives variations of prices from day to day.

Week's sales here, 16,350. Week's sales in New York, 5,710; middling at 13⅛c. Week's sales in Liverpool, 38,000; middling at 6d.

GREEN GRASS UNDER THE SNOW.

BY MRS. ANNIE A. PRESTON.

The work of the sun is slow,
But as sure as heaven we know;
So we'll not forget,
When the skies are wet,
There's green grass under the snow.

When the winds of winter blow,
Wailing like voices of woe,
There are April showers,
And buds and flowers,
And green grass under the snow.

We find that it's ever so
In this life's uneven flow;
We've only to wait,
In the face of fate,
For the green grass under the snow.

News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, April 29.—The World says that during the past three days Com. Vanderbilt has undergone careful examination, and it has been discovered that his physical condition is rapidly going to pieces. He suffers from a complication of diseases. Besides hemorrhoides, he has a disease of the bladder and hernia.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30.—The World says the firm of Kilbourne & Watts have decided, it is understood, to address a letter to the Speaker of the House, announcing a willingness to submit all testimony in their possession, including their books and papers, relating to the real estate pool, to the committee examining that subject also, on Tuesday, if not to-morrow.

The resolution of Mr. Tarbox, to investigate the Union Pacific scandal, with which Mr. Blaine's name has been connected, will be adopted.

BALTIMORE, April 30.—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States will assemble in this city, at the Academy of Music, to-morrow morning, and with two or three exceptions all the Bishops are present, and a large majority of the delegates. Bishops Andrews, Simpson, Scott, Foster and Peck preached in the different churches to-day.

AUBURN, N. Y., April 30.—Snow has fallen here most of the time for the past three hours. Wind north; mercury 32.

WASHINGTON, May 1.—Mr. Faulkner, chairman pro tem. of the Committee of Foreign Affairs, learns that a meeting of the British cabinet, on Saturday, determined to adhere to their former decision, and not deliver Winslow without the guarantees requested. Winslow will be unconditionally discharged to-morrow. When his release becomes officially known, Mr. Fish will communicate all correspondence on the subject to the House. It will lead to measures having in view the repeal of the extraditional clause of the Ashburton treaty.

BALTIMORE, May 1.—The seventeenth delegated General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church assembled this morning at the Academy of Music, and was called to order at nine o'clock by Bishop Janes.

Bishops Simpson, Scott, Ames, Newman, Harris, Foster, Haven, Merrill and Peck occupied seats on the platform, and the auditorium was filled with delegates.

After the reading of passages of Scripture, singing of hymns and prayer, Bishop Janes stated that he held in his hand the roll of delegates to the Conference prepared by George W. Woodruff, secretary of the last General Conference.

Woodruff proceeded to call the roll of delegates, at the conclusion of which Bishop Janes announced a quorum present. On motion of Mr. Newman, of Washington city, the Conference proceeded to elect a secretary.

In the address of welcome the committee state that on the twenty-first day of the present month one hundred years will have elapsed since the first Annual Conference assembled in this city. Here also, in 1784, Methodism in America assumed its separate and independent existence as a church, settled its standards of faith, determined on the form of government, and organized a method of working.

It is thirty-six years this day since the General Conference last assembled here, although up to that time more than one-half of all the General Conferences had held their sessions in Baltimore.

After a second ballot George W. Woodruff was declared elected secretary.

Rev. C. Pashing was chosen assistant secretary. Bishop Andrews read the address prepared in pursuance of a resolution, adopted at the last General Conference in 1872, that the Board of Bishops prepare a commemorative address and present it to this Conference on the first day of its session, to be immediately published to the church, with such recommendations from this General Conference as will enlist all our people in cheerful devout observance of those special thanksgiving services which shall be the most appropriate and fervent expression of gratitude to almighty God, of faith in Jesus Christ, the Savior and ruler of the world, of love for our country, and loyalty to the free institutions which are based upon the immortal Declaration of Independence.

ATLANTA, May 1.—The General Conference of the African Methodist Episcopal Church of the United States met here to-day. Six Bishops and two hundred and fifty delegates present. The Conference will be in session two weeks.

FOREIGN

LONDON, April 26.—The bill removing the electoral disabilities of women failed in the House of Commons by a vote of 230 to 152.

The Ragusa correspondent of the Times telegraphs, from the thirteenth to eighteenth instant, that Mukhtar Pasha lost 1,800 men, killed, wounded and sick. The insurgent chief, Vesica, writes that 300 Turks have been decapitated, and 50 insurgents killed and wounded.

Eight corpses have been removed from the ruins of the Theatre des Arts, at Rouen. About ninety-five persons were in the theater when the fire broke out, but the exact number of victims is unknown.

PARIS, April 26.—The grand operatic festival organized by the Franco-American Union, to raise funds for the erection of a statue of Liberty in New York harbor, was held last night. The exterior and stage of the Opera House were decorated with American flags. The audience was a brilliant one, consisting of many distinguished persons and the elite of Parisian society. Among those present was Minister Washburne, members of the legation, Ex-President Thiers, Messrs. Washington, Oscar de Lafayette, Rochambeau and de Tocqueville. The American colony was very fully represented.

LONDON, April 27.—The double turret ship Invincible was successfully launched, and was christened by the Princess Louise. The Times says the Invincible is the most tremendous defensive and offensive instrument of war yet created.

The plague in Mesopotamia is increasing. At Hillah, from April 1 to 7, 114 persons were attacked, and 56 died. At Bagdad, from April 2 to 7, 256 were attacked, 169 dying.

Some cases occurred in the military hospital and garrison.

The Colonial Bank has the following from Barbadoes: Forty persons have been killed and wounded, and 500 prisoners taken. Rioting is suspended, but the position is threatening. Confidence in the government is entirely gone.

In the House of Commons, this afternoon, royal assent to the royal titles bill was announced. The announcement was received with silence.

PARIS, April 28.—The agitation in favor of amnesty is growing so great that the government contemplates repressive measures.

ROME, April 28.—The representatives of some of the great powers were recently in conference with some influential cardinals, with the views of ascertaining the best means of bringing to an end the conflicts between the various States and the Church. The cardinals unanimously declared that peace was impossible unless the spiritual independence of the church was acknowledged. The alliance and agreement between Church and State was regulated by the concordat, without either party being made subordinate.

MADRID, April 28.—Two thousand soldiers have just sailed for Cuba. More will follow soon.

BERLIN, April 28.—The Imperial Court of Discipline, at Potsdam, has sentenced Count Von Arnim to a formal dismissal from the public service and the payment of the costs of the proceedings.

LONDON, April 28.—The Gazette to-day contains the proclamation of the assumption of the title of Empress of India.

From the Work.

ZION CHURCH, JACKSON COUNTY, MISS., Mr. Editor: Old Zion church is in the midst of a glorious revival, such as has not been known here for years. You will rejoice with us to know of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit such as fell upon the people on the day of Pentecost. The results of the revival are as happy as Christian hearts could wish. The whole community are on their knees, crying: "Men and brethren, what must we do to be saved?" The flame is spreading, and has reached the neighboring churches. The pastor, Bro. Campbell, is untiring in his efforts, and, together with the members, has resolved to wave the banner of Jesus Christ in the breeze until every man, woman and child in this community is brought to the feet of our blessed Redeemer, and landed safe within the pale of his visible church. May the grace of God carry us successfully through the work to its end and perfection, and at last give us all a crown of life everlasting? Our meeting has been going on about ten days. There have been about thirty accessions and twenty-five conversions. Young and old, and many hardened sinners, are coming into the church; and still they come. We ask an interest in your prayers, and in those of all Christians. May God add his blessing to the work! Will write you further at the close of the meeting.

Your brother in Christ,

A. MCGREGOR.

APRIL 29, 1876.

A letter from Mexico states that the Church of Jesus in that republic has chosen for its Bishops Rev. Prudencio G. Hernandez and Rev. Henry C. Riley, who will be consecrated by Bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church. Mr. Riley began work as a missionary in Mexico in 1869. Soon after the Church of Jesus was organized, and it now has about sixty congregations, with several schools, an orphanage and a printing press.

The Gospel of Numbers.

NUMBER X.

An interval of several weeks has been allowed since the publication of No. 9. We have paused for two reasons—first, a hope that we should get more data from other Conferences; second, we waited for corrections or criticisms. But little more data has reached us; what has been received will be found in the table at the close of this number. Only the printed minutes of the Illinois and Virginia Conferences have been added to those before in hand. In a note of correction from Shreveport, Bro. Goodwyn points out a wide mistake in the column representing the generosity of his people. Either the pen of the writer or a mistake of the printer removed the division point so as to make what should have been $11 only $1. Other facts were added in the note, the result of which will appear in the table in this number. Dr. Wilson, of Bowling Green, in whose judgment we greatly confide, offers, in a private note, some criticisms which have great weight. It is doubted whether the doctor, after twenty years of pastoral life, may not modify the idea that large churches, with a few very rich members, can be expected to surpass in averages small churches composed of no very rich men and few who are positively dependent on the church. We repeat what we said in our last number. Every congregation has its own peculiarities known best to their own pastor; yet pastors who have revolved largely on the wheel learn that there is, after all, less substantial difference than the people imagine. Numbers cannot in spiritual interests tell the whole truth, yet they have a profound significance when prayerfully studied. But we allow the doctor to speak for himself, reminding him that no doctrine is more fallacious than that which looks to men of unusual wealth for the chief support of church enterprises. First, this would deprive the poor of his privilege of giving, which is, after all, the highest blessing to be had from the exercise of this grace. Secondly, as men become conspicuous for wealth the appeals to their generosity multiply usually in tenfold proportion to their means. Hence the comparatively obscure, honest, hard working, self-denying, Christian on whom the church must largely depend.

"BOWLING GREEN, KY., April 23, 1876.

"DEAR DOCTOR: Figures are said not to lie, but as used they in some times make a very erroneous impression. Such is the case, I think, in the chapter from the Gospel of Numbers in last week's Advocate. The missionary assessment for Bowling Green station for the past Conference year, which was paid in full, was $100. This was one-fourth of the assessment upon any one of the largest churches in Louisville. Now our church here is a poor one. Some single members in Louisville are worth almost as much as our whole church. The average per member of contribution, then, is a most unfair test unless you have and use knowledge of the financial ability in each case. Again, in your column showing by the figures the zeal of the pastor, great injustice is doubtless done, in many cases; I know there was in my own. The proper use of numbers in this case would be to compare the charge now with itself in former years, and see whether the pastor was educating his people and developing their Christian liberality. Now, as to Bowling Green station, the numbers as you use them make the pastor rank quite low in missionary zeal. Apply the proper test as above, and what do we find? The statistics show that the average per member for contributions in general has been largely increased. As for missions, the report to Conference in 1871 was $60. In 1872 the present pastor reported $81; in 1873, $120; in 1874, $181. This year, judging from its work so far, our Sunday School Missionary Society will pay at least $100. Now this steady increase, notwithstanding a steadily growing stringency in the times, is a much better test of the pastor's zeal, in my opinion, than the one you apply. Yours truly,

J. G. WILSON."

Dr. Myers, pastor of Trinity, Savannah, South Georgia Conference, points out an error in the figures which we used as indexes of the "generosity of his people," and also the "zeal of the pastor." We are glad to give him the benefit in the table this week. A private note from Dr. Myers impresses us with a deep conviction that Trinity has abounded in the Macedonian grace. We feel the full force of Dr. Myers' article in the Southern Christian Advocate criticising the incompleteness of our data in estimating the generosity of the people. The only reason we have to offer for not taking in the items he mentions is that many of the reports, which we obtained with great difficulty, were deficient in these items—some in one, some in another. As the items which were used were explicitly stated, it was thought that the reader could make allowance for other regular church contributions. Where extra contributions have been raised for church-building, etc., we have generally observed that the generosity of the people has been quickened rather than decreased toward regular church expenses.

For fear the reader of No. 9 may not remember the explanation of the plan of the table given therein, it is again stated: The measure of the generosity of the people is sought in the average per member of salaries paid pastor and presiding elder. The want of the same rule in reporting parsonages leaves here a margin for error. The zeal of pastors is sought in the average paid for missions.

The Emperor at Moody's Services.

At the evening service at the Hippodrome Mr. Moody's text was: "What shall I do with Jesus, which is called Christ?" At Mr. Moody's right hand sat Dom Pedro and his suite, Mr. Christian Tomsen, and a number of other gentlemen. The Emperor had a small umbrella between his knees, on the top of which swung his high silk hat. He paid the closest attention to Mr. Sankey's singing, shaking his head in approval, and when "The Ninety-and-Nine" was sung he held a hymn book in his hand and traced the words as Mr. Sankey sang them.

Mr. Moody, after giving out his text, said: "I do not care so much about the sermon if I could impress the text upon your hearts. I do not care what denomination a man may belong to, nor would I go across the street to change his denomination, but I would go around the world to bring one single soul to Jesus." The Emperor shook his head and muttered: "Yes." "Men mean to decide some day what they will do with Christ, but worldly interest stands in the way. If it were not for this lack of decision hundreds of young men in this city would be Christians." As the speaker became excited, large drops of perspiration stood upon the Emperor's forehead, and he leaned forward on the edge of his chair, endeavoring to catch every word, not once removing his eyes from Mr. Moody's face. Mr. Moody spoke with unusual distinctness. "If you wish true liberty and peace," he said, "accept Christ and you will enjoy it." "Very true," said Dom Pedro, turning to his secretary.) "A kingdom will not buy Christ, or a place in heaven beside him. Even a great Emperor cannot save his soul with all his wealth and power unless he bows himself at Christ's feet and accepts of him." The Emperor bowed his head, and, turning to his secretary, bade him pay particular attention to Mr. Moody's remarks. At the conclusion of the services, which was very effective, the Emperor shook hands with Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey, and a place being cleared through the crowd by the police, the royal party passed out the Twenty-Seventh street door, entered their carriage, and were driven away.

New York World.

"Do I look like an octagon?" asked Mrs. Partington, as she sat at breakfast at the Grand Central, Oakland, with the Chronicle before her, and George, the beaming and genial exponent of gastronomic science, pouring her Mocha. "Do I look like an octagon?" placing her finger smilingly on the paragraph fixing her age at seventy-seven. "An octagon, indeed!" she continued, not severely, a smile wreathing her lips as the odor of the coffee exhaled, and her spectacles were dewy with the rising vapor from her cup. "They will, perhaps, make me a centarbus next, and the relief of antipathy; but this is the year for such, and perhaps I should be grateful for it, as age is honorable, and I might find a place at the great national imposition. Yet it is best not to assume years, any more than virtues; and I shall be content if I am never older than I am now. The coffee is very fragrant, George," and as she spoke she gazed into the cup, seeing therein her good looks reflected which sixty years had not impaired, while George beamed down upon her with radiant satisfaction.

Letter from Bishop Marvin.

MARIANA DISTRICT, ALABAMA CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The District Conference of the Marianna district, Alabama Conference, was held at Marianna, Fla., beginning April 21. There was a fair attendance of laymen, and the occasion was one of considerable interest. Some of the members came on foot a distance of fifteen, and two a distance of over twenty miles.

The various interests of the work were under discussion, and the state of the church pretty fully represented. Upon the whole, the outlook is encouraging. So I think. There is some improvement in most respects, and so long as there is improvement there is hope and assurance of the future.

In Sunday school work, there is, upon the whole, as much advance as could be expected under the circumstances. There are not many towns in the district. Indeed much of it is thinly populated, being just in the condition least favorable to such work. In many neighborhoods it is impossible to find a man for superintendent who is really competent; or teachers who are prepared for efficient service. The preachers are pressing this matter and getting schools established wherever it is at all practicable. In several places the Sunday school literature of our church is used in the schools. But in a large part of the district there is such want of mail facilities as to make it difficult to introduce any periodical literature. Yet those neighborhoods are the very ones where our Sunday school papers would do the most good. Where reading matter is more abundant it is less prized.

A large proportion of the farming population are in embarrassed circumstances. Many are very poor. It is not uncommon to see small plantations, mere patches, cultivated with one ox. I met on the road a large number of carts drawn by a single ox in shafts. Many small farmers have no horse, nor mule. From what I hear, it is the rule rather than the exception that the planters, large and small, have their wagons, teams, farming implements and next crop mortgaged to the merchants for this year's supplies. This is habitually the case from year to year. The average planter is a year behind. This is a dreadful state of things. The man who buys on long credit pays enormous prices, and then interest on the account besides. He pays, in the long run, perhaps double the amount to the merchant that he would if he paid the cash. Thus he is ground to the earth. The planters who keep out of debt are making money. The others are becoming more and more hopelessly involved.

If I had the ear of the young men of this country I would say one word, so far as the affairs of this world are concerned. That word would be: Keep out of debt—Keep out of debt—KEEP OUT OF DEBT. Wear patches on your clothes seven deep, if need be, but keep out of debt. Live on corn bread and water, if worst comes to worst, but keep out of debt. Work and keep out of debt. Any man who will do this will do well in this country. It is an easy country to make a living in with industry, economy and cash payments.

I have just read a part of this communication to a friend who is familiar with the business of the country. He says that I have put it mild when I say the man who buys on credit pays double. The rate charged, he thinks, will amount to three or four hundred per cent. per annum. O! my friends, keep out of debt.

About the finances there was a good deal of discussion. The prospect is as good, at least, perhaps better than in former years. But—Why should this ugly disjunctive be forever in requisition when church finances are under discussion? It is ever so. How long will this continue?

The disjunctive in the Mariana district introduces the sad fact that in many—indeed most—of the charges little or nothing is paid on the preachers' salaries until the end of the year. What is the preacher to do the first ten months of the year? Why, starve, or, what is worse—go in debt.

Yes, my deliberate advice to the preachers is to starve; if going in debt is the alternative. I have known so many preachers wrecked in reputation and damaged in character by going in debt that I have almost concluded that it is better to die young and with a conscience void of offense.

It was stated that the money from the cotton crop is afloat in the country until May, and that it would be as easy, if the people were only in the way of it, to pay the preacher at the beginning of the year as at the close. From May until the crop comes in there is no money; so that what is done must be done at the close of the ecclesiastical year, unless it is done at the beginning of it. In this Conference the ecclesiastical and calendar year are nearly coincident, the session being in December.

There are many noble laymen in the district who are striving to do their whole duty. There are some stewards who pay out of their pockets whatever the deficiency may be. After paying a large assessment they prefer to foot the bill rather than keep dinging, dinging at others about it. This is noble, but it would be much, much better if they would work up the membership at large to do their duty in this matter.

Bro. Moore has entered upon the duties of the presiding eldership with the spirit. The circumstances of his appointment to this district were a little peculiar. I fixed upon him for the place with a confidence that has not been disappointed. He is looking after all the interests of the church. He has studied the Discipline in the duties of his office. He never hurries through the business of a Quarterly Conference, but makes it the occasion of a thorough investigation of the affairs of the circuits. I am well assured that the work will improve under his administration. My only apprehension is that he will allow himself to be too much troubled when improvement does not keep pace with the ardor of his hopes.

The preachers are generally at work with good heart and hope. We had a class meeting in connection with the Conference, which I felt to be a profitable occasion.

It would do you good to see the horses that some of the brethren ride. Those that I saw were decidedly above the average of the present day. Bro. Green and Bro. Hasty have horses that are worthy of the best days of the itineracy. They know how to select a horse and how to keep him. They have too much sense to allow themselves to be traded out of a first-rate horse.

With Bro. E. Dowling I came, in his buggy, drawn by the faithful mule Raleigh, to Ozark, preaching at Greenwood and Newton on the way. At Ozark I ordained a deacon and an elder, preached at eleven o'clock, and started at half-past two for this place, to take the train at 11.40. After a drive of thirty-six miles, when within a mile of the depot, I had the mortification to hear the train rattling away. At midnight we drew up our jaded team in front of the hotel. Here I am for twenty-four hours. The brethren welcome me, and I am to preach to-night.

Sunday School Anniversary.

The thirtieth anniversary of the New Orleans District Sabbath School Union of the Methodist Episcopal Church South will be held in Carondelet Street church on Sunday, the fourteenth day of May, 1876, with songs, speeches and exercises by the children, commencing at four o'clock P. M.

On Sunday, the seventh day of May, at the same hour and place, the schools will all meet for practice together of their songs; and on Saturday, the thirteenth of May, at the same place and hour, they will meet for rehearsal of their songs, pieces and exercises.

W. H. FOSTER,
President.

NEW ORLEANS, April 24, 1876.

The General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church meets, May 18, in Dr. Talmage's church, Brooklyn, N. Y. About five hundred delegates are expected. The Southern General Assembly meets in Savannah on the same day.

Mr. Moody, it is announced, will begin revival services in Augusta, Ga., May 1, to continue one week. The Charleston, S. C., Young Men's Christian Association have invited him to visit that city.

Mr. A. V. Stout, a Methodist layman of New York city, has given $10,000 each to Wesleyan University at Middletown, and Drew Theological Seminary, to endow the president's chair in each institution.

In this simple fact, that we cannot accurately foresee the future, lies a refuge from despair.—Lewes.

Revival in Washington.

Mr. Editor: I have just returned from Hammond's Market-House meeting. The part of the house occupied is two hundred and fifty feet long by one hundred and twenty-five wide. By seven o'clock the place was well filled—one part crowded; and by half-past seven, the appointed hour, it was densely crowded, nine-tenths of the people standing, with probably a thousand outside in a pretty convenient place to hear. I estimate the number at about eight or nine thousand. One-half were non-church-going people. The market men, mostly butchers—for most of the others live in the country—fitted up the place, platform, lights, etc., at an expense, I suppose, of not less than $100 or $200 for this one meeting.

Now how is this? And how is it when taken in connection with another fact: that for two months past and more, every night, without intermission, and sometimes in bad weather, the largest churches in the city could not hold the people, and frequently not one-half or two-thirds of them, and at the day-meetings, held every day, the largest churches were generally well filled and frequently crowded? Hammond does all the preaching—if it can be called preaching.

I have attended a good many of these meetings. They generally hold two and a half hours. Frequently he has two meetings in the day, at different churches, besides the one at night. A half hour or so of each service is what he calls a praise meeting. This is a sort of mammoth love-feast or class meeting. At these I have heard several hundred young converts relate their experience. A number of them are men of culture and standing, lawyers' students, and men in office, but mostly they are persons in humbler positions; frequently whole households—father, mother and several children.

Without touching details, I will say that in such revival meetings as I have seen heretofore I have not seen generally, uniformly, better or more satisfactory exhibitions of sound revival among Christian people, or sound conversion among the newly-enlisted. The experience among converted drunkards is remarkable. And while the religious staple is the same we always see at our lively camp meetings, the mode of operation, verbiage and general outward manifestations very different from what I have been accustomed to. The general expression of vital, felt experience in grace and divine love among preachers, Christians and converts, I have not seen excelled in former revivals.

Up to yesterday the converts are numbered at about eighteen hundred. They claim to have a correct list of the names. It is the greatest revival I ever saw. But I note that I never before saw a general revival among so large a population as is here. This whole city is awakened as it never was before. So everybody says.

And so I again suggest the significant inquiry: How is this? One would suppose Mr. Hammond was a very great preacher—a man of profound thought and attractive eloquence. He is very far from being either. As pulpit ability, preaching talent or sermonizing performance are generally estimated, it is but a simple truth to say that in my judgment he would not compare favorably with our moderate circuit preachers. And as to those counted our best preachers, say one-fourth or one-third in number of the preachers of the Mississippi Conference, he would rate very far below them. In this estimate I conform as nearly as I can to the common drift of opinion among us.

Mr. Hammond is a well-educated man, and has for many years preached among the best classes of society, in the cities of this country and England and Scotland. He has traveled considerably here, in Europe and the East, and is familiar with ministers, churches and leading men in those countries. He has not failed to draw large audiences in many of the cities of this country, from Boston to Texas and California, and also in the Old World. I state this partly from private information from a distance.

His entire curriculum of eloquence is of a very moderate type; reading pretty voice good, but badly handled, often dropping into a low, whining, inelegant tone; gesticulation fair generally, but often offensively dramatic. His matter contains nothing of profundity in either theology, doctrine, ecclesiastical views or forcible illustration. He takes a text, and that is the last of it—sometimes half a dozen. He is pious, zealous, earnest, and remarkably simple and familiar in his manners; never off his guard, and yet never keeping any guard over his address and conduct. His forms of service have no form at all, and sometimes not much apparent comeliness, though always spiritual and to the point—to some religious point.

I make this descriptive outline and suggestive printing, not by any means from any considerations personal to Mr. Hammond, but for a very different reason, viz.: to call the earnest attention of the church, preachers and people, for the good of the church and the cause of Christ, to the question repeated above: How is this? Where lies the force, the power, the moving leverage producing such results from such causes? The man who can solve that question satisfactorily, and give to the solution a practical application, will have done something for his race.

I have studied this thing as well as I could to see what power it is this man exerts so forcibly. The power uniformly exerted in the pulpit he does not possess. Certainly he does not put it forth. A well-informed gentleman said the other day that Hammond had produced more religious result here in a little over sixty days than all the one hundred city preachers combined had produced in the past year, if not in several past years. Now is that secret not worth looking into?

I think the power lies in a strongly-willed, drilled, disciplined determination to not preach, nor try to preach, a "good sermon," as they are commonly estimated and called. But, on the contrary, to stubbornly refrain from everything of the sort. He does all, the time what I never saw any other man do—stand before a large congregation of highly-enlightened people, and preach and pray and sing, in his varied, heterogeneous kind of way, with simplicity of words and manner as perfectly simple and familiar as if sitting in the most social conversation with a few girls and boys. He never rises above that. His whole preaching—if it may be called preaching—is an almost monotonous repetition of the simplest and most juvenile exhortation you ever heard. "Jesus died for you. Jesus shed his blood for you. He came to save you. He loves you. Won't you love him? Won't you come and give your heart to him? Won't you have your Savior? Quit your sins, young man, and come to Christ. O you proud, and drunkards and harlots, come and save your souls," etc., to the bottom of the page. This comprises one-half; the other half is the relation of a conversion here, there and yonder; what this one said and did, and how another became a Christian, etc. Generally these are not striking, mostly commonplace—but always serious and to the point.

This preaching draws the crowds in teeming thousands, and produces conversion among all classes, high and low, as I have not seen "good" preaching do. The truth is, brethren, the people are tired, tired of elegant, sermon-making preaching. They are hungry for the gospel—the simple, every-day, unadorned gospel. They want a gospel not with enticing words of man's wisdom.

I go to church—ours or any other—and I see the same ritualistic forms—the same forms, same measure, same mode, same good behavior, same doctrine, and oftentimes the same profundity and the same eloquence. And then I see the same genteel going home, just as they came, and the same commendation: "Wasn't it fine?" I hear a Bishop preach; and then again I hear him preach the very same sermon, word for word, illustration for illustration. Such preaching is fine, grand, elegant, and it is justly admired. I listen to a sermon that would do credit to the first logicians or orators of any age and country, and admire it hugely, and go away with the sad conviction that nine-tenths of the congregation have heard no preaching at all.

I think it is a serious question whether we had not better all quit preaching, or trying to preach, to intelligent people.

R. Ambry.

The Relation of Our Children to the Church.

Mr. Editor: Bro. Hall represents me as saying that we are as wicked in infancy as it is possible for us to be in manhood and the practice of sin. I do not see how he could place such a construction on my words, when the very next sentence to the one he quotes is given as an explanation of it, and then follow illustrations and arguments to show that from this germ state of depravity, which is so perfect as not to be added to by a personal transgression, we are developed into a greater personal wickedness in heart and practice.

The entire quotation is as follows: "We do by nature possess the germ of depravity to such a degree that it cannot be added to by any act of personal transgression. By this we would not be understood as saying that all the external fruits of an internal state of the heart are cogent in early child-life; but that the indwelling depravity is perfect, in the first-life existence, and works outwardly in heart and practice, as capacity of mind and scope of influence expand." Then follows the illustration of the "whole soul" to show that this germ state of depravity, unrestrained by preventing grace, as designed, should be brought to bear upon them through the church and religious parents, will develope so as to fill the increased capacities of a developed heart and mind. Then, to prevent the mistake he makes, I added these words: "So the infant lies upon its mother's bosom a perfect synonym of innocent purity; but permit its nature to develop without any moral restraint, and we too soon see the outcroppings of a perfect depravity." So much, then, for what he said against this part of my "fearful error."

But after much arguing to show that men "waxed worse and worse" in personal wickedness—a fact not denied, but taught by me—he asks: "What is this but an increase of depravity?" It is nothing more than the development of the germ state of depravity, so as to fill and control the developed capacities of the mind and heart. Would Bro. Hall say the development of the thistle seed into a true bearing thistle was an adding to its nature? or that it was the nature of the seed developed through the capacity of the tree?

Bro. Hall says: "I know of no such stereotyped, uniform, invariable depravity as is here presented;" and after stating that he believes the degree of our depravity to be as variably as the moral and religious status of different persons, asks: "Will it do to say that the heathen savage, say of India or Africa, presents no darker type of sensual, debased nature than the man of Christendom?" Need we measure this argument to find upon what he makes the degree of one's depravity depend? According to his argument the degree of our depravity is made to depend on the mere accidents of birth—that is to say, because a man is born a heathen he is more depraved than if born a Christian. But how is this theory sustained by him? Solely on the grounds that a savage presents a "darker type of sensual, debased nature than the man of Christendom." Then I should like to hear his explanation of the reason why some children of the same parentage present a "darker type of sensual, debased nature" than others born under the same roof and in the same religious community. Would he say that it was because the parents were more wicked, "savage," or like an "Indian" or African," at the birth of one than of another? He cannot deny that such a state of facts does often exist in the very best regulated households. Neither can he follow his own theory and give any other reasons for this state of things. If his theory of total depravity be true, then would I discard the doctrine as a mere pathopeia.

But let us examine the Scriptures on this point. David was born in Christendom, and yet he says: "Behold, I was shapen in iniquity, and in sin did my mother conceive me." While in Ephesians, second chapter, Paul tells those who were then converted that they "were dead in trespasses and in sins," and that they "were by nature the children of wrath, even as others," while Christ said: "That which is born of the flesh is flesh." Yet Bro. Hall says he believes in a variable depravity. Will he be so kind as to tell where to find his doctrine in the word of God? He says phrenology teaches as much. Perhaps so. I know nothing of the teachings of phrenology. Yet if it antagonizes the Bible I advise him not to trust it as his guide in faith.

J. M. Weems.

Paul Not a Baptist Preacher.

The Apostle Paul was one of the most remarkable men the world has seen, and has written more extensively, in the elucidation of the plan of salvation, than any other. His conversion was a remarkable demonstration of the truth of Christianity, because he had no motives to deceive; all his worldly interests were with the Jews; he was popular with their officials; the road to influence, wealth and distinction was altogether on that side. He could not have been deceived; it was at midday, when a light shined about him, and he heard the voice of Jesus speaking to him. He was blind three days, and Ananias was directed, in a vision, to go to the place where he had been led; and, laying his hands on him, there fell from his eyes scales, and he received sight, and straightway commenced preaching Christ to the people. His change was instantaneous, thorough and indubitable; nothing short of divine power could have accomplished it. He lived at the time of the advent of Christ; he had talents to have discovered a deception in the claims of Christ, and was surrounded by multitudes who had seen him, heard his teachings and witnessed his miracles. How could such a man be deceived or a deceiver? He was well acquainted with the prophecies and the characteristics of the promised Messiah; and, further, the works that he performed himself, the success that attended his ministry, all tended to confirm and establish the truth in his mind.

This great and inspired teacher says: "I thank God that I baptized none of you but Crispus and Gaius; lest any should say that I had baptized in mine own name. And I baptized also the household of Stephanas; besides, I know not whether I baptized any other. For Christ sent me not to baptize, but to preach the gospel; not with wisdom of words, lest the cross of Christ should be made of none effect."—First Corinthians xiv, 17. Now we hesitate not to say that there is no Baptist preacher in the world who would have made such an assertion; for they make baptism by immersion their chief glorying, and unchurch and unchristianize all the Christian world who have not been immersed by a Baptist preacher.

Luke and Peter also were evidently not Baptist preachers, because Luke says that Jesus, after his resurrection, commanded the disciples not to depart from Jerusalem, but wait for the promise of the Father; "which," saith he, "ye have heard of me. For John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Ghost not many days hence."—Acts i, 4, 5. This promise was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost, viz.: "And when the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all with one accord in one place; and suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost," etc. When they were all amazed, and some, mocking, accused them of being full of new wine, Peter addressed them and said: "These are not drunken, as ye suppose, seeing it is but the third hour of the day; but this is that which was spoken by the prophet Joel, And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith God, I will pour out of my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions, and your old men shall dream dreams, and on my servants and on my handmaidens I will pour out of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy," etc.—Acts ii, 15-18. Here we see that Luke, Peter, and even Jesus, indorse pouring as baptism, and show that the same term is used for baptism and pouring, which no Baptist could be induced to do.

Your correspondent would not by any means dispute the claims of the Baptists to the Christian character, for we regard them as a pious, orthodox people in all that constitutes the vitality of religion; and we have no doubt that their church contains many of the brightest examples of purity and devotedness to Christ. All we ask is that they would permit us to have some humble seat in the church of Christ, and to share with them the great salvation purchased by Jesus for his believing children, even though it be to occupy the most inferior position among the glorified saints in heaven.

Where the Swallows Go in Winter.

Our readers are familiar with the fact that during midsummer the sun does not set in Lapland, but remains in sight above the horizon; also, during the shortest days of winter, for two months the sun is not visible. Night, however, does not constantly endure during the winter, as at midday a little glimmering light breaks forth, and continues about two hours. By the assistance of this light, and the reflection from the snow which covers the whole land, the Laplanders go to the chase or fish. Although the ice at this season is six to eight feet thick, they make large holes in it, at stated distances, and push, by means of a pole, their nets from aperture to aperture, and draw them out when filled with fish. "What is most surprising," we quote from our chronicler, Regnard, "is that they often catch swallows in their nets, which hold by means of their claws to some small pieces of wood. The swallows appear dead when they come out of the water, having no symptoms of life; but when they are placed near the fire, and begin to feel the heat, they recover a little, then clap their wings, and begin to fly as they do in summer."

Another curious statement about the disappearance of swallows in winter is made by Regnard, which we give here because it is also the belief, as we have been told by Mr. R. A. Proctor, the astronomer, of the country folk in England. Regnard says he was surprised at meeting with so many swallows in this northern latitude, and having asked the country people who conducted his party what became of them in winter, and whether they migrated to warm regions, he was assured that they formed platoons, and buried themselves in the slime which is at the bottom of the lakes, and that they await in this place the return of the sun to his former vigor, when he pierces to the bottom of these marshes, and gives them again that life which the cold had deprived them of.—Home and School.

OBITUARIES.

Delilah McDaniel was born in Davidson county, Tenn., April 27, 1807. Her parents, Jehu and Margret Harris, moved to Washington county, Ala., they a part of Mississippi Territory, and settled in the vicinity of St. Stephen. February 20, 1822, she was married to Henry McDaniel, of North Carolina, who survives her; professed faith in Christ and united with the Methodist Church in Dec. 1824, under the joint ministry of John A. Cotton and A. A. Dickenson. About 1835 she removed with her husband to Sumter county, Ala., recently purchased from the Choctaw Indians, and were among the first settlers of Sumter county, and, we may say, of the county. Their names were the first enrolled on the record of the Methodist church in that village—Bro. Wiley Thomas, preacher in charge. She died March 10, 1876, aged sixty-eight years, ten months and fifteen days.

Too much cannot be said in praise of this sainted lady. In her were blended all the components of a noble nature. She was diligent, the "salt of the earth," a "light" in the world. From youth she experienced marked religious tenderness. Her conversion was clear and scriptural. Experimentally she understood the apostle's language: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." With Job she could say: "I know that my Redeemer liveth." She grew in grace from the hour of her espousal to Christ, ever giving heed to the divine injunction: "Leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection." A deep and abiding interest she felt in the prosperity and spread of the Redeemer's kingdom. From the closing adage of her heart went forth continuously the prayer: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven."

In all relations Sister McDaniel carried the aroma of a devoted and sanctified life. The principles of vital godliness directed her in all the sphere of her action. Of clear practical judgment, she was a solid adviser and comfort to her esteemed companion. The words of the wise man can be truthfully quoted: "The heart of her husband doth safely trust in her, so that he shall have no need of spoil." As a mother she was watchful and kind, tender and faithful. "Her children arise up and call her blessed; and her husband also, and he praiseth her." A good Samaritan was she. She sought the needy, that she might give relief. She stretched out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth forth her hands to the needy." All took knowledge that she walked with God. Her love, faith, meekness, gentleness and long suffering marked her unmistakably "born from above;" a child of the royal household. A life so devout, so beautiful, must needs terminate in grand triumph; and so it did with this "mother in Israel." Her sun went down amid golden glories, throwing back flood tides of light upon a darkened world. Twelve months prior to her demise she had a severe stroke of paralysis. Being of vigorous constitution, in a few months she so far convalesced as to be able, in a measure, to attend to her domestic affairs. From this attack, all the while she suffered much, yet, without a single murmur or complaint. She was impressed that her end was near, and spoke most serenely of her last approaching release from earth. For her death had no terrors. On the second of March, 1876, she had a second stroke, which in eight days resulted in death. To the last her mind was clear and active, and she bore constant testimony to the faith of the gospel, of her comfort and peace even in death's icy embrace, and assured all that she would soon be at rest in the city that hath foundation. Her last moments were most solemn and impressive. Earth rapidly receding, heaven in view, her spirit, on wings angelic, poised for its farewell flight. She improves the lingering moments to give parting counsel to loved ones. To him with whom she had been wedded nearly fifty years she said: "I hate to leave you." After a moment of silence and prayer she remarked: "I can leave you now. Try to have more patience." To her only living daughter: "Raise your child aright." To mother: "Think more of heavenly things." To a son in Texas she sent these words: "Tell Asbury to meet me in heaven. Tell him he was the burden of my thoughts; for him I have offered a thousand prayers." Turning to her daughter, Mrs. Wilson, she said: "You must pray now for Asbury in my stead." Thus passed away this sainted woman. "I heard a voice from heaven saying unto me, Write, Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth: yea, saith the Spirit, that they may rest from their labors."

Mrs. Nancy Settoon died on Friday, the twenty-first of April. She was born near Tangipahoa on January 6, 1798. Her maiden name was Knight. In 1818 she was married to Mr. Marion Sims, and lived in Alabama, near the Black Warrior, in which she was left a widow and returned to Louisiana. In 1828 she was again married, to Mr. Saul Settoon, and for some time lived in St. Helena parish. In 1841 he was accidentally shot. Since then, for the last thirty-five years, she has resided in Carrollton. Her circumstances have always been very slender; she owned, however, a little house, and by her industry and needle supported herself, raised and educated three orphans, and had always something for the needy and the house of God. She was converted when ten years of age, and for sixty-five years lived a consistent Christian. Full of the spirit of love, she visited the sick, delighted in the preaching of the word, and often shouted in love-feast and at class meeting; and she upheld her minister by her cheerful and fervent piety. For a long time she had looked forward to her death as an hour of supremest joy, when she would be introduced to the glorious company around Christ, and see again the many friends who had preceded her. "In this world," she said, "as life advances we cease to live for ourselves—the heart is taken up with the welfare and care of others." As death approached, she lost none of her buoyant cheerfulness, but for weeks together her greatest delight was in hearing the songs of Zion through life her peace and cheerfulness flowed steadily on through sickness, weariness of age, disease, and the very steps of death. She was singularly free from all the petty fears of life, unstartled by the times of peace or war, living always in the bread alone. Every preacher who came to Carrollton, he must live or die, delighted with wonder she would converse with and ever estimate what this noble woman accomplished for God's people by prayer, how much she hastened the coming and increased the glory of her Lord's kingdom. Enoch was translated but she, after walking long and closely with God by the route of her Lord's footsteps, her spirit has gone beyond the stars and spaces infinite, to the place where he dwells. She rests from her labors, and the very thought of her is bracing.

J. C. Keener.

Thomas Jackson Tindall was born on the twenty-eighth of November, 1812, in Warren county, Miss., and died in Franklin parish, La., on the sixteenth of August, 1875.

By moving to this State in the year 1[illegible] and spent the remainder of his life in the neighborhood, of the town of Winnsboro, Franklin parish, La., at which place, some years ago, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church South. He was married to Miss Nancy Ann Ivey, on the twenty-seventh of April, 1837, with whom he lived in the enjoyment of domestic happiness until separated by death, the latter a consistent religious life, but during the last years of his sojourn upon earth he was wholly devoted to God. He was a meek and humble Christian. In this world he was content to "sit down in the lowest room," and with patience await the time for the Master of the feast to say to him: "Friend, come up higher." His ethereal soul was limited to such an extent as to deprive him of the privilege of reading the word of God, a privilege highly esteemed by many of the sanctified children of God. On this account, however, he did not excuse himself from holding family worship; and after the reading of a portion of God's word by a Christian wife and world, with his family around him, and bended knees present themselves at a throne of grace for a father's blessing.

He was deprived of the power of speech before he was fully conscious that he was on the brink of the river. A few days before his death, when he was approaching the opposite shore, he bid his wife a silent adieu with the smile of hope upon his face, as if to say: "All is well."

A. M. Wynn.

Died, at her father's residence, Mobile, Ala., Sarah M. Whiting. She was born July 9, 1858, was married July 15, 1875, and died July 19, 1875, aged thirty years and ten days.

Sarah Margaret was the affectionate daughter of Rev. James H. Allen. She attached herself to the church in early life, and soon after embraced religion, living a consistent Christian during life. She lingered with the fatal disease of consumption for about four months, during which time she was confined entirely to her room and bed; although suffering much with pain of body she was never heard to complain, but was wholly resigned to the will of God. The lamp of piety was always trimmed and burning. She embraced every opportunity to attend the worship of God; was an excellent singer, and quite able in prayer. She was the kind mother of two interesting little daughters, whom she delighted to train up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord.

On Sunday, the eleventh, being nine days before her departure, she conversed freely with her friends about the welfare of her soul, requesting all to meet her in heaven. Being asked by one of them if she felt willing to go, she replied: "O yes." Raising her hand heavenward, with a smile of joy she said: "Angels are around my bed, waiting to bear my spirit home."

On the morning of her departure, her speech almost gone, she was not able to talk much above a whisper; but she continued giving evidence of her victory.

Milton, the glory of British literature, received £10 at two different payments for the copyright of "Paradise Lost," yet Mr. Hayley, author of a treatise on the genius of Milton, after having disposed of all the first impression, sold the copyright to a bookseller for two hundred guineas.

THE SHORE OF ETERNITY.

Alone! to land upon that shore;
To begin alone to live for evermore,
To love no one beneath
The manners or the speech
Of that new life, or put us at no ease—
O mind we might die to pairs or companies!

Alone! the land we trust soon that shore,
The faithful one whom we have trusted more,
Our pals and all ours,
Those we have trusted those—
In whom we longed most to our earthly strife—
O we shall trust him more in that new life!

So not alone we land upon that shore;
We'll be as though we had been there before;
We shall meet more we know
Than we can meet below,
And find our rest like some returning dove,
And be at home at once with our Eternal Love.

Some Remarkable Feats of Sleep-Walkers.

A man dreamed that he saw a child fall into a river. He got up, threw himself again on his bed as if in the act of swimming, seized hold of a bundle of clothing at the corner of the bed, treated it as if it were the drowning child, held it with one hand while seeming to swim with the other, and put it down as if safely landed on the river-side. He began shivering, and teeth-chattering, and said out audibly: "It is freezing cold! Let me drink a little brandy;" and finally returned to bed again. A young military officer in the citadel of Breisteid was seen by his brother officers to rise from his bed in his sleep, go to a window, open it, clamber to a roof by the aid of the window-cord, seize hold of a magpie's nest with its young, descend to the room, wrap the young birds in a cloak, and go to bed again. Porati, an Italian apothecary, had a pupil named Castelli, who was much accustomed to somnambulistic influence. More than once the young man was seen to rise from his bed while asleep, go down to the shop, and serve out medicine to imaginary customers. Muratori relates that Giovanni Battista Negretti, servant to the Marchese Luigi Sale, was subject to somnambulistic attacks during which he performed the duties of the day in a way at once amusing and surprising. One evening, while sleeping on a bench in the kitchen, he rose suddenly, began talking about and talking, went into the dining-room, laid the cloth and other apparatus for dinner, and stood with a plate in his hand as if behind his master after waiting some time, and the imaginary dinner ended, he put away everything, locked the sideboard, went to his master's bed-room, warmed the bed, locked up the house, and finally retired to his own bed—his eyes closed all the time. On another evening he rose up asleep, got his own supper ready, ate it, went and drew some wine, and drank. It was observed on these occasions that he made much use of his arms, feeling his way rather than seeing. A bell-ringer one night rose up in his sleep, and, as if his companions were with him, appeared to go up into the belfry; after going out of the room and in again he imitated the movements of a bell-ringer. A man who ate and drank occasionally while in a somnambulistic sleep evidently did not know the taste of what he was taking, but persons who watched him might change his food or drink without his perceiving it. One night he rose from bed, dressed, went to a cabaret or small wine shop, asked for wine, received water, and drank it without noticing the difference. A young soldier, interested one evening by a discussion or reading with his comrades of a military combat, partook of supper, went to bed, and soon to sleep; in the night he rose, with eyes open, but asleep, and imitated with his arms a vigorous defense, rushed out of doors, and returned in profuse perspiration. Weinholt notices the case of a musical student, who would often rise in his sleep, go into the study, place a sheet of music in proper position on the piano-forte, and play the piece correctly. Once his friends purposely turned the music upside down, but he detected and rectified it. On another occasion he found a string out of tune, opened the instrument, tuned the string, and went on with his playing. A stone mason, working for a master in Kent, was told by him to go the next morning to a neighboring church-yard and measure the quantity of work done on a wall. He went to bed at his usual hour. Waking in the night, he was astonished to find himself dressed, in the open air, and in the dark. The church clock struck two, and then he knew he was in the church-yard. When the gleam of summer daylight came, he found that he had measured the wall accurately with a measuring rod, and properly entered the item in a book. This case is a very remarkable one, for the man "caught himself in the act" of somnambulistic walking, and was as much surprised at it as any looker-on would have been. Gassendi notices the case of a man who rose in the night, dressed while asleep, went down to the cellar, drew wine from a cask, walked back, undressed, went to bed again, and knew nothing about it in the morning. Once, when he did this, he woke in the cellar, and found more difficulty in retracing his steps in the dark than he had when asleep.—Chambers' Journal.

Dr. Chalmers.

This mighty man was ordained minister of Kilmany, in Fife, May, 1803, and here he devoted himself diligently to his work. But up to this period, and some years beyond, he was utterly ignorant of the evangelical doctrines of the gospel, and was by reading Mr. Wilberforce's "Practical View of Christianity" that he was led out of the cold region of religious form into the sunshine of the divine love, by faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Of this book he writes: "As I got on in reading it I felt myself on the eve of a great revolution in all my notions about Christianity. I am now February, 1820 most thoroughly of opinion, and it is an opinion founded on experience, that on the system of 'Do this and live,' no peace, and even no true and worthy obedience, can ever be attained. It is: 'Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved.'"

The result of this change is stated thus: "Restored once more to the enjoyment of robust health, and with a mind once more at ease, and in the possession of firm and settled views, Mr. Chalmers resumed his labors at Kilmany, and for the first time began in earnest to preach the gospel. The effect was soon visible, the church became crowded, and the fame of the preacher's new-born fervor and eloquence brought weekly accessions to the congregation from the neighboring parishes. 'Dundee, Edinburg and Glasgow lent their several contingents to the wrapt and excited auditory.'"

The eighteenth of May, 1843, a day ever memorable in the annals of the Scottish Kirk, was appointed for the opening of the Assembly. The galleries were crowded by an expectant multitury in the church of St. Andrew's. The Lord High Commissioner, the Marquis of Bute, proceeded from the palace of Holyrood with regal pomp, and, heralded by the sound of martial music, took his seat on the throne of majesty.

The leaders of the movement began to enter the sacred edifice, and as there appeared conspicuous in their midst the fine intellectual face and massive form of Chalmers, followed by Welsh, Candlish, and other worthies, the church rang with the shouts of the multitude. The plan of proceeding was fully arranged by previous concert, and the members advanced gravely and silently to their seats.

Dr. Welsh, the moderator of the previous year, according to usual custom, took the chair, and, having constituted the meeting by prayer, rose amid death-like stillness—himself pale and agitated with the emotions of the hour—and proceeded to read a protest signed by all the ministers and elders of his party. This done, he quitted his place with great solemnity of manner, and, hat in hand, with a firm and decided step moved toward the door. At first a loud cheer burst from the gallery, but as instantaneously a silence deep as death followed. The first to tread in the steps of the moderator was Thomas Chalmers, venerable from his years, and illustrious from his talents, loved for his amiability as much as he was respected for his powers, and revered for his piety. Tears visibly chased each other down the furrowed cheeks of the great, good man as he made the hard sacrifice of position and association for conscience' sake. It must have been a heart sterner than his to have gone forth unmoved from the walls that had so often echoed to his lofty eloquence, and, at one blow, severed himself from a church in whose bosom he had been reared, and to whose service his manhood had been given. He left behind him imperishable memories, and carried to other scenes and new fields of labor his purity of principles and his unsullied honor.

Four abreast, there followed him through the streets of Edinburg a third of the ministers of the Scottish Kirk, and they the very elite of its clergy in respect of ability, learning, piety and public spirit. A vast crowd welcomed them without, and the houses they passed were filled from basement to roof with citizens, who loudly cheered the seceders, the ladies waving their handkerchiefs as in the enthusiasm of a public triumph. So they proceeded on their way to a hall in Cannon Mills, where other ministers, not members of the Assembly, and a crowded audience were awaiting their arrival. Amid the acclamations of three thousand persons, Chalmers was chosen the first moderator of "The Free Presbyterian Church of Scotland."

Married Politeness.

"Will you?" asked a pleasant voice.
And the husband answered:
"Yes, my dear, with pleasure."

It was quietly but heartily said; the tone, the manner, the look, were perfectly natural and very affectionate. We thought: How pleasant that courteous reply! How gratifying must it be to the wife! Many husbands of ten years' experience are ready enough with the courtesies of politeness to the young ladies of their acquaintance, while they speak with abruptness to the wife, and do many rude little things without considering them worth an apology. The stranger, whom they may have seen but yesterday, is listened to with deference, nay, although the subject may not be of the pleasantest nature, with a ready smile; while the poor wife, if she refutes a domestic grievance, is snubbed or listened to with ill-concealed impatience. O how wrong this is—all wrong.

Does she urge some request—

"Oh! don't bother me," cries her gracious lord and master. Does she ask for necessary funds for Susy's shoes or Tommy's hat—

"Seems to me you're always wanting money!" Is the handsome retort. Is any little extra demanded by his masculine appetite, it is ordered, not requested:

"Look here, I want you to do so and so—just see that it's done;" and off marches Mr. Boor, with a bow and a smile of gentlemanly polish for every casual acquaintance he may chance to recognize.

When we meet with such thoughtlessness and rudeness our thoughts revert to the kind voice and gentle manner of the friend who said: "Yes, my dear, with pleasure." "I beg your pardon" comes as readily to his lips, when by my little accident he has disconcerted her, as it would in the presence of the most fastidious stickler for etiquette. This is because he is a thorough gentleman, who thinks his wife in all things entitled to precedence. He loves her best. Why should he hesitate to show it? not in sickly, maudlin attentions, but in preferring her pleasure, and honoring her in public as well as in private. He knows her worth. Why should he hesitate to attest it? "And her husband he praised her," saith holy writ; not by fulsome adulation, not by pushing her charms into notice, but by speaking, as an opportunity occurs, in a manly way of her virtues.

Though words seem little things, and slight attentions almost valueless, yet depend upon it they keep the flame bright, especially if they are natural. The children grow up in a better moral atmosphere, and learn to respect their parents as they see them respecting each other. Many a boy takes advantage of the mother he loves, because he sees often the rudeness of his father. Insensibly he gathers to his bosom the same habits, and the thoughts and feelings they engender, and in his turn becomes the petty tyrant. Only his mother? Why should he thank her? Father never does. Thus the home becomes the seat of disorder and unhappiness. Only for strangers are kind words expressed, and hypocrites go out from the hearthstone fully prepared to render justice, benevolence and politeness to any one and every one but those who have the justest claims. Ah! give us the kind glance, the happy homestead, the smiling wife and courteous children of the friend who said so pleasantly: "Yes, my dear, with pleasure."

Canon Liddon.

Canon Liddon, if inferior to the Bishop of Peterborough as an orator, has been pronounced by Dean Stanley, a most competent judge, "the greatest preacher of the age." His sermons are less than an hour long, and oftentimes exceed an hour in their delivery. An eminent Nonconformist preacher writes that on one occasion he listened to Dr. Liddon "with unabated interest for an hour and twenty minutes." His sermons are not merely hortatory, though he is a splendid declaimer, but are marvels of compression and condensation, notwithstanding their length, and they are so attractive that he invariably draws immense audiences. The announcement that he is to preach anywhere in the kingdom is one that always widely excites curiosity and interest, and long before the hour of service commences the cathedral or church is sure to be packed. In instances where the admission has been by ticket, the tickets have been disposed of days before, and hardly any amount of interest is sufficient to obtain one. Canon Liddon's audiences are usually largely made up of clergymen, including the most eminent of the clergy and prelates. They also attract men who are eminent in politics, literature, science and art, while the people are always present in thousands. When about to preach he makes his way with a quiet, rapid tread to the pulpit, while an indefinable thrill of emotion—a contagion belonging to the hour and the scene—is felt by the vast audience. With a natural, earnest gesture he at once buries his face in his hands to pray. When he faces you you are impressed with his striking and somewhat monastic appearance, and by his remarkable likeness to St. Augustine in Ary Scheffer's celebrated picture of Augustine and Monica. The impression deepens, if you ever have been a student of Augustine, as you follow the chain of his discourse. You might fancy there was a monk before you, and the impression is helped by the rapid and almost imperceptible act of adoration with which Dr. Liddon accompanies every mention of the Name. It is stated in high authority that this great preacher has spent years in studying preaching as it is practiced on the Continent, and has formed himself on the best models in France and Italy, with the greatest of which he need not shrink from comparison. He reproduces what is best in the most celebrated Catholic orators; disregarding mere externals, and appealing to the deepest sense of humanity—the passion, the tragedy, the will and the emotions of men. Almost in his first sentence you see the essential character of his oratory. His manuscript is by his side, but he is liberated from his chains; he almost knows it by heart, and he declaims it in a way that is as grand as it is peculiar.—Harper's Magazine.

A MARVELOUS CLOCK.—A marvelous piece of mechanism has just been exhibited in Paris. It is an eight-day clock, which chimes the quarters, plays sixteen tunes, playing three tunes every twelve hours, or at any intervals required. The hands go round as follows: One once a minute, one once an hour, one once a week, one once a month, one once a year. It shows the moon's age, the rising and setting of the sun, the time of high and low water, half ebb and half flood, and there is a curious contrivance to represent the water, which rises and falls, lifting some ships at high-water tide as if they were in motion, and, as it recedes, leaving them high and dry on the sands. The clock shows the hour of the day, the day of the week, the day of the month, the month of the year, and in the day of the month provision is made for the long and the short months. It shows the signs of the zodiac; it strikes or not, and chimes or not, as may be desired; and it has an equation table, showing the difference between the clock and the sun for every day in the year.

Two sons of Erin, shoveling dirt on a hot day, stopped to rest, and exchanged views on the labor question. "Pat, this is mighty hard work we're at." "It is, indade, Jimmy; but what kind of work is it you'd like if ye could get it?" "Well," said the other, leading reflectively upon his shovel and wiping the perspiration with the back of his hand, "for a nice, aisy, clane business, I think I would like to be a bishop."

Miss Cort, a lady who resided in the suburbs of Liverpool, has just died, leaving a large sum of money to the Liverpool charities. The total amount bequeathed is £25,500, and the money is divided among twenty-four of the charities of the town.

Religious Intelligence.

—The Rev. G. T. Perks, M. A. (Wesleyan Methodist,) has lately visited a number of the South African mission stations, and has been enthusiastically received. Arrangements are progressing with a view to establishing the colonial churches on a self-supporting basis at as early a date as possible. Mr. Perks will not return to England for several months.

—The Austrian Parliament has rejected a bill providing for the recognition of the Old Catholics by the State, and an Austrian paper makes the following sensible reflections: "The way for the State to follow in this affair is very simple. Those who do not wish to submit to the commandments of the Roman Catholic Church, of which the Pope is the head, are free to leave it."

—The Waldenslans have now nearly as many communicants outside of the valleys as in them. It is therefore probable that a general assembly will be formed for all the Presbyterians in Italy, with two inferior synodical church courts—one for the mountains and one for the plains. Thus the Waldenses, divested of all remaining exclusiveness, will be a national church for all Italy.

—Some time ago we noticed the project for founding two missionary bishopries in southern India. We now learn from Evangelical Christendom that the arrangements to this end have been completed. The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel will provide sufficient income for Rev. Dr. Caldwell, its eminent missionary, and the Church Missionary Society has done the same for its veteran laborer, Rev. Dr. Sargent. The two bishops, both liberal-minded men, will preside over a native church of 30,000 members, with 31 native clergymen. This large Christian community has already become to a considerable degree self-supporting, and under such able episcopal supervision the work will proceed still more rapidly.

—The Bengal Magazine, edited by a native Christian, recently gave a rather pungent reply to a criticism by a member of the Brahmo Somaj to the effect that Christian missions in Bengal were a failure. The writer first corrects the Brahmo's statistics. There were in Bengal in 1871 15,078 native Christians, of whom 13,225 were communicants. These are the numerical result of about 60 years of labor. Indeed most of the converts have been gathered during the last 30 or 40 years. Then the writer turns to the statistics of the Brahmo Somaj, which since the days of its founder, Rajah Ram Mahun Raya, has also had an existence of about 60 years. The Somaj gives no statistics; but the government census has enumerated the members of this society. Making liberal allowances for errors, it may be reckoned that there are 500 Brahmos in Bengal. If, then, the Christian missions of the last 60 years have been a failure, Brahmoism, numerically considered, is a failure 25 times over.

—The Missionary Herald contains letters from several of the missionaries of the American Board in Japan reporting the progress of their work. As our readers may know, the four cities of Kobe, Hiogo, Osaka and Kiyoto are very near each other, Kobe and Hiogo are on the west side of the Gulf of Osaka. The city of Osaka is on both sides of the River Yodagawa, which flows into the gulf a few miles below the town. The passage by water from Kobe to Osaka is reckoned at fifteen miles, and the gulf and river are filled with little steamers and sailing craft. Kiyoto (Miako on the maps) is thirty miles north of Osaka. A railroad is nearly finished, which will make the ride from Kiyoto to Osaka one hour, and to Kobe two hours. In Kobe, which is one of the treaty ports, with as yet a small population, the American Board has its best Japanese congregation, consisting of twenty-three communicants. The Sabbath audiences are large and very attentive, and places in the neighborhood offer encouraging openings for the missionaries; the lady assistants, and the native helpers. Hiogo, which is but a mile away from the foreign concession Kobe, is a very conservative town. The people have no liking for foreigners, and the city opens very slowly to missionary labor. Still a beginning has been made. Recently a native physician, who attends the gospel services, threw his idol into the sea, and will probably soon confess Christ, with his family. Osaka is the chief commercial city of Japan, with a population of at least half a million. Here the mission church recently received six new members. One of them is a Samurai of high rank, who has already borne good fruit as a Christian worker. Not long ago, when on a journey south, he took with him tracts and books, and told his relatives and friends of the new way. Two or three of those added to the church at the same time with himself are the fruit of his labor. He is one of the best Sabbath school teachers, and has already begun a course of promising usefulness as a preacher. In Kiyoto, which is a little larger than Osaka, the position of affairs is very interesting. It is the Buddhist stronghold in Japan, and the American Board, through the efforts of Mr. Neesima, are making it one of their chief stations. Mr. Neesima, by the assistance of the Japanese minister of education, with whom he became acquainted in America, has secured five and a half acres of land in the northern part of the city for mission premises. A school has been opened and several of the missionary families have moved to the city. This has alarmed the Buddhists. They are now endeavoring, with costly presents, to persuade the Governor to forbid the reading of the Bible in the school. Hitherto it has been read only in private houses. At latest advices the Buddhist influence was gaining ground in the battle. The Governor has grown very cold toward his blind counselor, Yamamoto, since the latter has become an ardent Christian. The Bible will, however, win the day.—Independent.

THE FLOWER GIRL.

BY LUCY LARCOM.

O my little sea-side girl,
What is in your basket growing?
Rock-weeds and bright grass,
With the slow tide ebbing, leaving
Scarlet and marsh rosemary
All along the wet stone creeping
Sea-work, beach-peas, jingled pod,
Out of nooks and corners peeping.

Dusky little prairie girl,
What's in bloom among your grasses?
Purple beauties, painted cups,
Blushing where the South wind passes,
Bells of rose-pink centaury,
Compass-flowers to northward turning,
Larkspur, orange-gold primrose,
Leagues of lilies flame-red burning.

O my little mountain girl,
Have you anything to gather
White enough to match you?
Not afraid of wind or weather
Sweet brier, leading mother-vine,
Light the lady-fern hides under,
Harebell, violets white and blue,
Whirling sweeter flowers I wonder.

O my little four-year-three,
Don't lay your pretty posies
Scattered, round to die so free,
Pressing grasses, mountain roses—
Only a few of steel and moss,
Come and bend your bright heads now
Through all your life-sons are
Your three human flowers are dearer.

From Our Little Friends.

DEAR MR. EDITOR: We are two little girls, and, like many others, we love to read the stories in the Child's Corner. As there are so many little girls and boys who write to you, we thought that we would try and write too. We have preaching every Sabbath. Mr. Hasty was our preacher last year. We all thought a great deal of him, and hope that he has a good circuit this year. Our preacher this year is Mr. Tilley. We all like him very much. We have a good Sabbath school. We like to go very much. Our teacher is Mrs. McTyeire. We think a great deal of her—she is so kind to us. If you do not think this too long, please publish it.

From your little friends,

Gilbert Stuart's Later Life.

In 1793 Stuart returned to America, and for a few months remained in New York, painting the portraits of the most famous men and women of the time. He then went to Philadelphia, then the capital of the new republic, "his highest ambition in life," as he declared, "being to paint the face of Washington." There is a story of his first introduction to the Father of his Country, significant of the character of the two men. Stuart's natural ease of manner for self-conceit, as we may choose to think it, had often carried him unabashed into the presence of royalty in Europe. The man of genius, he declared, honored kings by his notice. But when Secretary Dandridge brought him into the little parlor where Washington awaited him he utterly lost his self-possession, and stood awed and dumb for several minutes. The President talked to him quietly until he recovered himself. There must have been some fine quality in Stuart himself thus to appreciate the majesty of simple truth.

The painter lived in Germantown, a quiet little suburb of Philadelphia, to which the yellow fever that year had driven President Washington and the officers of State. He turned an ivy-grown stable or barn in a field near his house into a studio, and there he executed the truest and greatest work of his life, the head of Washington, working at it with a patient and anxious zeal. Something of the sincerity of his sitter seems to have communicated itself, for the moment, to the mighty artist; and Stuart's fascination conquered even the grave and impassive Washington. After his own portrait was finished, we are told in the legends of the village that he and Lady Washington would often stroll across the fields and sit for hours in the stable studio talking to the painter as he worked. The portrait of Washington, in fact, was not finished at all; when the head was done Stuart declared he would never touch it again, and never did, although he finished inferior copies made from it, sold them, and squabbled about the selling. This one great picture was bought by the Boston Athenæum, to which it now belongs. It gives us, perhaps, our only true knowledge of the appearance of Washington, if we except the bust made by Houdin, who came from France for the express purpose of modeling it for the State of Virginia.

There are told in Germantown many stories of Stuart—of the great men, and the stately, beautiful women, who came to him to be painted and one likes to believe that in those first days of the republic all the men were great and all the women fair; of his skill, his expansion, his mad fury when angered, his generosity when pleased; at work this morning with Thomas Jefferson as his charmed, attentive listener; this afternoon kicking a coat of beef back to his butcher's in a tempest of fury; followed by the shouting, delighted boys of the village.

His record after this date is briefly told. He went to Washington, then to Boston, and there died, the first portrait painter in the country, after an old age beset by disease, debt and drink.

No boy ever set out on the journey of life with a larger capital of health, winning manner, friendships or natural ability; no man ever brought that journey to a sadder end of disappointment and loss.—Rebecca Harding Davis, in St. Nicholas.

The Two Enemies.

There was once a little boy who had everything his heart could desire—a large house, a beautiful garden, a pony and a dog, and many playthings. He had an indulgent mother and two nurses, and they all tried to please him. If he asked for sweetmeats they were given him; if he wished for coffee and cake for breakfast, instead of bread and milk, for had them. In the winter he did not walk out when it was too cold, nor in the summer when it was too hot; and yet in the evening he would look as tired as if he had broken stones all day.

When he was twelve years old his mother grew alarmed, for every day he seemed to have a new form of illness. She took him to the cleverest doctors, but the medicines were of no use, for he threw them into the corner, as he had his lesson book and his slate.

At length his mother took him to a very clever physician in a neighboring town. The physician quickly found out what ailed the little boy, and he promised to send a prescription that would cure him. The next morning this letter came:

"Dear Sir: You have two poisonous serpents within you that are consuming your vital powers daily and hourly. I cannot cure you unless you come and live an hour's distance from my house. Every morning before breakfast you must walk to my house; and then I will give you a powder, which, with a lotion in the afternoon, will kill the serpents. But the powder will be of no avail unless you go to school two hours after it; and the lotion will require a long walk before taking it. If you do not take my medicines you will not hear the birds sing next spring."

The mother of the little boy and the nurses were very angry, but the physician said that if they would not follow the prescription they might go to another doctor.

Then the mother took her sick little boy to some lodgings an hour's distance from the physician's house. The first morning the little fellow could scarcely creep along. The mother and the two nurses drove in a carriage behind him, to pick him up if he should grow too tired.

"The cruel physician!" said the nurses.

The next morning the boy was very tired, but the third and fourth days he could not help listening to the cuckoo, and thinking the air very sweet and balmy; and the fifth day he even relished the bread and milk in which the powder was mixed.

Thus for six weeks he walked, and went to school every day; his cheeks grew rosy, and his eyes bright, and he no longer pushed his bread and milk away, and he slept soundly all through the night. His mother was going to take him home, but the physician said:

"The serpents may be killed, but they may have left young ones. Unless you give him bread and milk for breakfast, and send him to school, and give him no sweetmeats, they will grow within him and kill him."

The mother gave the physician a large fee, and took her little boy home. But when he was grown up and had become a tall, strong man, he called on the physician to thank him for his prescription, for he had learned the names of the two poisonous serpents; they were Laziness and Greediness.—The Prize.

HOW SOME SHIPS ARE SCRUBBED.—It seems that in several places in the world there are volcanoes under the sea. Such volcanoes, of course, do not send up volumes of flame and smoke. Instead, they pour forth streams of sulphurous acid vapor that mingle with the sea-water. Some of these volcanoes are situated in bays where ships can safely ride at anchor.

As is well known, the bottoms of many ships are protected by a covering of copper. This copper, after a time, becomes corroded by the action of the sea-water; a sort of green mucilaginous forms, sea-mosses begin to grow, and even small sea animals like the barnacles, build their shell-houses upon it. Of course all these things roughen the ship's bottom and as the vessel gathers more and more it sails very much slower by reason of the great accumulation. Then, if she happen to be anywhere in the neighborhood of one of these submerged volcanoes, the captain sails her thither to be scoured.

This scouring process does not require hands or machinery of any sort. All that is necessary is that the ship should lie quietly at anchor where the sulphurous acid vapor, mingling with the sea-water, can gently wash her sides and bottom. In a few days or weeks, as the case may be, not a weed, not a barnacle, not a bit of the dark green mold remains, and the ship can sail off again, her copper bottom as clean and bright as when it was first put on.

I've heard boys say, speaking of this same thing, they read about it in a book called Cosmos, written by one Humboldt. Some of you may like to look into it.—St. Nicholas.

HOW TO GET TO HEAVEN.—A little boy was walking in the fields with his mother one day. He looked up to the sky and said: "O mother, heaven is so far off, I'm afraid I shall never get there."

"My dear," said his mother, "heaven must come to us before we can go to it."

He didn't understand what she meant. Then she told him what Jesus said when he was on earth. These were his words: "If a man love me . . . my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." Jesus is willing to come into your heart. He is standing and knocking for you to let him in. And when he comes in he brings heaven with him. He will make a heaven in your heart if you will let him come and dwell there; but if we don't let him come and dwell in our hearts here he won't let us go and dwell with him hereafter, Heaven must come to us before we can go to heaven.

He who has made the acquisition of a judicious and sympathizing friend may be said to have doubled his mental resources.—Robert Hall.

CHANGE OF RATES.

The New Orleans Christian Advocate will be furnished to subscribers hereafter at the following rates, including postage:

One Year	$2 00
Six Months	1 15
Three Months	75

To all Ministers of the Gospel and widows of deceased traveling preachers, $1 a year in advance.

FREE ONE YEAR

to any person forwarding to us four new yearly subscribers, with Eight Dollars.

Important.

The publisher has recently sent out lists of the Advocate accounts to the preachers. We need not say to the brethren that it is a matter of urgency to the paper that collections be made and remitted with as much promptitude as possible. Our church papers in these times are sailing close to the wind, and it is only with care and vigilance that they can be kept agoing. Our subscribers and agents have done pretty well thus far. Will they suffer this word of exhortation, in which we urge them to continue in well-doing, and to send new subscribers, while they collect and remit with all practicable diligence? At $2 a year, postage paid, we must have a large list of paying subscribers and a liberal advertising patronage in order to keep out of debt.

Meeting of Publishing Committee.

The Publishing Committee of the New Orleans Christian Advocate will hold its annual meeting at the Seashore Camp Ground, July 20, 1876.

The Blessed Dead.

Nothing but a voice from heaven could assure us of the happiness of the dead. To be blessed is to be. Annihilation would be the negation of everything. Positive blessedness can be affirmed only of those who exist. The Bible is our assurance of immortality. Reason may have something to say in agreement and confirmation, but it cannot certify and assure. John on Patmos heard a voice from heaven—the voice that all may hear in the gospel—making sure of the great fact.

The condition of the blessedness is that the dead have died in the Lord. Death overtook them when they were in Christ. Not when they were in sin, not when they were in unbelief and indifferent to the claims and service of the Son of God, but when they were in Christ by faith, endued with his Spirit, and united to him by a supreme love. As they lived, so they died, in the Lord. The blessedness of death depends upon this. Whether they died in good society, in the respect and esteem of the world, or even in the church, are circumstances not alluded to. The capital thing, the material consideration, the only matter worth mentioning, was that they died in the Lord. Death comes to young people and to the aged, to the rich and the poor, but the only concern we need feel about them is: What were their relations to Christ? If in him at death, it is well with them. Not only is it well, but better than if they were still in this world of toil and trial.

One reason given by the Spirit is that the dead in Christ rest from their labors. Rest is the promise to the penitent in this life especially rest and peace to them that believe. But labor and faith go hand in hand. The greater the rest of soul from sin and doubt and fear, the more devoted and energetic are the toils of the child of God. The rest of heaven is from the weariness, the cross-bearing, the sacrifices of labor for Christ. Besides the inference that those who die in the Lord have had experience of trouble and sorrow, there is this also: that they have been busy in the Lord's vineyard. They have labored, and the rest is rest from their labors. The blessed dead have not been slothful servants—idlers in the gospel field. They have not drifted easily along while the call to work has sounded loudly in their ears. They have taken their part in the enterprises of religion, in the support of missions, in seeking out the poor, in the endeavor to save the world. If a man is in Christ he will labor for Christ, and if he dies in the Lord his is the blessedness of resting from his earthly labor. Those who are doing nothing, and yet professing to be the Lord's, living to themselves while expecting to share in the final rest of God's people, can find little comfort in the voice that cries from heaven, and in the Spirit's testimony: "That they may rest from their labors."

An element, or at least a circumstance, in the joy of the blessed dead is that "their works do follow them." The reward of them certainly goes with them, the consciousness of having done what they could made the dying pillow softer, and it will be something to think of even in heaven. And, besides, a life of Christian labor, apparently broken off, goes on in its influences. Rich men before they die sometimes arrange that their business shall continue. It was doubtless Mr. Stewart's wish that the name and style of the great firm of which he was the head should be perpetuated, and that the vast operations of the house should move on as if he were alive. The continuance of a Christian's labors are better assured and far more lasting. His labors not only follow him to heaven, but they continue to exert an influence on earth. There are those who claim to be in Christ who will have a small following, if we may judge by the meagerness of their good works. Men are not justified by their works in the sense of pardon, neither are these the ground of their final salvation, but it is nevertheless affirmed of the blessed dead that their works do follow them. Such works as are possible, of course. Exceptional cases—such as death-bed repentance and conversion where works of benevolence and piety are out of the question—are not perhaps contemplated. Then there is a wide difference in opportunity, in talent and other things; but in some degree there are fruits manifest in the believer's life, good works flow from faith and love, and these works follow him—they are neither lost to himself nor to the world which he leaves behind him.

About Several Things.

—This week the Bishops meet in Nashville to review episcopal decisions, to overlook the entire field of our church work, and to arrange the episcopal districts for the coming year. The Book Committee and the Board of Missions also hold their annual meetings. The most important interests of our church are to be considered, and we trust that those who have them in charge will take time for mature deliberation, and for the most careful and thorough examination. Instead of four days, it might be well to devote a whole week or more of working-time to the matters which are to be arranged. There should, at least, be no hurry, as the great enterprises of the church depend for their success upon the policy, plans and methods that may be adopted.

—The General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has just opened in Baltimore. We sustain no relations to the denomination which this body represents, but the similarity of our doctrines and polity give to our people a certain interest in the proceedings. Several important organic changes will probably be agitated, such as the modification of the presiding eldership and the episcopacy, but we judge that in the final result things will be left very much as they are. In reference to the fraternity question, for ourselves, we feel very little interest in it beyond the maintenance of our own honor and consistency as a church. If the Methodist Episcopal Church cannot meet us on the ground which we have always occupied since 1818, then let the subject be dropped, and let the matter rest. If a formal settlement of pending difficulties cannot be made, the next best thing is to have no adjustment whatever. Courtesies have been already exchanged, and these may be continued, or suspended, as individuals or Conferences may feel inclined.

—As the time for the meeting of the national conventions approaches, the claims and prospects of the men whose names are likely to be before them are being discussed with increasing earnestness. And yet the most astute can hardly venture to predict who the candidates for the presidency will be. Grant is, of course, no longer thought of, and Grantism, as represented by such men as Morton and Conkling, is regarded with aversion by the most reputable Republicans. The Democratic convention meets later than the other, and the prospects of any one man are as yet not very prominent. The effect of the investigations and disclosures of corruption in government officials will probably be to compel both parties to put forward men who have a clear record, and whose names are above reproach.

—The grand Centennial Exhibition will be opened and inaugurated next week. It may prove a fine thing for Philadelphia, especially at such a time as this, when business is depressed and trade almost stagnant. Patriotism is expected to pay, and our impoverished Southern people will probably spend thousands on the railroads and hotels of the North. We would not discourage those who are bent upon a trip to the Centennial. But those who undertake it will have trouble in the flesh. Even with reduced railroad fare it will be expensive, owing to the exorbitant charges which are likely to be encountered at the hotels and in other ways. And, then the crush and hubbub, and general discomfort and annoyances of rushing throngs and crowds, are to be taken into the account. There will be things worth seeing, and things which we may not be able to see anywhere else, but those who go will have to pay roundly for the sight. Of the patriotism that there may be in the Centennial Exhibition we make but little account. In view of all the circumstances, we would not glory over much for the present. Our national manners, morals and political principles need mending sadly. It would be better to wait another hundred years before we indulge in much national self-glorification. By that time the results of our experiment in government, and of our boasted civil liberty, will be more accurately ascertained. The anticipated happy effect of the Centennial in promoting confidence and brotherly love between the North and South, we trust, may be realized. Exactly how we do not see, but still if the people of the sections are thrown together pell-mell, lodged in the same hotels, eat at the same tables, and together gather around the same objects, they may, perforce, understand each other better. A little honesty, fairness and justice in the political treatment of the South would, however, go farther than a thousand centennials toward healing the wounds of sectional strife.

—The majority of our readers are country folk, and it is for their behoof chiefly that we clip the best things we can find. For thorough, appreciative readers, commend us to the country people. They have a fresh eye for good things, and a wholesome appetite for choice morsels of literature and religion. We mean no unjust reflection upon our urban (and we might write it our urbane) citizens, but they are apt to be sated with excitements, and already full of news and of current affairs before the Advocate reaches them. Then, again, they are weary in the toils of trade, and in the struggle for bread, and can hardly undertake a column and a quarter editorial. We know where the most of our readers are, and, as the sultry May opens upon us, we are thinking of them as field and garden, orchard and flowers occupy their thoughts. Those who have homes in the country, and ground whereon to raise their bread, ought to be content. In the city we meet with respectable people every day out of employment, out of bread, and burdened with suffering families. A cabin in the country, a patch and a mule, would be a boon to them. Our country friends have their troubles—churches and schools are not always near, and rains and overflow, drouth and worms, come to baffle and disappoint; but, on the whole, they are better off than city people who have if bare subsistence, and certainly better off than thousands who have no roof of their own and no certain dwelling-place. Be content, plant corn, raise potatoes, take care of the pigs and calves, make what cotton is practicable, pray, read the Advocate, and keep out of debt.

—Our friends in city and country are asking about the times—when are they to see better. Perhaps never, except as we make better times for ourselves. Make all your plans and calculations upon the basis of hard times. The jetties may succeed, and the Texas railroad may be built, and the season may be propitious, and cotton may bring a better price. But who can tell? We may have to fight it out on this line, or a worse. It is well to be hopeful. Christians should be cheerful and rejoice in the Lord always. But there is not likely to be any sudden springing up of general prosperity. We must make the times good for ourselves by accepting the present as the average, and by shaping our plans and business accordingly. The South is the garden spot of America, and is suffering no more than other sections. Let our people stay where they are, and; determined, energetic and economical, they can build up their fortunes and make a living here better than anywhere else.

Secret Disciples.

Perhaps the Lord's public call to an open, courageous discipleship originated in a tendency toward secrecy created by the large number who sought to hide convictions they could not resist.

The persons who betrayed such culpable timidity belonged to the more influential classes, as appears from the character of Joseph, reputed to be a rich man, and well known to Pilate, and Nicodemus, a ruler of the Jews. Their ascertained motive for concealment was fear—fear of public opinion, and of the power of the synagogue; but fear would have been impotent against thorough conviction. Evidently their faith did not go as far as those who openly followed Christ.

Compared with each other, the characteristic of a secret disciple is reserve, and the cause of reserve insufficient faith.

This description will fit a great many people who have not the plea attributed to the secret disciples of an earlier period. Public opinion is not now in the way of an open profession, nor are there any courts with power to punish the boldest confessor. Still there are disciples here and there who betray as noticeable reserve in their manners and conversation as those reported by the evangelists; and, for the advantage of a scriptural designation, may be classed as secret disciples.

Their reserve hinders their acceptance by Christ, who will not tolerate a partial following, and hinders their profiting by Christianity; their belief commits them to Christ. Their lack of faith disqualifies them for hearty, influential co-operation in the work. They believe too much ever to become satisfied with less than Christ offers; they yet hesitate to abandon themselves to the risks of the cause. What they perceive they believe, and say, with Nicodemus: "No man can do the works thou doest except God be with him."

What they know of it they like with strong feelings, and with Joseph would find courage of sentiment to ask for the dead body of Christ to give it decent burial. They are converted to the belief of Christianity, but not altogether—to the devotions of religion with some lingering misgiving; to the hopes of the gospel with some qualifying doubt.

But one thing embarrasses them—a lawless turn in their imagination. As far as they can see around, Christ is all right and safe as a leader; but there is a great beyond, which the imagination alone, of all the faculties, can reach; and there the trouble is located. In supreme control of mind and space, the imagination toys with a question of doubt. What if Christ is powerless there? If unknown there? What if there comes up a time, or there be a place, where he cannot protect such absolute faith in himself as he requires?—"Trust me all, or trust me not at all."

If the imagination is not converted, the converted reason and affection will contrive to conceal their bent and wait.

The triumph and ecstasy of faith are most conspicuous when the apostles open the gates of heaven, and, pointing to him who is there named Alpha and Omega, show that at every point of the circle, from beginning to end, Christ is there, and all-powerful.

"A faith in which the imagination believes, and questions not, consists with an open, active, joyous following of Christ." Double U.

Bishop Kavanaugh, says the Nashville Christian Advocate, writes to the book agent, from Petahuma, April 11, informing him that he cannot, as he purposed, be present at the Bishops' meeting, May 3. He has been prevailed upon to remain awhile longer in California to attend District Conferences. He has been in labors most abundant, and has proved a great blessing to the church in that region. But we are sorry that we shall not see him in May. He expects, however, to return in the last week of June. We pray God that he may be preserved in life and limb in his extensive toils and travels, and bring him back to us safe and sound. By the way, the venerable Bishop is in our debt. We hope he will soon send us more of his interesting communications from that wonderful region.

St. Paul's Station, Mobile, Ala. Rev. P. A. Peterson, pastor, writing May 1, says: "We have just closed a series of meetings at St. Paul's. Through the outpouring of the Spirit some forty or fifty were soundly converted. Many more have been revived and comforted. Thirty-two have been added to the church up to the present. Rejoice with us, for the Lord has greatly blessed us."

Washington's Teeth.

Irenæus, in the New York Observer, has this and much more about the artificial teeth which the Father of our Country endured:

At what period in his eventful life our great Washington first lost his old teeth and got these new ones does not appear in any biographies in my possession. But it was not until the year before his death that Washington addressed to Mr. Greenwood, a dentist of New York, the following letter, in which the defects of the work are set forth, and improvements suggested with that accurate detail and perspicuity which distinguish the writings of this wonderful man:

Philadelphia, 12th Dec., 1798.

Sir: Your letter of the eighth came safe, and, as I am hurrying in order to leave this city to-morrow, I must be short.

The principal thing you will have to attend to, in the alteration you are about to make, is to let the upper bar fall back from the lower one, whether the teeth are quite straight, or inclining a little in, or a little rounding outward, this is immaterial; for I find it is the bars alone, both above and below, that gives the lips the pouting and, swelling appearance—of consequence, if this can be remedied, all will be well.

I send you the old bars, which you returned to me with the new set, because you have desired. But they may be destroyed, or anything else done with them you please, for you will find that I have been obliged to file them away so much above, to remedy the evil I have been complaining of, as to render them useless, perhaps, to receive new teeth. But of this you are better able to judge than I am. If you can fix the teeth not on the new bars which you have on the old bars which you will receive with this letter, I should prefer it, because the latter are easy in the mouth; and you will perceive, moreover, that when the edges of the upper and lower teeth are put together, that the upper falls back into the mouth, which they ought to do, or it will have the effect of forcing the lip out just under the nose.

I shall only repeat again that I feel much obliged by your extreme willingness and readiness to accommodate me, and that I am, sir,

Your obed't servant,
Go. Washington.

Mr. Jno. Greenwood.

The letter was written to John Greenwood, of New York, who had a younger brother, William Pitt Greenwood, in Boston, both skilled in the practice of dentistry as then understood.

"The 'bar' referred to took the place of what is now the plate, and was made of ivory carved to an approximate adaptation to the gum, and the teeth were fastened by rivets to the bar. At that time neither the principle of complete support by atmospheric pressure nor by springs was well understood, and the support of an artificial set in the mouth depended somewhat on training of the facial muscles.

"The bulk on the thickness of the bar, together with the action of the muscles in keeping it in place, was apt to give a puffed or 'pouting' expression of the face, or some part of it. This in the case under consideration, was principally evident about the upper lip, as seen in Stuart's portrait of Washington, painted about 1796, while the subject had the set of teeth, the bar of which he had, being at a distance from the dentist, modified so much with his own hands, to obtain comfort, and, if possible, to correct the objectionable expression mentioned.

"The suggestion in regard to the 'falling back' of the upper teeth, though probably not anatomically correct, even at his age, was evidently made with reference to the same point, as an additional aid in diminishing the pouting expression of the upper lip, and in producing the original symmetry of the face which we find in Houdon's bust, made in 1785, and which is also seen in Peale's portraits.

Jacob L. Williams."

Observe that Washington specifies the pouting expression as the result of these badly-fitting teeth. And, to look at them, the wonder is that any man ever held them in his mouth five minutes. The teeth are bits of bone, scarcely trying to look like teeth, attached to gold plate with strips riveted across to strengthen the teeth in place; while coiled wire at the end of the jaws makes a spring, and assists in opening and closing the machine. They are as near to the perfect work of our day in this line as the old windmill telegraph to a Morse instrument. The Baltimore Dental College has obtained possession of them, and Drs. J. Allen & Son, of this city, preparing a case of their workmanship for exhibition at the Centennial in Philadelphia, have secured the loan of them to put into the foreground of their magnificent display, that the present generation may see what the Father of his Country endured in the times that tried men's souls. He must have been a man of exemplary patience and fortitude to have borne with these things in his mouth. As to eating with them, or talking with them in, it would seem impossible; but it is probable they answered the purpose very well, for it is not always the handsomest-looking machine that does the best work.

May we not ask, says the Richmond Christian Advocate, that all the brethren will aid in increasing the circulation of the Advocate? We do not know how a Methodist gets on without a church paper. Now that the work of God is going on with unusual power all over the world, how can Christians consent to live in ignorance of the great religious movements of the day? We hope to have a handsome increase this spring from all our charges. It would be a benefit to all our new members if they could be induced to take the church paper. Let us have good lists from the new members.

Boned Preaching.

Under this heading the Christian Intelligencer says:

For some years past it has been a discouraging characteristic that large audiences have been drawn together and held by a style of preaching that disparaged and oftentimes ridiculed evangelical truth. A great congregation and a popular speaker have too frequently been equivalent to reckless teaching and reckless hearing. The masses have been told that theology is a skeleton, and should be buried out of sight with other skeletons. Distinct and definite statements, especially those that relate to man's guilt and danger, to the wrath of God and the necessity of fleeing from it, have been stigmatized as dry bones. That incorrigible jester, Sydney Smith, told an old lady, who asked him how he managed to keep cool during the very hot weather, that he took off his flesh and sat in his bones. These preachers reverse this method. They take out their bones and sit in their flesh. And what a mess they make of theology. What a flabby pulp is their sermonizing. Their discourse has no organization. "A very eloquent talker indeed," said Hazlitt of a certain person, "if you let him start with no premises and come to no conclusion." The remark was untrue of the distinguished man respecting whom the acrid Hazlitt said it, but it is strictly true of certain pulpiteers who, during the last decade, have been styled by the newspapers the greatest preachers of the age. Some of these sermons have been published, and constitute several volumes. He who should sit down and endeavor to deduce from them a series of truths for the guidance of man in his search for salvation would be greatly perplexed. Orthodoxy upon one page is contradicted by heresy on the next. The reader is told in one breath that he must seek salvation, and in the next that he is already safe enough. Regeneration is now the work of God, and now man's self-improvement." From the mass of self-contradictions, however, the hearer is certain to derive the impression that the looser statement is the better of the two. The orthodoxy is, after all, merely a rope thrown for the whale to play with while the harpoon is being aimed at his vitals. In this way the popular audience has been wheedled into belief and reception of deadly error under the guise of evangelical religion, and from a preacher of evangelical connections. From the pulpit and through the press this kind of religious teaching has spread through society, and has seriously weakened the religious faith of the masses.

There are indications now of a change for the better. We think that the worst has been seen, and that the tide has turned. The so-called liberal religion begins to be looked at suspiciously. Many see that loose theory is likely to end in loose practice, lax theology in lax morality. The common sense of men cannot be abused too long. The popular audience, after a time, becomes weary of self-contradictions, and desires to be fed, as St. Paul fed his audiences, "with knowledge and understanding." May we not expect that as the masses are now ready to go, day after day of the secular week, to hear the plain and unadorned but thoroughly earnest and pungent statement of evangelical truth, from men who believe what they say, so they will continue to like this style, and that the period of boned preaching for the masses is over and gone?

Founder's Day.—Mr. Vanderbilt was born May 27, 1794. His birthday is to be observed as a perpetual holiday by the officers and students of the Vanderbilt University. To add interest to the occasion a prize for oratory, called the Founder's Prize, has been established, and for which there will be four competitors elected annually by the literary societies—two from the dialectic and two from the philosophic. Other exercises will be ordered by the faculty. On the approaching twenty-seventh of May two addresses will be delivered—one by the president of the board of trust, and one by the chancellor of the university.

New Orleans District Conference.—The Conference will meet in the Carondelet Street church on Thursday night, May 11, at half-past seven o'clock. The subsequent hours of meeting will be determined by the Conference. On Friday night, at half-past seven o'clock, there will be a district love-feast. The Sunday-school anniversary will be held on Sunday, May 14, at four o'clock P. M., at the Carondelet Street church.

J. B. Walker, P. E.

Rev. John A. Miller, presiding elder of the Homer district, Louisiana Conference, writing April 17, says: "I have just closed my first round of quarterly meetings. Notwithstanding the heavy rains, high waters and bad weather generally, we were able to get to every quarterly meeting, and the Lord gave us some good, refreshing seasons. The preachers on the Homer district are doing a good work. God grant that success may crown their efforts!"

Rev. A. J. Briggs, writing from Summerfield, April 24, says: "Bro. Shores, our pastor here, is walking on the high places. He is in the midst of a gracious revival. Sinners are being converted and taking refuge in the church of Christ."

Correct This Time.—The Shiloh Camp Meeting begins on Wednesday (not Thursday,) July 19. We gave the right date but wrong day last week. Wednesday, July 19, is the time.

The postoffice address of Rev. T. Daves is Keachie, La.

Manufacturing Stigmata.

Our readers are familiar, says the New York Observer, with the repeated attempts of Roman Catholic priests and bishops of Europe to impose upon the superstition of the faithful in order to obtain money for the church or personal uses. A favorite method is to persuade some fanatic devotee to have the marks of our Savior's passion impressed, by a surgical operation, upon her hands and feet, under the pretense that the marks were miraculously made. The thing has been attempted in this country. The following account of the exposure of such a case in Germany is taken from the British Medical Journal of the twelfth ultimo. This journal is a leading medical authority, and is wholly scientific in character. The exposure is made in the interest of science, and we copy it in the interest of religion.

"On January 11 the case of Miss Ernestine Hanser came on before the Civil Court of Breisach, Grand Duchy of Baden. Miss Hauser had stated to her parents and her physician that several priests had induced her to wear a tight rope around the loins as a sure means of pleasing the Deity. When on the brink of the grave from this constant torture, the attempt was made to cut her feet and produce stigmata. The skin became filled with blood owing to the pressure exercised by the rope, this bleeding, according to medical opinion, would be sure to produce profuse bleeding. One of the two priests concerned in this affair, and mentioned by the young lady in her confession, brought an action for libel against the physician who had published the story. The action, however, was withdrawn previous to trial. A little later the other priest induced the girl for telling the physician falsehoods at his expense. The case was lately tried, and, ending in the acquittal of the young lady, virtually amounts to a judicial corroboration of the alleged attempt to produce another case like Lateau. During the trial counsel for the crown expressed regret that the priests could not be prosecuted without the consent of the young lady, which she had refused to give."

The same journal states that "Louise Lateau is announced to be dying of all the phenomena of ecstasy, a victim of a speculation on the supernatural and the superstitious."

Periodicals.

Wide Awake for May is the most wide-awake of any of the current periodicals. It is splendidly illustrated, and full of good things. Our only objection to this publication is that our boys are always asking if it has come; and when they get it they do not sleep till it is read through.

Lippincott's Magazine for May has The Century, continued; Glimpses of Constantinople; Berlin and Vienna; An Old House and Its Owners; Letters from South Africa; The Life of George Ticknor, and other articles.

The Atlantic Monthly for May has: The Khedive and His Court, The Madness of George the Third, Political Fashions, After the Battle of the Wilderness, Literary Aspects of the Romantic School, and other articles.

Golden Hours and Ladies' Repository for May have been received. Nelson & Phillips, New York, and Hitchcock & Walden, Cincinnati, Publishers.

We have received from the publisher, F. W. Helmick, Cincinnati, a song and music: "That Banner Six Hundred Years Old."

Morton's Monthly Home and School for May has been received, a good number of a valuable periodical.

The Southern Musical Journal for April has been received. It is published at Savannah, Ga.

The Sanitarian for May is an excellent number of this valuable periodical.

KNOW WHERE HE IS GOING.—Philip Henry, the father of the celebrated commentator, sought the hand of the only daughter and heiress of Mr. Matthews, in marriage, an objection was made by her father, who admitted that he was a gentleman, a scholar and an excellent preacher; but he was a stranger, and "they did not even know where he came from." "True," said the daughter, "but I have well weighed the excellent qualities and graces of the stranger. I know where he is going, and I shall like to go with him," and she walked life's pilgrimage together. How honored would that pleasant father have been could he have foreseen that his daughter would be the mother of Matthew Henry! Oh, how different would be the world's estimate of men if they were valued less by their origin, and more by their destiny! There is one pride of family highly commendable; there is another pride of family heaven-contemptible.

The collections at the Moody and Sankey meetings in New York last week amounted to $160,000. Mr. Moody said that if they could collect $200 a gentleman had volunteered to subscribe $50,000. It is intended to turn all the money over to the Young Men's Christian Association to pay a debt of $150,000 on their building, and the other $100,000 is wanted for keeping up revival meetings and building branches of the Young Men's Christian Association of the city.

At the closing meeting held by Moody and Sankey in New York on April 19, $143,000 was subscribed for the Young Men's Christian Association of that city.

MARRIED.

RHODES—HEARNE.—At the residence of the bride's mother, February 23, 1876, by Rev. Robert Randle, Mr. Edgar Rhodes to Miss Clara E. Hearne, all of Caddo parish, La.

TEAT IVEY.—At the residence of the bride's father, April 16, 1876, by Rev. Robert Randle, Mr. H. T. Teat to Miss Laura A. Ivey, all of Caddo parish, La.

DAVISON STALLWORTH.—At the residence of the bride's mother, on the fifth of April, 1876, by Rev. J. L. Skipper, Dr. S. D. Davison, of Reagan, Falls county, Tex., to Miss Kate B. Stallworth, of Pineville, Monroe county, Ala.

ABERNETHY-FOSTER.—At the residence of the bride's mother, Mrs. E. Johnson, on the nineteenth of April, 1876, by Rev. J. L. Skipper, Rev. T. Y. Abernethy, of the Alabama Conference, to Mrs. L. J. Foster, of Monroe county, Ala.

SULLIVAN—JOHNSON.—April 19, 1876, by Rev. T. E. Scurlock, Mr. M. P. Sullivan to Miss Bettie L. Johnson, all of Franklin, La.

MEQUET-COLLINS.—April 25, 1876, by Rev. J. E. Scurlock, Mr. Alfred Mequet to Miss Alice E. Collins, all of Franklin, La.

JORDAN OSWALD.—At the residence of the bride's parents, in the city of Natchez, Miss., on the twenty seventh of April, A. D. 1876, by Rev. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, Mr. Isaac Izard Jordan, of London, and Miss Louisa M. Oswald.

Precious as are doctrines, it is a solecism to say that abstract truth feeds the soul. That is the mind's food, as ill adapted to the soul as bread and meat. The soul needs God, and can feast alone on a personal Savior. Take away the person of Christ from the doctrines, and they are as pitiless as stones. Even a golden goblet will not satisfy thirst. It is the water it bears. Doctrines are but water-bearers, useless when emptied of Christ.

Toleration is a word that should not be spoken among Christians; for toleration is a very proud, intolerant word.—Haubner.

Publisher's Department.

PAY FIFTEEN CENTS AND SAVE US $1,200.

The subscription price of the ADVOCATE is Two Dollars per annum—not $1.75, $1.50 or $1.25. A few subscribers deduct fifteen cents, subtract fifty cents, and some twenty-five cents, for expense of remitting. We wish to assure them they are making our money to pay their expenses. We cannot afford to take the risk of remittances, as we do when sent in money orders or registered letters, and pay the expense of remittance.

To each subscriber this should not be more than fifteen cents, while to us it we lose fifteen cents by each subscriber, it amounts to over Twelve Hundred Dollars.

Under the new postal law we prepay the postage for all subscribers. During one year, ending this day, we have paid out one Thousand and Seventy-nine Dollars and Twenty-three cents expense for postage. In view of this, and the trifling expense to each subscriber, we hope they will send the full amount due us. When our agents remit what they have collected, without receiving commissions, we cannot expect them to pay the expense.

SALES OF SEWING MACHINES.—In our advertising columns will be found the comparative sales of fifteen sewing machines manufacturing sewing machines in the United States during the year 1875. It will be found by these figures that the Singer machine has largely exceeded the sales of any other. We think the company fortunate in the selection of such a one for their office. Those who visit their depot at 91 Canal street will find Mr. Randle well adapted to the post, and if this agent a gentleman as they will not fail to be a pleasure to deal with.

MENS FURNISHING GOODS.—There is no better place to buy mens furnishing goods than the establishment of B. T. Walshe, Esq., 10 Canal street. No one knows better what is needed, or how to procure it, than Mr. Walshe, and we know of no, clever or more honorable gentleman than he is. We take pleasure in recommending him, for we feel sure that those who call at our recommendation will have to be disappointed.

WE NOTICE that there has recently been an election of trustees for the New Orleans Savings Institution to fill vacancies caused by the death of Dr. Mercer and L. E. Generes, Esq. Among other names of well-known gentlemen we find that of our friend, Col. E. A. Palfrey, president of the Factors' and Traders' Insurance Company, and A. Moulton, Esq., agent Cromwell line of steamers.

SAIL AND AWNING-MAKER.—Camp meeting tents, sails, awnings, tarpaulins and flags can be obtained at short notice, well made and of good material, from H. Cassidy, 85 Camp street. Those who want tents for the field, for railroad surveying or for other purposes will do well to correspond with Mr. Cassidy. He has the best of material and good workmen.

THE Crystal Palace of Messrs. Navra & Offner, 120 Canal street, is very attractive. Their stock of glassware and china is not only extensive, but beautiful, and charmingly arranged for inspection and effect. They have fresh goods, of late and desirable patterns, and their prices are such as to meet the views of the most economical. Give them a call.

ICE DEPOT.—Families who wish to make satisfactory arrangements for ice during the summer are referred to the advertisement of the ice depot of Mr. William Myers, at 138 Harmony street. Mr. Myers is prepared to supply either wholesale or retail purchasers. He gives assurances of promptness and good weight.

THE ORLEANS RAILROAD COMPANY.—Elsewhere will be seen the card of the Orleans Railroad Company. This line affords a pleasant route to the Fair Grounds and Bayou St. John. For some time past we have taken this route to the bayou or Fair Grounds in preference to any other.

FANCY AND STAPLE GROCERIES.—Pipe attention of our readers is directed to the card of Thomas Owen in our advertising columns. Mr. Owen has a well assorted supply of choice articles in his line, and we think he understands how to lay in stock for the advantage of his customers. Try him.

THE NEW LOUISIANA REMEDY.—A large number of persons bear testimony to the value of the New Louisiana Remedy, compounded at 103 Camp street, and sold by country merchants and druggists.

BLOOD PURIFIER.—Elsewhere will be found the advertisement of Barnett's Iodo-Sarza, kept by Messrs. Frederickson & Harte, druggists, 130 Canal street, who are the sole agents for the South.

THE REAL CENTENNIAL ROUTE.—Those who contemplate a trip to the Centennial or to the East should read the card in our advertising columns, setting forth the advantages of the Pan-Handle route.

ONE of the most attractive of the Canal street stores is Navra & Offner's China and glassware establishment.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE.—We desire to pay a just and well-deserved tribute to that which was esteemed one of the most valuable inventions (Dr. Le's Electro Chemo-Vitalic Belt) ever discovered in the application of electricity to diseases of the human body. Paralysis, rheumatism, Bailiac pleurisies, whose fame and great attainments have won him high honors in every country, was the inventor of this simple yet wonderful instrument, which, placed about the human body, brings the unknown power of electricity unsuspected now as generated and created curative agents to battle with the most obstinate diseases, to restore enfeebled health and regenerate the whole system. Every improvement on the Pulvermacher Belt is the study today to refresh you and comfort in wearing the cream, covered; as it is with the leather, and we recommend to those afflicted with chronic or nervous diseases to the surest and speedy remedy to be found. The office for the Pacific Belt Company [sole] Union square, New York. Eclectic Medical and Surgical Journal, March, N. Y.

SYMPTOMS.—Slight pain in the side the skin and eyes assume a dark yellow color, digestion is impaired, an unpleasant sinking sensation at the pit of the stomach is experienced, the bowels are irregular, the coated tongue, the memory weakened, sometimes a slight cough coldness of the hands and feet, sometimes loss of appetite, and at others unnatural craving for food, dizziness of the head, depressed spirits, feeling of uncertainty, of having left something undone but can't tell what it is. Take Simmons' Liver Regulator it will remove all unpleasant feelings and make you well.

COLDS AND COUGHS.—Sudden changes often create the sources of Pulmonary and Bronchial Affections. Take at once Dr. Wm. Scott's Pine Balsam, for the cold, cough or irritation at the throat is ever so slight.

DR. W. E. SCOTT, president of the College of Physicians, Montreal, writes: "I have recommended Lactopeptine Extract of Beef and Bone Tonic as the best preparation used for Debility, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Fever, Ague, etc." Sold by all druggists.

The Real Centennial Route!
PAN-HANDLE AND
PENNSYLVANIA RAILROAD CO.
The Only Line Running Passenger Coaches on to the Grounds of FAIRMOUNT PARK, at Philadelphia.

MANY HOURS QUICKER than any other route, it being the shortest, and not requiring excessive speed to reach the Centennial Grounds, where the new and handsome Hotels are erected, within ten minutes' walk of the MAIN CENTENNIAL BUILDING. The Pennsylvania Railroad cars stop directly in front of these magnificent and palatial Hotels—a great advantage to visitors who desire to visit the entire NATIONAL JUBILEE.

Three Daily Express Trains from Cincinnati, making close connection, without a single wait or lay-over, with all trains from New Orleans and the South. By this route, it must be recollected that from New Orleans, via Louisville, the time between New Orleans and New York is only Seventy-two Hours and Eleven Minutes. But one change from New Orleans to New York or Philadelphia, and no change from Cincinnati.

Steel Rails and Stone Ballast the entire route, with double and treble tracks, and the best system of railroad telegraphing in the country—which insures perfect safety. The Scenery along the line of the route is historical—combining nature with art, and forming a perfect panorama of the country—blending, as it does, hill and dale, mountains and valley, waterfalls and cascades, mountain rivers and dumb log cabins; in fact, as the European tourists say: "It is the Alpine country of America." All the principal manufacturing towns and State capitals (Columbus, Harrisburg and Trenton) are along this great thoroughfare.

No Other Route Offers Equal Facilities. The traveler, by this route, can breakfast in the Mississippi valley, dine at the capital of Pennsylvania, and take supper at New York. This is wonderful, even in this age of rapid progress; but the PENNSYLVANIA ROUTE is equal to the occasion, as every traveler who knows the difference in routes will soon state.

For full particulars call at the Railroad offices, corner Camp and Common streets, New Orleans.

HERMETICALLY SEALED
COOKED MEATS.
CORNED BEEF.

We have no comments to make in reference to our corned beef, except to call the attention of the trade to the fact that our Fourteen Pound Cans are warranted perfect, and are comparatively cheaper than the old style package. The popular way of handling this article is for the retail dealer to open the can and cut the meat in quantities to suit his customers.

SUGAR CURED HAM.

To meet a demand from the trade which we have had for over a year, we are now packing SUGAR CURED TOBSMOKED HAM, packed in the same style as our other goods. Successful as we may have been with our Cooked Corn Beef, we have no doubt of having more marked success with this article. The package is sightly, and the MEAT IS SIMPLY PERFECTION. We guarantee perfect satisfaction, and you cannot fail to handle this article profitably.

BEEF TONGUE.

We take special pride in offering this article to the trade; it is the "Creme de la Creme" of all our goods. Nothing of the kind has ever been offered to the trade that can compare with it in excellence. Use first by ourselves, and is entirely free from the ROOT OF THE TONGUE, which is really nothing but Corned Beef. Try a case and be satisfied that it is the highest terms to your trade. The goods warrant it.

FRESH BEEF.

This article is excellent for Pot Pies, Stews, Mince Pies and Sandwiches, and is a delicacy for Lunches or the Tea Table.

MEDICAL.

IF YOU FEEL DULL, DROWSY, DEBILITATED, have frequent headache, mouth tastes badly, poor appetite, and tongue coated, you are suffering from torpid liver or "biliousness," and nothing will cure you so speedily and permanently as to take Simmons' Liver Regulator.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient, how they recovered health, cheerful spirits and good appetite. They will tell you by taking Simmons' Liver Regulator or Medicine.

Extract of a letter from Hon. Alexander H. Stephens, dated March 8, 1872: "I occasionally use, when my condition requires it, Dr. Simmons' Liver Regulator with good effect. It is mild, and suits me better than more active remedies." 52pte

The Buffalo Lithia Waters.

REMARKABLE relief of GRAVEL, and still more remarkable relief of DYSPEPSIA of thirty years' standing. A person who for five years lived upon Crackers and Tea, eats Bacon, Cabbage and Turnips.

Case of Capt. James Covington, a well-known and highly respected citizen of Halifax county, Va.:

MT. LAUREL, HALIFAX CO., VA.,
February 9, 1876.

Col. T. F. Goode: Dear Sir—Some eighteen months ago I was attacked by a very painful affection of the bladder. Under the treatment of two physicians of high standing I grew steadily worse, until my sufferings were beyond description, and I was compelled to resort to morphia almost constantly for relief. I was unable to give any attention to my business, and had despaired of relief from any source, when in September last I was advised to try the Buffalo Lithia Water.

Though within less than a day's ride of the Springs, my condition was such that I was unable to get to them, and consequently sent for the Waters and used it at home. After using it for a few days I was sorely relieved that I could do without the morphia, and continued to improve for some six weeks, when I had an attack of great violence, from which I was relieved by the discharge of a large gravel, since which I have discharged three smaller ones, with but slight pain. I am now able to ride on horseback or to walk at pleasure, and I am now attending regularly to my business affairs. I had been for thirty years a great sufferer from Dyspepsia, and for the last fifteen years had been throwing up yellow water from my stomach. For two years I had not been able to eat Animal or Vegetable food of any description, and during that period lived upon Crackers and Tea, and other similar articles. In using the Waters for Gravel I was relieved of Dyspepsia.

I now eat Bacon, Cabbage, Turnips, and anything else that I want, without inconvenience. I used the water of Spring No. 2, and believe it to be all that is claimed for it.

Respectfully yours,
JAMES COVINGTON.

Capt. Covington has made a slight change in the foregoing statement since its first publication. It is but one of many similar cases relieved by those Waters. They are for sale in cases of one dozen half-gallon bottles at $5 per case, in advance. The Buffalo pamphlet sent to any address.

Farm, Garden and Household.

The Use of Oxen in Husbandry.

It occurs to us that, among the many systems now proposed for economizing time, labor and means, one of the most important has been entirely overlooked—the use of oxen in husbandry, as substitutes for horses and mules. This was formerly done, and is now often done in the New England States, where oxen were trained to draw the plow and to make long journeys. When young the animals were taught a quick motion, accustomed to the use of the bit, and shod with cloven shoes.

At first thought our suggestion may seem impracticable, but we think that a little examination of the matter will satisfy our farmer friends that we have very cogent reasons for our suggestions. In the first place, the first cost of maintaining horses upon a farm must be at least twice that necessary to keep enough oxen to do the same amount of labor. Horses are a more precarious property, subject to a greater variety of accidents and diseases, and, when past labor, a heavy loss to their owners. Oxen, on the contrary, increase in value till their ninth or tenth year, and the profit from their labor in the meantime amply repays the farmer for the expense incurred in raising and training them. When no longer capable for labor, instead of being a loss to the owner, by death, they are a profit. If, therefore, an ox, fatted for beef at ten years of age, sells for enough to pay for maintaining him to that age, his labor is a clear profit. There are other important considerations to be thought of in this connection:

1. By increasing the number of cattle, addition is made to the quantity of manure made on the farms of the country.

2. There will be an increase in the quantity of beef, pork, cheese, butter, candles and soap for market, by an increase of the cattle, each additional cow enabling a farmer to raise an additional hog. Soap, that would not rot the clothing so much, would also be obtained, instead of the destructive stuff now sold and largely bought, even by the farmers.

3. There would be more hides to tan, leather would be cheaper, and the farmer indirectly benefited in the decreased price of harness, etc., of all descriptions.

4. Horse stock is now very low in value. A farmer cannot make a stallion of every colt he has, and it does not pay him to maintain him for sale. It hardly pays to raise him for his own use. Oxen, however, are always salable. Every part of them is valuable, and, when not needed on the farm, they can be fattened and sold for beef at any age, from ten up.

Such are the thoughts that suggest themselves to us. We leave the matter for the cogitations of those interested in it, and would like to hear from some of our farmer friends on the subject.—Abiquis, in Farmers' Home Journal.

A Certain Cure for Rheumatism.

Judging from his articles in the Wiener Medizinische Presse, Dr. Franz Zeller is an enthusiast in the administration of caustic ammonia in rheumatism. For several years he had been a sufferer from severe muscular rheumatism in the right shoulder; he had taken all the anti-rheumatic remedies, with but little alleviation, when he began to reason that in rheumatism, as in gout, there may be a uric acid diathesis; he thought the liquor ammonia, on account of its rapid volitilization, would be the remedy most readily absorbed, and the most prompt in action. In almost the same moment in which he took one drop, diluted with water, he felt a complete relief from his pain, which had lasted for ten hours; he was now able to move freely the arm which, an instant before, he could scarcely bear to have touched. The remedy, he claims, has proved a positive cure in all recent cases of muscular rheumatism which have fallen under his observation; he cites numerous cases in which relief, as instantaneous as his own, was experienced. He also observed its effects in several cases of acute articular rheumatism, in two of which six drops sufficed to subdue the pain and swelling within a period of twenty-four hours. In one case of chronic rheumatism of a finger joint, which had lasted over half a year, the simple administration of the ammonia completely dispelled the inflammation and pain within two days. He then discusses the mode of action of his remedy. "If we consider an excessive acidity as the cause of rheumatism, we can scarcely chain, in the cases in which one drop will instantly relieve the pain in recent rheumatism, that one drop was sufficient to counteract the effects of the excess of uric or according to Fuller lactic acid. Nothing remains, therefore, but for us to seek the source of rheumatism in a morbid nervous activity, induced by disturbances of nutrition, and to believe that the ammonia acts as a nervine directly upon the nerves." After the cure of one attack of rheumatism our object should be to put the patient in such a condition as to prevent the recurrence. This, the writer thinks, can be done by building up the general system, and thus diminishing the nervous excitability. The Clinic.

DRYING SWEET CORN.—Mrs. L. L. French, of Richfield Springs, sends us a sample of dried sweet corn, and says that with her mode of drying it she never has any difficulty in keeping it until it is eaten up. The corn sent was very dry, and would, evidently keep an indefinite time. The following is the process of drying: The corn is gathered at the most suitable state for boiling, not too old nor too green; a thin slice is taken off all around the outside of the ears with a sharp knife, taking off as little as possible, yet cutting the top off from every kernel. Then with the back of the knife the ears are scraped, taking out all the inside of the kernels, and leaving the skins and hulls on the cobs. The milky mass is then spread on plates, and dried in a quick oven, but not so hot as to scorch it. After it is nearly dried it is put into thin muslin bags and hung up around the stove until thoroughly dry. In order to keep it over summer it is put into muslin bags, and these are covered with paper, pasted (not tied), so that insects cannot get in.—Country Gentleman.

FATTENING HOGS.—In regard to the number of times per day hogs should be fed, when put up for fattening, my experience in the matter is this: When hogs are as old as they should be, after putting them in the pen and feeding them somewhat plentifully for six or eight days, they will then bear full feeding, and they should have all that they can eat, and I care not whether it is given in one feed or in five. But about one day in each week I like to feed a little sparingly, so as to let them get a little hungry. Turning hogs into a corn field I consider a wasteful way of feeding. Still I think I have never seen hogs fatten faster than when they were feeding themselves in this manner. I do not think it best to give full feed to hogs at as early an age as some do. Putting them to pasture and giving them some grain to keep thrifty I regard as the best plan until they are twelve to sixteen months old. By this time they have age and constitution to bear being put up and full-fed. In this way they will take on flesh and fatten very fast. When hogs are penned up to be fattened they frequently fail, I think, to get water enough. It is according to my experience that we have to salt and water our stock fat, as well as to feed them fat.—Correspondent of Cincinnati Gazette.

PEAS AS A FARM CROP.—The idea has gotten hold on the public mind that it is a good thing, but a costly one. It is true that, when considered simply as a preparation for wheat, without calculating on any immediate return except through the increase of the wheat crop, the outlay of money and labor might form a considerable item; but I am confident that a return much more immediate, and even, if possible, more valuable, may be realized. If farmers would give one field to the pea, to be drilled in with one hundred pounds of superphosphate to the acre, and, after maturity, fed down upon the ground to hogs, the pork realized would more than pay the entire expense of the pea crop, and leave the land almost if not quite in as good a condition as if the entire crop had been turned under, for everything would be left upon the land, except that carried away in the form of fat. I am satisfied that an acre of good peas will make at least one hundred pounds of pork, which will pay all the expense attending the crop twice over.—Correspondent of Southern Farmer.

STEWING DRIED PRUNES.—Wash them thoroughly, and let them soak in a little warm water on the back part of the stove for a few hours; then put them into a preserving kettle, with the same liquor—not pouring off the sediment at the bottom. Add a few sticks of cinnamon. Let them stew slowly for an hour, and then add a pint of good cider to every quart of prunes, and then stew for twenty minutes longer, adding sugar to taste; but only a small supply is needed, unless you want them very sweet. Cooked in this way, they make a delicious pie, and are always an excellent dish for the tea table.—Daisy Eyebright, in Country Gentleman.

The Los Angeles (Cal.) Herald says that at the present rate of increase it is estimated there will be in four years one million stands of bees in Los Angeles, Santa Barbara and San Bernardino counties, which will produce annually one hundred million pounds of honey, worth $20,000,000, which is more than the value of the sugar and molasses crop of Louisiana, Texas and Florida combined.

ITALIAN BEEFSTEAK.—Score a steak transversely with a sharp knife, cutting it through; lay it in a stewpan with a small piece of butter; season it with pepper and salt, and an onion chopped fine. Let it cook three-quarters of an hour in its own gravy, and serve hot.

PREACHING BEFORE THE LORD MAYOR.—Dr. Harris relates that while Dr. Manton was minister at Covent Garden, he was called on to preach before the Lord Mayor and the companies of the city, at St. Paul's. He studied for the occasion an elaborate discourse, and was heard by the most intelligent part of his congregation with great admiration. But as he was returning home in the evening a poor man pulled the sleeve of his gown, and asked if he was the gentleman who had preached before the Lord Mayor in the morning. On the doctor's replying in the affirmative, the man added: "Sir, I came with the hope of getting some good for my soul, but I was greatly disappointed, for I could not understand a great deal of what you said; you were quite above me." The doctor wept and replied: "Friend, if I did not give you a sermon, you have given me one; and, by the grace of God, I will never again play the fool in preaching before the Lord Mayor in such a manner."

The general cry is against ingratitude, but surely the complaint is misplaced—it should be against vanity. None but direct villains are capable of willful ingratitude; but almost everybody is capable of thinking the bath done more than another deserves, while the other thinks he hath received less than he deserves.—Pope.

DUCONGE'S

PECTORAL BALSAMIC SIR

NEARLY half a century has elapsed since the discovery of this wonderful compound, its well-established virtue and its high reputation in all ailments of the Chest, Lungs, Breast and Throat, is so well known, and has been tested for so many years, by such extensive patronage, that it is unnecessary, at this late day, to dwell at length on its efficacy in Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Inflammation of the Throat, Stomach or Lungs, Spitting of Blood and Whooping Cough.

It has been found highly beneficial in all inflammatory disorders, such as Rheumatism, Inflammation or Dysentery and Summer Complaint, and especially in those cases of Cholerine which, for want of proper care, so often degenerate into real Cholera.

In all affections of the Lungs, verging on consumption, it has been found most effectual in preventing that most awful scourge to which it is too frequently resorted to.

Besides its acknowledged certainty of curing truly extraordinary medicine has, over most compounds of the same nature, the decided advantage that, owing to its agreeable flavor, it can be administered without the least difficulty to children, and requires no particular diet. It is also perfectly safe, not only because the bottles containing it are less than any other, but owing to its peculiar composition this Syrup will keep for years without losing, and it can be used in families where every dose is to be measured by simply keeping the bottle well corked.

Directions for Taking the Syrup.—Grown persons can take from four to six spoonfuls in the course of the day, either pure or diluted in a little water, or a less quantity at intervals of three or four hours.

Persons much troubled during the night can take two tablespoonfuls of the Syrup on going to bed, when it will stop the cough and procure a night's rest.

Children from three to five years old may take from four to six teaspoonfuls during the day, in suitable quantities, at intervals of three or four hours. For sale by

THE ONLY TRUE AND PERFECT HAIR COLORER.

THE MYSTERY,

Or Turner's Hair Tint,

HARMLESS! BEAUTIFUL! PERMANENT!

This preparation has received the indorsement of the scientific world, and wherever introduced has superseded all other preparations of the kind. No washing or preparation of the hair is necessary before using.

It is free from all Deleterious Ingredients, such as Lead, Sulphur or other compounds which are incompatible with the Hair's Permanency and Luxuriance.

And its use saves both time and labor. A few drops applied with a sponge or brush to the Hair or Whiskers, answers the purpose. The most natural color lasting so perfectly as not to admit of detection. Its great recommendation is its production of Gold, producing any desired shade, from light brown to the darkest black, as the case may be, and not that dry and tinted appearance produced by other Hair Dyes. The Mystery when applied to a single hair, dyes that hair, so that no spots that have been dyed can be restored to their original shade without applying all over the head, as is necessary when using other Hair Dyes.

E MICROSCOPE.—The compound oscope consists of at least two s. These are usually placed one e the other in a tube. Of these s the one that in use is nearest object to be examined is called object glass" or "objective;" the one nearest the eye is called "eye-piece" or "ocular." By arrangement the objective forms agnified picture of the object, this picture is further magnified he ocular. A much greater ifying power by this plan is ned, than with a single lens. ill illustrate with an example. a lens of half an inch focus enables the object to be seen clearly at half an inch from lens. This, we have shown, magnify twenty diameters. Let ocular of the same magnifying r be so placed that the magnified e, formed by the objective, is y seen by it; this will magnify mage thus seen twenty times—is, the picture or image of the formed by the ocular will be y-times twenty, or four hundtimes as large as the object. ere are, however, certain difficulties met with in lenses of high nifying power, arising from the e rounded or curved surfaces of ns. This is overcome, to a large t, in the objective and also in ocular, by using two or three of low magnifying power, but ineed as to produce the same ification as a single lens, and the defects of the single lens. first compound microscope appears to have been invented in 1617, ther an account of an instrument of this kind is published by Dr. at the date named. But so were the difficulties attending instruction of this form of the scope that so late as 1821 M. writes "that opticians regard possible the construction of a compound achromatic microand Dr. Wollaston, one of the skilful men of his day, exat about the same date, the achromatic compound instruwith never rival the single

The is, perhaps, one which more immediately concerns mankind than magnifying effect of all optical ments, from the simple convex the most powerful microscope. of this obscurity and confusion doubt arises from a neglect proper distinction between and real magnitude. The eye no direct cognizance of the real nitude of objects. It reaches its sions on this point from inferand comparisons, which are attended by calculations not intricate. The proof of this is in the fact that objects that the same visual magnitude not quently differ greatly in real nitude. For example, the sun moon have nearly the same visual parent magnitude, yet the real eter of the sun is more than hundred times that of the moon, diameter of the moon being 2,160, and that of the sun about 0 miles. The magnitude of obs seen with the microscope are nal, not real. The magnifica- an instrument is usually given meters. DANIEL PRATT'S IMPROVED
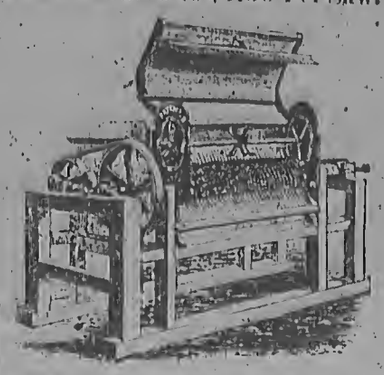
"Revolving Head" Cotton Gin.
PATENTED JULY 11, 1871.
Price Reduced to $4.50 Per Saw.



THIS GIN has been in use for the past three seasons, and several recent improvements have been added. It elevates all friction in the cotton box, prevents the roll from breaking, and gives a Larger Yield of Lint from the Same Amount of Seed than any other Gin in use. The Revolving Head lightens the draft and enables the Gin to run faster with less driving power, thus doing a great deal more work within the same time, while economizing steam or animal power, than any other Gin. The seed being ginned very close, the length of the staple is increased, producing cotton on this account of a greater market value. This improved value, given by length of staple, with the extra production of lint, added to increased amount of work done, more than covers the cost of the Gin in every six bales ginned. Testimonials sent by mail on application.

ADVOCATE OFFICE,
New Orleans, Tuesday, May 2, 1876.

MONETARY.

The movement in funds, both among bankers, brokers and street lenders, shows an increase in discounts, which is an evidence of confidence in the future; in fact we are no nearer ruined than our Northern and Western friends, and have greater chances of recuperation. Rates of interest unchanged, but firm at 8@9 per cent. per annum for gilt-edged, and 9@10 per cent. for A1 commercial and mortgage paper. Gold, 113@113¼.

There is a better feeling in the stock market, and several descriptions have advanced. Among many sales we notice one of 79 shares of Factors' and Traders' Insurance Company at $93 50, the highest it has ever reached, which shows that the able management of the officers of this well tried company are appreciated. The condition of our banks and insurance companies is a credit to our city.

COTTON.

We make the following extracts from W. C. Watts & Co.'s cotton report of the Liverpool market, dated April 13:

"The Position, Etc.—Our market has been depressed this week by the very limited trade demand for cotton on the spot, consequent on the increased quantity being forwarded out of the recent large import, and to the limited business doing in Manchester, in the subsidence of the apprehensions entertained last week of an overflow of the Mississippi rivers; and to increased anxiety growing out of disquieting rumors about the state of political affairs on the Continent. On the other hand, prices have been sustained by a considerable falling off in the receipts at the American ports; by reports of cold, wet and unfavorable weather for planting the new crop; and by the hope that spinners, having reduced their stocks of cotton some 45,000 bales during the past three weeks, will, after the holidays have passed, purchase more freely.

"The stock of cotton held by English spinners we now estimate at 176,000 bales, against 250,000 last year and 216,000 the year before at same date.

"From Bombay we learn that the cholera has broken out in the Dholerah district, and it is reported that the natives have become so alarmed that the crop is likely to be neglected, and much less come forward before the monsoon than heretofore supposed."

Our market has shown great irregularity during the past week. Factors have done all they could to sustain prices, but the dullness of New York and Liverpool compelled them to yield on Saturday to a decline of ⅛c. on all grades except low ordinary. The sales for the week foot up 17,809 bales here, and in New York only 5,115 bales for same time; the market closing quiet at 12 13-16c. for Orleans middling.

The Liverpool market has been quiet and easy, although sales show considerable business doing. The telegraph reports 40,000 bales sold during the week. Middling Orleans, 6¾d., against 5¾d. same date last year.

The following tabular statements show the prices for the past seven days:

A certain remedy for all NASAL, THROAT, and LUNG diseases, affording relief in some cases in a few minutes. For CATARRH it has proven the only known specific. BRONCHITIS yields oil, and CONSUMPTION if taken in season. ASTHMA, ROSE COLD and HAY FEVER cured. SORE THROAT, HOARSENESS, and common colds arrested at once. A few inhalations will correct the most OFFENSIVE BREATH. Made of hard rubber, it may be carried as handily as a dead penholder or needle-case, and is always ready for use. It supercedes all other inhaling tubes and contrivances—is approved by the entire Medical Fraternity, and endorsed by the standard Medical Journals of the world. "Dr. George Hadley, Professor of Chemistry and Pharmacy in the University of Buffalo, in a carefully considered report upon its merits, concludes in these words: 'On the whole, this Inhaler seems to me to accomplish its purposes, by novel, yet by the most simple and effectual means, to be philosophical in conception, and well carried out in the execution.'" No person afflicted or threatened with any of the difficulties stated, should be without this Inhaler. Patented in the United States, England and Canada. Over 30,000 in use. Send your address and receive our descriptive circular and testimonials of hundreds of PHYSICIANS who have used it in their practice. News of the Week.

DOMESTIC.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 2.—On Sunday evening the Chinese quarter in Antioch, near the mouth
the San Joaquin river, was burned.
Chinese had been previously ered to leave, town by the whites, most of them obeyed the order.
se who remained, till the fire ke out were not molested. All houses were burned except two,
ich were removed this morning.
personal violence was offered the inese, though the excitement was at, and a large crowd gathered to ness the destruction of their habi-tions.

INDIANAPOLIS, May 3.—The Demats carried the city by four thou-and majority, and elected eleven of teen councilmen.
After minor disturbances during day, a serious fight occurred, last-twenty minutes. Pistols, bricks clubs were freely used. One gro was killed and two probably rtally wounded.
Many are eight wounded at the egal Institute, and several whites blacks were taken to their mes.

HARTFORD, May 3.—The Connecti-
Legislature organized with H.
Walter as speaker. Gov. Ingers-was inaugurated with the usual remonies.

NEW YORK, May 4.—Mexican advices state that the prisoners in the fortress of San Juan d'Ulloa, Vera Cruz, revolted on the night of the eighth of April. The small garrison was nearly overpowered,
but the revolt was finally subdued.
The leaders were shot.
All American and other foreign residents favor the revolution, hoping that some likely occurrence may result in annexation to the United States. They say there are strong hopes of a dissolution of the government. Its best generals are dissatisfied. The campaign thus far has been a failure.
The minister of war blames the President for meddling with military affairs. Money is scarce and prices of provisions are rising.
President Lerdo is firm—by no means disposed to decline re-election.
He says that to yield would be to fall in the constitution.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 4.—The Democratic State Senate committee is in session at Sacramento on the Chinese question. O'Neil, a policeman, testifies that selling a Chinese woman for $150, to dissatisfied with the purchase, sold. He had been informed Chinese attended mission schools learn English, who laughed at the idea of becoming Christians. A Chinese interpreter testified that two Chinese were killed for testifying in court, and a reward was out for the life of the witness.
District Attorney Jones gave evidence as to how the Chinese commit false felonies, abduct women, and practice their other practices.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 5.—Len
Sam, a Christianized Chinese testified before the State Senate committee that it was practically impossible to convert a grown Chinaman to Christianity, though the experiment was sometimes successful with boys. He said the condition of Chinese women was horrible.
They were sold and bought like cattle, tortured, and sometimes killed while attempting to escape.
Both the whites and Chinese of the lower class here desire immigration stopped. The whole thing can be done in a friendly way. The Chinese government would readily consent, but could not do it themselves.
There are eighteen provinces, and nearly every province is in rebellion.
Christianity is not advanced by Chinese immigration; but if stopped something might be done with those already here. He corroborated the evidence of the manner in which secret Chinese tribunals put a price on the lives of those offending against their laws.
Matthew Kucker, chief of police,
characterizes the Chinese population,
as almost without exception, as thieves,
liars and perjurers.

BALTIMORE, May 5.—The Methodist Conference resumed the discussion of the resolution about transferring the Indian Bureau.
Judge Lawrence, a member of Congress from Ohio, and a delegate in the Conference, sketched the history of the Indian service, and held that the present policy had put an end to Indian wars, and elevated the condition of the Indians. Now it was proposed by the dominant party in the House of Representatives to abandon this policy of peace, civilization and Christianity.
The dominant party in the House care very little about their civilization or Christianity. Neither was material to its success. If this General Conference, representing a million and a half of people, shall send a committee of five to the Senate, its voice would be heard and respected, and the bill would not pass, for there was some regard for Christianity and civilization at that end of the capitol. The President was not a Methodist himself, but his wife was,
and she could appeal to him in behalf of the peace policy which he had inaugurated.
Judge Cooley, of Iowa, and Gen.
Clinton B. Fiske, of the St. Louis Conference, expressed regret that political issues or personal references should have been made, which was also the unmistakable sentiment of the Conference. The resolutions were then referred to a special committee of five.
Albert S. Hunt submitted the report of a fraternal delegation to the Conference of the Methodist Church South, assembled at Louisville in May, 1874, detailing the events of their visit and reception by that body which was of the most kind and Christian character.
The report concludes: "Thus terminated our services as your representatives to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church South. It was our aim to discharge the high trust committed to us in truth and in love. There is reason to anticipate the presence among us at an early day of distinguished representatives of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, who have been appointed to respond to our greeting.
May great grace rest upon each of them. Especially would we commend to the tender protection of our heavenly Father the venerable patriarch in Mahoffsin, the Rev. Lovick Pierce, D. D., who is the chairman of their delegation.
"We hope for the speedy coming of the time when our intercourse with this sister church shall be utterly free from unchristian strife;
when the love of him who died for us, working mightily in all our hearts, shall prove the solvent of all our misunderstandings; when, as the offspring of a common Methodistic parentage, we shall bend all our energies in our concordant effort to conquer the world for Christ.

ALBERT S. HUNT,
CHAS. A. FOWLER,
CLINTON B. FISKE."

BALTIMORE, May 6.—In the Methodist Conference the hour for receiving fraternal messages from the British Wesleyan Conference having arrived, Rev. H. Foss, of New York, introduced Rev. W. B. Pope, professor of theology in Didsbury College,
Manchester, England, and Rev. P.
Newman introduced Rev. Jonathan
Harrison Rigg, president of Westminster Training College, London, the colleague of Prof. Pope.
The entire Conference rose on the introduction of the messengers. The answer of the British Conference of 1875 to the address of the General Conference held in Brooklyn, in 1872, was presented by the messengers and read by the secretary. The answer is one of cordial, fraternal greeting and encouragement, succinctly reviewing the great work of the church, its steady progress and rapid increase in both hemispheres.
Prof. Pope then addressed the Conference. His address was able and eloquent, eliciting frequent outbursts of applause from the Conference and vast assembly. Referring to the Centennial as common to the nation and Methodism in the United States, he said: "You and we are alike generous and Christian enough to rejoice together in the great event which a hundred years ago displayed the hand of Providence in making you an independent people, great in yourselves and strong in the prophecy of larger greatness.
"We know full well that no act of independence can make you, in the deepest sense, independent of England. We hold you by an indis-soluble bond; the blood in your veins beats time to the pulsation of our hearts, and ours beats time to yours; but, after all, your Centennial, as has been fully shown, is a religious festival. At the foot of the heavenly throne you are bent on superadding to your national and civil rejoicing a great tribute to him who took up your national independence into his counsel for the government of the world.
"May he accept your tribute and sanctify your national year to the increase of grace in your hearts, households, ministry and common work."
Rev. Dr. Rigg followed in an interesting and able speech, after which the Conference adjourned.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 6.—Advices from Sydney report a severe earthquake on March 20 in South Australia and April 11 in New Zealand.
Some buildings were damaged. In the former, loss of life is reported.

PITTSBURG, May 6.—Don Pedro, who passed through the city at an early hour this morning on his way to the oil regions, returned this afternoon, arriving here at half-past three,
and after brief visits to Mumelpal Hall, St. Paul's cathedral, the Western Penitentiary, and large iron and glass manufactories of the south side, left on the fast line for Philadelphia.

CHICAGO, May 7.—A terrible rain storm, with a rotating tornado, visited this city on the south and north sides, damaged most of the Michigan
Southern depot, unroofed Grace church, etc. The steeple, one hundred and seventy-five feet high, fell.
The choir was practicing, but were unhurt. Wabash Avenue Methodist church spire was broken off, and the County Hospital unroofed. The patients were safely removed. A massive fog bell at the Crib and a newly-erected tower were swept into the lake. Docks and carriages were wrecked on the streets. The Palmer and Gardner houses are said to be badly damaged. Shipping is much damaged. The storm lasted but a few minutes. The loss is estimated at a quarter of a million.

LEAVENWORTH, May 7.—During the terrific storm here the carpet factory, with machinery, valued at $50,000, was destroyed. The roof of the Odd Fellows' Hall, the largest building in the city, was torn off and the interior ruined. Many houses, large and small, were unroofed. The line of the tornado was directly through the heart of the city, from west to east.

FOREIGN.

MADRID, May 3.—Congress, by a vote of 226 to 3, rejected the amendment proposed by moderates against the religious toleration clause.
The amendment rejected by 226 to 3 was that in favor of religious unity, favored by Senor Alborez.

ROME, May 5.—King Alfonso has written another letter, assuring the Pope that Spain is Catholic; consequently the Catholics need apprehend nothing from the application of the clause in the new constitution upon religious liberty. Moreover, the clause in question does not contravene the spirit of the concordat of 1851.

HAVANA, May 7.—The English mail steamer has arrived from Vera Cruz, bringing advices from the City of Mexico to April 30. Thirteen States of the Mexican confederation are in absolute peace and loyal to the government. The others are disturbed by scattered bands of revolutionists.
In Vera Cruz, Oaxaca and La
Puebla the situation is desperate.
Large bands also trouble the peace of Hidalgo, Mexico and Morelia.
Personal hostility to President Lerdo at the capital is strong. Fifty-two hundred stand of improved arms and a good deal of ammunition from the United States have arrived at the capital from Vera Cruz.
Congress, by a vote of 35 to 30, voted to adjourn until one month
after the next presidential inauguration. Thus granted the President extraordinary powers for the conduct of the war, etc.
Diaz has marched into the interior and is at San Luis Potosi. He established a provisional government for the State of Tamaulipas.
The government is very active,
and is organizing a large force in the interior under Gen. Escobedo for a march to the frontier. The campaign on Oaxaca has apparently been abandoned. Gens. Ogazon and Ca-vella are in the State of Vera Cruz, operating on the line of the railroad.
The bridges which the insurgents have so far destroyed on the railroads were built of wood. The great iron bridges are threatened if the company attempts to run trains. The road is now guarded from Vera Cruz to Orizaba, and travel has been partially resumed.
Three thousand insurgents have invaded the State of Hidalgo, and at last accounts were on the point of attacking Puebla.
The revolutionists at Mazatlan have captured two vessels loaded with ammunition—a heavy loss to the government. There was a severe shock of earthquake in Guadalajara on April 12. A religious riot has taken place in Queretaro. Bete Maxwell Phillips, of the Presbyterian mission, was badly wounded.

From the Work.

MR. EDITOR: The Mississippi Conference, which convened in Canton,
December 15, appointed me as a missionary to a work about twenty-five or thirty miles from here, lying partly in Leake and partly in Attala county. Soon after Conference I repaired to the work. I have had large and attentive audiences at all my appointments, and the people seem to be hungry for the bread of life. I pray that God may visit these people, and that not only much good will be done in the name of Jesus, but that the desert may be made to blossom as the rose. I find many out of the ark of safety—many who perhaps, like those in St. John's time, had a name and are dead—many who are not avowedly for Christ, and consequently are still must needs be against him. I find those who are members of no church, and yet are very clever citizens;
while there are deists, athrists and infidels in practice. I have had many trials and dark moments, but through them all the Lord has brought me by his grace. Thank God, his grace is sufficient for us!
Yours in the lands of the gospel,

JOSEPH Q. HICKS.

CANTON, MISS., May 2, 1876.

The philosophy which a nation receives rules its religion, poetry, polities, arts, trades and whole history.

J. S. Patterson, of Erie county, Ohio, after travelling extensively in the South, writes as follows to the Cultivator and Country Gentleman:

Both Georgia and Alabama are extending inducements to Northern people to come in with their capital and energy and locate. But all the southern portions of these States are so unlike the North in soil and climate that Northern people would do well to study the situation thoroughly before they invest. People who want the extreme of mildness in climate afforded in the United States may go to Florida. Those will do best in Florida who have plenty of money.
Oranges are the rage, but it takes a long time to get oranges, and it costs immensely to nurse a grove into bearing. Orange-growing is only an experiment. Nobody knows for certain just the kind of soil to plant them in; and what is unfortunate in Florida, where the best soil is, it is unhealthy; and where it is healthy the soil will not produce anything without fertilization. This is not stated in the newspapers as far as I know, but after more than four hundred miles of travel in Florida we concluded that sweet potatoes are the "chief production"—that is in the sense of being most easily and most generally grown. We should not know how to get a living on Florida soil—such a living as a Northern farmer would want. Florida will do to spend the winter in, if you get in a healthy place; it may do well for some to live in; but in either case it will take money.
I may say in a general way that the South is no place for a poor man to move to. The South is full of poor people now, and it will not help the matter for more to go there. The scale of prices for farm labor tells the story. Ohio, $15 to $20 per month;
Kentucky, $12 to $15; Tennessee, $10
to $12; southern Alabama, $8 to $10;
Florida, $6 to $8. A man who goes South should go to employ himself and others. With $5,000 at command, if he is careful to find the right place to invest his money, he may do well in the middle belt of the South. He will hardly keep out of the hands of land agents, of which the South is full, but he wants to give his book and should take time to study the situation well for himself.
Let no Northern man be deterred from going South by the partisan hue and cry of Southern hate and intolerance toward Yankees. This is one of the devil's own slanders. Nothing promises so much immediate aid to the depressed South as the influx of Northern energy and Northern capital. This is perfectly understood and freely acknowledged. Every intel-gent person you meet, and all the leading journals in the South, are vieing with one another, each in his special way, to encourage immigration. They do not want Northern politicians to come down there and run their State and municipal governments, but they do want working and business men from the North to settle among them. All such are sure of a cordial welcome. I am quite inclined to think that farmers may do better to go South than to go West;
hence I send this brief statement, founded on personal observation. No one has employed the writer to say or not to say anything whatever concerning the South or its people, and he has not the slightest interest except that of having the facts known.

This from Dr. Holland, in the May Scribner, is well and truly said, concerning the influence of the President:

"Now if any man has observed the influence of the head men of a corporation, he will understand and appreciate what we are about to say in regard to the influence of a President in molding to himself the men around him. As is the president of a railroad, so is every officer and employé, by rule. The loose or the sound morals begin at the top, and run down through the whole. As is the editor-in-chief of a great newspaper, so are the subordinates. Men who stand at the head of great organizations, or great interests bring around them naturally men of their own kind, who take their tone in regard, and their tone in character and motive, from them. Like master, like man—an old proverb, based upon old and mature observation. Now it is just as impossible to have a high-toned administration, with a low-toned President, as it is to have a high toned household with a traitor at its head. The thing is unnatural and impossible. In the next presidential election the people really desire, we believe, to vote for and elect a gentleman and a statesman—a man who will associate himself in government only with gentlemen and statesmen, and who will send only such to represent the government abroad.
The political and social tone at Washington is disgustingly low. It does not represent the people of America.
It represents the party politicians of America, and them only. They are our bane and our disgrace; and if they are permitted to hold their influence through another administration we shall have ourselves to blame."

The government of Madagascar is compelled by treaty stipulations to admit French spirits; but since the Queen renounced idolatry, six years ago, it levies its duties in kind on these imports, and then publicly destroys this tenth part by emptying the barrels into the ocean. Here, certainly, is a conscience that would do honor to a Christian government

The Awakening.

Our columns and those of our evangelical cotemporaries, says the Christian Intelligencer, have never been laden with better tidings from the churches than during the last few weeks. The average number of additions to the fellowship is large, and they comprise persons of all ages and conditions, married and single, parents and children, old, middle-aged and youth.
"One very suggestive fact is that the greater number of these revivals is reported from country and village churches. A few of the city congregations have been highly favored, and there have been successful union services in some great centers. But we are yet to know how far these have overflowed into the surrounding churches. The results of the Moody and Sankey meetings in Philadelphia were much larger than of those held in Brooklyn. In New York it is too soon even to estimate the effect in the local churches, for this depends much upon the way in which those great central meetings are to be followed up by pastoral care, and by the union meetings at the Young Men's Christian Association Hall and elsewhere. But from that powerful center there have flowed forth countless, little streamlets into the region round about the city and far beyond. The country districts have been free of many of those diverting indulgences which mock the name of religion in our American cities. Attention is there concentrated upon religious services, and there are neither theaters nor opera-nor concerts, lectures and exhibitions, nor the relentless pressure of business rivalries and troubles, against which all city churches wage an incessant conflict.
Taking the statements which have been published to this date as fair indications of the state of religion, it is probable that the ecclesiastical reports of this spring and summer will be notable for unusual ingatherings.

JUDGE HILTON.—The Nation gives the following account of Judge Hilton, the man who has suddenly fallen heir to A. T. Stewart's vast property: "Judge Hilton's character as a public benefactor is therefore of some interest to the public; and it may be worth while to recall the fact that some years ago there was living in this city composed of four gentlemen—Tweed, Sweeny, Hall and Connolly; that one of these, Peter B.
Sweeny, was put at the head of a body called the Park Commission, and that associated with him was our Judge Hilton. The new board went to work to benefit the public.
They lopped off and cast away the boughs from the trees in the park where they were most necessary;
they allowed quack medicine advertisements to be painted on the rocks, and, to crap the climax, the old Park Commission having employed a skilled zoologist by the name of Waterhouse Hawkins to restore some fossils of extinct species of animals, they dismissed Mr. Hawkins, while Judge Hilton issued an ukase to have the models carted away and buried, and to have the molds and sketch-models destroyed, on the ground that a naturalist might better employ his time than in wasting it over dead animals. In fact they committed themselves like vandals and public enemies. We sincerely trust that Judge Hilton will devote his suddenly-acquired wealth to private enterprise. Prayers against his attempting to do anything for the public with it might well be offered up by the churches."

AN ALARMING PREDICTION.—Prof.
Tice makes a specialty of the weather, and it may embolden the hearts of umbrella manufacturers to know that on his authority we are to have a wet summer. He envelopes in a wet blanket all the hopes and aspirations of the world for partakers in centennial festivities by announcing that arrangements have been completed for a supply of the heaviest rains, tornadoes, etc., from the first of July to the seventh, about the day when people will have settled back upon the cares and toils of another hundred years; after which the weather is to suddenly clear up, and the sun, and probably the moon, will shine. The calm will, however, be of short duration, for from the twelfth of July there will be rain, with severe storms, interspersed with occasional spells of fine weather, to the end of the month. The professor might kindly postpone the stormy spell until after the fourth. One is inclined to ask whether his hurricanes and tornadoes are advertised to run strictly on schedule time.—

DEATH OF MR. E. F. SCHMIDT.—
We are pained to chronicle the death of Mr. E. F. Schmidt, president of the Howard Association, of New Orleans, and for the past forty-four years a resident of this city.
A native of Stockholm, Sweden,
he came to Louisiana quite young,
and by his intelligence, industry and strict attention to business he soon became a favorite among those with whom he came in contact.
Mr. Schmidt was one of the founders of the Howard Association, of New Orleans, of which he has been president for the last ten years. During the epidemic of 1873 he, with other gentlemen of this city, repaired to Shreveport, and at the risk of his own life rendered many loyal noble services to the poor and suffering people of that place.—Picayune.

Letter from East Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: As you have no regular correspondent from this part of our widely-extended Zion, perhaps a few items again for your columns may not be unacceptable to the thousands of your readers. I am glad to be able to state that in this (the Holston) Conference we are still making inroads on the great "powers of darkness" and pushing on the battle. As evidence of this, I will here give a short report of one of the presiding elders, Rev. G. W. Miles, on the Wytheville district. He says, under date of April 15: "I have just completed my second round on the Wytheville district, and am happy to report all the preachers of the district, traveling and local, at their posts, and laboring with wonderful results in the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom. Never have I witnessed grander displays of divine power in the conversion of sinners. Every charge in the district shares in this glorious work. The reports to date show fourteen hundred and thirty-two conversions in the district since the fifteenth of November last."
I see that on one small circuit (the Elk Creek, in Grayson county, Va.,) served by Rev. S. D. Gaines, they report over four hundred conversions in a little more than two months.
In fact a revival spirit seems to be sweeping over our Conference. But I am sad to have to report the death of one of our leading ministers, Rev.
J. W. Dickey, an ex-presiding elder, and treasurer of our missionary board, whose presence among us will be greatly missed. But his exit was triumphant. We ought to be thankful that the saying is true:
that Methodist people die well.
Dear doctor, can you not come to our grand mountain country of east Tennessee, and spend a few weeks this summer? In the bounds of my work (Rutledge circuit) is the celebrated Tates' springs, largely attended every season from all over the Southern States, and the water of which is shipped to many places south, the medical qualities of which are said to be unsurpassed. Then a little above us—near Johnson City—is the Austin spring, and where also "Austin's Liver Regulator" is manufactured, which is performing some wonderful cures. Come, doctor, and we will give you a hearty welcome; and if you bring Rev. John Mathews and others with you we will not object. As to the healthfulness of our climate, and the great physical benefit to be derived, we refer you to Rev. Dr. C. K. Marshall.
The spring with us is late and backward, but we think we will have some peaches and an abundant apple crop, and the wheat prospect is fine. Praise God, from whom all blessings flow! Yours,

H. P. WARGIN.

MORRISTOWN, TENN., May 3, 1876.

NOTE BY THE EDITOR.—Many thanks to Bro. Waugh for his kind invitation. It is really tempting. It is aggravating to have such a land of promise spread out before us, and at the same time feeling that it cannot be entered.

NEW ORLEANS DISTRICT CONFER-ENCE.—The Conference will meet at the Carondelet Street church on Thursday night, May 11, at half-past seven o'clock. The subsequent hours of meeting will be determined by the Conference. On Friday night, at half-past seven o'clock, there will be a district love-feast. The Sunday school anniversary will be held on Sunday, May 14, at four o'clock P.
M., at the Carondelet Street church.

J. B. WALKER, P. E.

The Hippodrome meetings, says the Methodist, have been of very great service to personal and practical religion; not in the usual and expected way, for there have been few conversions, but in a quite uncommon and unlooked-for direction. In short, they have rendered revival efforts respectable in the eyes of multitudes of city people. That result may be worth nothing, or it may be worth a great deal. If the new respect of people who wear good clothes and are tolerably intelligent pagans for religion in earnest should be used by the churches, the well dressed area heathen of the metropolis might be brought under Christian influence; and nothing that can be done is so well worth doing in New York.
The poor people are mostly Catholics; the classes mostly in need of religious enlightenment are respectable people who never go to church, and are as ignorant of Christianity as the Digger Indians.

antest way to take cod-liver oil is to Alabama Conference.

REMINISCENCES.

Having noticed those who are superannuated, attention will be called to the members who were in the Conference twenty-five years ago, and who are now on the effective list.

Anthony S. Dickinson was admitted on trial into the Mississippi Conference in November, 1830, and at the division of that body into the Mississippi and Alabama Conferences he fell into the latter, and at the first session thereof was received into full connection. He has been a member ever since, except one year that he was local; but he located at one session and was readmitted at the next. He is now the only living member who was in it at its organization. Forty-five years, less one that he was local, he has been a traveling preacher. All the time, except two years—one he was supernumerary and the other superannuated—his name stands on the effective list. For a number of years he traversed the large territory of the Conference in serving the church. His first year was on the Chickasawha circuit, in Mississippi—J. A. Cotten in charge. The second was Columbus and Marion—N. Hopkins, preacher in charge. His third was Blount, at that time a heavy, hard work, admirably adapted to test the loyalty of a young itinerant. The fourth year he was on the Escambia mission, on the line of Florida and near the gulf coast—a work to tax the devotion and fidelity of a preacher. Thence on his labors have been in the southern portion of the Conference, extending from the Tombigbee river on the west to near the Chattahoochee on the east, and down into the State of Florida. Seven years of the time he was presiding elder on the Camden and Lowndesboro districts. One year of his ministry he preached to the colored people. By study Bro. Dickinson became well acquainted with the doctrines of the church, and preached them with ability and success. While in the presiding eldership, like some of our eminent masters the Israel used to do, he took occasion to set forth Methodist views of infant baptism, and the mode of that ordinance. The writer was Bro. Dickinson's presiding elder for four years, and appreciates him for his devotion to our theology, and esteems him for long service in the work of the ministry. But few men spend over forty years in the active duties of the itinerancy. Our brother is now filling his fourth year on the Troy circuit. His home is in the bounds of this charge, at Brundidge, Pike county, Ala.

Walter H. McDaniel entered the Alabama Conference in December, 1831, and has been for forty-one years in the traveling connection. The most of the time his name stands among the effective workers. A few years he has held the supernumerary and superannuated relation. His labors have extended very nearly over the whole extent of the Conference territory. Autauga, Blount, Monticello, Pike, Marengo, Marion, Prairie Creek, Calhaba, Cedar Creek, Centenary, Summerfield, Erie, Glenville, Uniontown, Pleasant Hill, Perryville, Randolph, Brush Creek and Clinton circuits, Cedar Bluff, Calhaba and East Selma stations, and Talladega district, have all enjoyed the benefit of his ministerial labors. He also served the colored missionary work in the canebrake country a few years. Bro. McDaniel is a man of superior mental vigor, and had the advantage of collegiate training before entering the ministry, and by extensive and varied reading he soon became a preacher of great strength and power. The doctrines of Wesleyan theology are well understood by him, and he has the courage and manliness to preach them in all his fields of labor. He not only advocates the doctrines embraced and indorsed by him, but feels the force of his ordination vows to "be ready with all faithful diligence to banish and drive away all erroneous and strange doctrines contrary to the word of God." Views of the atonement contrary to the Wesleyan teaching thereof are unsparingly rebuked. In his defenses of Methodist theology and polity he frequently becomes aggressive, and makes sad havoc among those whose opinions are antagonistic to the faith he feels himself obligated to maintain and propagate. His polemic power is not of the ordinary kind. Cogent reasoning and sarcasm are used in it vigorously. When errors and false views are swept away he rises to the full necessity of a messenger of the tidings of salvation, and becomes an earnest and eloquent herald of the cross. Many are led to embrace the truth as it is in Jesus, and others are confirmed in the faith. He was a delegate from his Conference to the General Conference which convened in Columbus, Ga., in May, 1854; but while he has the capacity of a counselor and legislator, yet he has been most conspicuous as a field preacher. He, as well as the brother whose sketch precedes this, deserves an honorable place among the "Western cavaliers," who have done such noble service in the army of the Lord Jesus. He is now serving the Clanton circuit his second year. His home is near Randolph, Bibb county, Ala.

MONTGOMERY, ALA., April 26, 1876.

Be and Do Something.

"Be still, and know that I am God."—Psalm xlvi. 10.

MR. EDITOR: The caption of this article was suggested to my mind by reading an article in the Southern Review relative to Moody and Sankey. One remark of Moody's in his sermon to young men, when in Europe, made a deep impression on my mind: that every Christian should be and do something. The remark referred to is what St. Paul said of himself: "This one thing I do, forgetting the things that are behind . . . I press toward the mark."—Philippians iii. 13, 14. A terrible man he was—this man of one thing and one aim, and determined to go on doing it! "To every man his work." "If blessing don't come this week, it will come next; only persevere. Be of good courage; Christ will strengthen your heart." This impression was fixed in my mind by another remark of his: "The men who have been successful are not those who work by fits and starts, for three hundred and sixty-five days in a year. When men are in earnest they can say everything before them."

There is scarcely a grosser mistake among men than is committed by private Christians who think that they are of but little consequence in evangelizing the world. The greatness of this mistake is in proportion to the few in number truly engaged in the service of Christ. Were a large space to be illuminated by small lights, the importance of a single one would be greater and greater as the number became less and less. In the existing state of the world there are immense spaces of darkness, either to continue such, or to receive light from individual Christians, and who are represented by Christ as being the lights of the world. The eternal destiny of millions, who are pressing on to their unchanging doom, depends upon individuals as co-workers with God. All the children of God must put forth their fullest energies in his service before the nations of the earth can be given to Christ for an inheritance, or the millennial glory be ushered in. Suppose each follower of Christ were now to resolve: "I will do all I possibly can, although it may now be the 'eleventh hour,' to advance the interests of the Redeemer's kingdom; I will endeavor to bring as many of my fellow-men to the Savior as I possibly can by my persevering and fervent prayers, and by my utmost efforts in all practical modes of operation"—how soon would there be seen such times as when Wesley and his lay preachers went "out into the hedges and highways" of England. It is sometimes astonishing what one individual can do when he goes forth in the strength of the Lord of hosts. I find in a scrap cut from an old paper an interesting account of what a poor Norwegian farmer accomplished in the advancement of the kingdom of Christ. The account is as follows:

A Norwegian farmer was, at the age of twenty-five (thirty years ago) in the habit of making excursions from his father's dwelling for the purpose of distributing religious tracts, which he had caused to be printed at his own expense, and which he sold or gave away. The effects of his labors were perfectly astonishing, not less than fifty thousand peasants dating the period of their conversion to sound and vital Christianity at the time when they first became known to that remarkable individual. To the sufferings which he had undergone it is most distressing to advert. He endured eleven several imprisonments, one of which lasted for a period of ten years. There is a passage toward the close of his journal, dated in the year 1814, from which it appears that a fine of a thousand rix-dollars was imposed upon him, and that all which he possessed on earth was sold for the liquidation of that debt. He might have escaped it could he have prevailed on himself to petition the King, saying that he was unable to pay the amount; but such was his love of truth that no consideration under heaven could induce him to declare a falsehood; and in consequence he allowed himself to be reduced to the lowest degree of impoverishment. He allowed everything which he possessed, down to the meanest utensil, to be sold, rather than declare that which he knew to be false.

John Wesley said: "Give me thirty men of faith, and I shall storm the citadel of satan and win it for Christ." And whom did he select for his thirty men? Like his Master, he selected laymen, and many of them illiterate; and with such helps he did win. Moody too—as denominated by Bleilsoe, the Maxwell of the present age—is an illiterate layman. Still he is winning his thousands for the kingdom of Christ. It is individual and united effort that Christ demands of his church, and the more persevering and earnest individuals are the more united will the efforts be. Moody is now accomplishing more in bringing about a united effort in evangelizing the world than any other man living. Will not Christians then, go forward in this great work? and, though they may have for a time to row amid troubled waters and contrary winds, Christ will soon come walking over the troubled waters, and command the wind and the waves, and there shall be a heavenly calm in the troubled elements, and a shout of victory raised that will echo to the ends of the earth, and shake the dark domain to its very center. O ye friends of the Savior, friends of dying men, awake! Venture among the ranks of satan's troops. Entice his followers to desert. Tell them that his promises of reward are false—that the wages of sin is death. Tell them how large a bounty, how glorious a reward, Immanuel gives. Point them to the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sins of the world, who pardons without fee, and reconstructs without a bribe. Show yourselves men of courage, willing to face the foe, stem the flood, and fight on until victory shall be proclaimed. And if your individual consequence is not magnified in your own eyes, nor in the eyes of the world, heaven at least will rejoice over your labors of love, and hell lose a multitude of demanded victims. Let your language, then, with the poet, be:

"Satan's strongest might I'll withstand,
I'll wage my courage, heart,
I'll bear the fight, endure the pain,
Supported by my word."

Is the Tithe Law of the Jewish Code Abrogated?

MR. EDITOR: Recently this question has been frequently discussed in church papers, the writers for the most part assuming the negative side of the question. I say assuming, because they have failed to establish its validity under the Christian dispensation. The Scripture proofs resorted to utterly fail to prove that the old tithe law is still in force. In the ADVOCATE of March 23 appeared an extract from the Christian Intelligencer written by a German with an unpronounceable name. The argument is presented with as much force and plausibility as is possible. After a fair and candid examination of the arguments I feel an assurance that they are inconclusive. The first proof adduced is attempted to be drawn from the fact that Abraham and Jacob gave tithes before the giving of the law, the former on one occasion only, to Melchisedek, the priest of the most high God. The latter promised, under peculiar circumstances, to give to the Lord a tenth of all that God should give him. Hence the conclusion is reached by the writer referred to that the tithe law, being older than the Mosaic code, is a part of the moral code, and in its nature unrepealable. Now I ask: Is this an inevitable conclusion? If so, every other custom or practice which may claim the approbation of God at the time must have a place in the moral code. Circumcision was practiced before the giving of the law. Sacrifices were also offered by the progenitor of the race and his immediate descendants. I know it may be said that these were typical, and received their fulfillment in Christ. So also was the temple, with its services of sacrifices, songs of praise, prayers, etc., and the tithe law was ordained for the purpose of supporting those who were employed constantly in the temple. Now if the temple, with all its sacrifices, appointments and services, was typical and received their fulfillment in Christ, how does it happen that the law enjoining these services is abrogated, while the tithe law, enacted originally to insure the perpetuation of the temple services, is left in full force and virtue? How, in other words, can the whole be repealed without abrogating all its parts? How can the end be repudiated and the means retained? I grant that the same means may be employed for the support of the Christian church that were used in support of the Jewish religion; but I deny any one's right to make such binding without a Scripture warrant. But it is claimed that Christ re-enacted the tithe law when he said to the Pharisees: "Ye tithe mint and anise, and neglect the weightier matters of the law—faith, judgment and mercy. These ought ye to do, and not leave the other undone." If this proves anything, it proves too much. Christ said to his disciples: "The scribes sit in Moses' seat; all, therefore, that they bid you do, that observe; but do ye not after their works." Now if some modern writer should assert that Christ has re-enacted the law of circumcision, and for proof refer to the passage just quoted, we would have an argument of the very same sort, and of equal force to that used for the establishment of the tithe law. The two arguments rest on precisely the same basis. Christ gave his sanction to the practice of tithing; therefore the tithe law is still in force. This is the argument, fairly stated. Christ gave his sanction to the practice of circumcision; therefore the law of circumcision is still in force. I regard all such fallacious modes of reasoning as absolutely pernicious. Our people detect the fallacy, which causes a revulsion and reaction in their benevolent impulses, by which they are fortified against all appeals. If they suspect, or have cause to suspect, that we presume upon their ignorance, and, acting on that presumption, are endeavoring to bind upon their consciences duties not enjoined in the word of God, we lose our hold upon them, and the cause of Christian beneficence suffers in consequence of the unfair and misleading manner in which we have presented it.

In conclusion I say the examples of Abraham and Jacob do not prove the existence of a tithe law in their day; and, if they did, they do not prove that it is still in force. Nor does the language of our Savior prove that the tithe law has been re-enacted. Let those who think so make out the case, free of all embarrassments and absurd consequences, and then I will give up my objections, and join them in enforcing it upon the people.

SIGMA.

Spring.

Thou art the type of heaven,
When the storms of life all past,
And the chains of death all riven,
We live to love at last.

As we look forth in autumn and winter upon the death-like appearance of all things around us, we see in nature no evidence that the faded beauties of summer will ever return again. The grass, flowers and all inanimate things seem to have been struck by the blight of eternal death, save that the voice of experience teaches us that it is a part of the natural order of creation—that a change will come to enliven the face of nature. Spring has returned again to beautify the landscape with robes of fairest verdure. She bears on her light wings balmy breezes, which please our senses with their varied odors. She brings in her train the smiling sunbeam, dancing on the threshold of winter's departing scepter. We love the gentle spring, clothed in her rich garniture of leaves, buds and flowers—the song of birds, the pattering rain-drops, and the soft influences of the glorious sunshine, each with its lesson of love to gladden and sanctify the heart. The birds warble their notes of praise in token of merry, happy hearts. These gay, guiltless worshipers pour strains of sweetest melody to the Author of change and seasons. The blushing flowers, bedecked with the morning dew, sparkle in the sunlight like gems of beauty. In loveliness they bear the palm of all the queenly robes of spring. Spring, with its myriad forms of beauty, speaks eloquently of the resurrection of man. As the withered forms of nature awake to life they speak to us with a voice replete with promise of a future life. We are forcibly reminded of the sublime truth that we have been accustomed to hear: that death is but another name for change or condition. When the cold embrace of death shall have bleached every cheek by its blighting touch, then shall arise hope, with healing in its beams, pointing to an immortal crown, decked with flowers of fadeless hues. Untrammeled by the garments of the flesh, youth shall know no change. Age shall go no longer on trembling, tottering limbs. Disease and suffering shall be blotted from the soul's vocabulary. Clad in the habiliments of righteousness, the visions of the "blest" shall awake to the bright impress of an eternal spring.

R. A. THOMS.

OBITUARIES.

JANE A. A. MOORE was born August 17, 1814, in Lincoln county, N. C. She fell asleep in Jesus March 15, 1876, in Perry county, Ala. In early life she connected herself with the Presbyterian Church, in which she lived a consistent life, though, as it seems, not a professor of religion. She celebrated her marriage to A. A. Moore on November 9, 1843. Soon after they attended the celebrated Rock Springs camp meeting, at which she was converted to God. She then connected herself with the church of her husband—the Southern Methodist. Systematic, energetic, economical, Sister Moore bore herself like a true wife, a true mother. Everything and everybody felt the impress of a hand that worked in silence. She was a genuine type of a genuine woman.

Possessing a sweet modesty and diffidence, she combined with these a deep Christian spirit, which seemed to lend to her life a placid flow, that was undisturbed by the tempests of this existence. Sufferings and her life was checkered with them—did not thwart her trust in God. God was her consolation and help. She was strongly attached to her children. On being asked, a few weeks before her death, if she was ready and resigned to go, she replied: "If it is God's will, I would live for my children; otherwise I await his call." She began to decline about the middle of December last. The spirit of her mind rose with the weakness of her condition. The intense suffering of the body was overmatched by the deep calm of the soul. If any sound were extorted from that heart of suffering it was a song of praise or a prayer of supplication. She had "fought a good fight," she had "kept the faith." She hastened to receive the crown of glory at the hands of her Christian Master. Her deathbed was hallowed by utterances of triumph, whose ringing memory gladdens the heart of a mourning husband, and leaves to her children a heritage more precious than the most precious gifts. On Monday evening before the Wednesday on which she died she bade all farewell, kissed everybody about her bed, and enjoined all to meet her in heaven. She then requested them to sing:

"In a moment make me ready,
Lest I fall a way to sorrow,
While on his breast I lean my head,
And breathe my last in safety there."

On the morrow she remarked: "I thought to have been released by this time." She relied alone on the merits of Jesus Christ. She died in peace, without a groan, without a struggle, on Wednesday evening. Never was triumph more splendid, never was victory more entire. In her upward flight she left a track of glory. May it be a pillar of fire to lead her children, her husband and friends to a kindred glory that knows every "variableness nor shadow of turning."

H. PAXTON.

REV. JESSE GINN died September 29, 1875, in the eighty-seventh year of his age and the forty-fourth of his ministry. He had been for sixty odd years a member of the Methodist Church. He was a faithful local preacher, always ready to do and suffer in the cause of his Master. Toward the end of his life he was quite feeble, and not able to preach; yet to the people with whom he had been associated for the last twenty-five years even his presence was a sermon, and they would often send conveyances for him to their camp and protracted meetings, where they might at least hear him tell of the wondrous dealings of God with him. I am not aware of his having an enemy; indeed to be with him was to feel that you were in the presence of a man of God. He was well known in Attakapas, Claiborne and Jackson parishes, La., where there are many souls to his ministry. I think he was at one time a member of the Mississippi Conference, where he spent a large portion of his life. He was ordained a deacon in 18—, his elder's orders had in some way been lost.

His end was calm and peaceful. In his delirium the cause of his Master was still uppermost in his heart. Among his last thoughts was the danger of the unconverted, and his last audible words were a prayer in their behalf. Thus has passed from among us a man whose life was spent in the service of the church he loved, and the doctrines of which he was ever ready to defend. He delighted to hunt out the poor and lead them to Christ. He had been in this way a blessing to the writer, hunting him up and getting him by go to church. It was at one of his appointments that he first knew God as a sin-pardoning God. His aged companion still lingers on the shore of time. The church where she lives will doubtless take care of her. I hope his Advocate will still be continued to his widow.

I stand some of the older members of the Mississippi Conference with us something concerning his early ministry. He is a precious memory among us.

R. T. PEARSON.

ON Saturday, December 4, 1875, Mrs. ELIZA RIDDLE left earth for heaven, at the advanced age of seventy two years. Fifty-nine years ago she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church. In her thirteenth year. Beginning the battle early, she fought to the end. It was a brave, bold fight, and closed with words of victory from her lips.

Forty-nine years in this city as a Methodist having joined when there was only a temporary place for worship, she passed through all the vicissitudes of our own organization, a witness of its reverses and successes.

She was not only a consistent but a devoted Christian woman, never deserting the flag of Christ, never dishonoring it through all the years of her long pilgrimage.

Such a faithful life was worthy the remarkable glory which attended her dying hour. She had sometimes expressed herself as fearing she might not realize the supports and consolations of God in the final hour; but when she entered upon the last day she realized far more than sustaining power—the Savior approached so near and made such revelations of his presence that her chamber seemed the very vestibule of heaven. Those who stood near her and witnessed her rapture, and heard the words of joy from the lips of this pilgrim, can never forget. One of her last expressions—"I am cleansed in the blood of the Lamb"—should sound in our hearts forever. Well and truly did she say: "If any man serve me, him will my Father honor."

JOHN MATHEWS.

DIED, of pneumonia, on the [illegible] of March, 1876, at her residence in [illegible] parish, La., Mrs. ELIZABETH M. GOLDMAN. She was born September 3, 1814, in [illegible] county, Ky.; married February 3, 1834, Mr. G. W. Goldman; and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church South in 1854.

Bereavements do come, and the chastened spirits must feel their anguish. The [illegible] loving mother, the cheerful, generous friend has departed, leaving a painful void no sensible object can fill. Grief will force moans and tears; but "we sorrow not as those without hope," for we know where came those graces that so ennobled and beautified the life, and so firmly bound the hearts of children and friends. He who bestowed a mother so worthy, so friend so true, has but recalled his own to himself to rest at home. May all the heart-stricken ones learn to draw comfort from him "who has borne our griefs and carried our sorrows," who is willing to guide to fullness of joy and to an inheritance incorruptible.

SISTER SAVANNAH C. THOMAS was born March 8, 1853, and died January [illegible], 1876. She was twice married—first to [illegible] Jackson, who lived but a short time after their marriage. She was married to her bereaved husband, Bro. Alvin Thomas, October 2, 1873. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church July [illegible], under the ministry of Rev. C. W. [illegible]. She retained a consistent and acceptable membership until the day of her death. Sister Thomas was not very demonstrative in her religious feelings. At church she was [illegible] earnest, quiet but constant in her religious duties. She was [illegible] persistent in duty, and [illegible] would say, in connection with her [illegible] desire for entire sanctification, that she was not willing to suffer reproach for Christ's sake. That we will endeavor to be more faithful in our attendance upon the services of our school, and see that nothing in its interests lags or fails.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the family in their loss and bereavement.

IN the providence of God, Thomas A. Moore, our beloved and efficient Sunday-school superintendent, has been taken from us. In his death we feel that our loss is great indeed; yet we submit to him who is wise to err and too good to do wrong. GOOD SEED, STRANGELY SOWN. About two years ago a lady, [illegible] strolling along the banks of the Tweed, near her own mansion, [illegible] unlaid or accidentally dropped a new copy of Reid's "Blood of the Martyrs," bearing her name and address. There, among the grass, the flowers and the drifting leaves of autumn, it lay, until a rainy season flooded the river. The uprising waters, surging over the grassy banks, swept it into the current, and carried it downward for many miles. At last it floated toward a mill-dam, which, along with much wreckage brought down by the flood, it became fast in the mill heck. Here it was discovered by a workingman who came [illegible] some distance to the saw mill to procure a load of wood. He took it home and read it, and at once became deeply earnest about his own salvation. After, awhile he gave himself to Christ, and has since endeavored to live as a poor [illegible] washed sinner should do. Some other unconverted persons have also been blessed by reading this precious little volume. In this marvelous manner the Lord was pleased to carry the glad tidings to several careless persons, making the waters the instrument in bearing the saving message.

MORNING LAND.

So near the goal, so near;
The portals open with a sound like song,
The path is lost in brightness, that so long Wandered amid the shadows. Oh! be strong,
My soul, and do not fear.

Do you too feel the weight
Of mists that blind my eyes—all cold and gray
The fog that settles round my troubled way—
The clouds that settle? But they cannot stay:
Rise up and watch them go.

So near the goal I stand,
My weary heart, thy task is well-nigh done.
See far off the golden, setting sun—
Work well wrought that was so sad begun.
Welcome, O soft, morning land!

The Madness of George the Third.

BY HEZEKIAH BUTTERWORTH.

The discipline of insanity has reformed many rough natures, and quickened many cold hearts that otherwise might have passed as misanthropes in the world. Among these may fairly be classed George the Third. "Few princes," says Lord Brougham, "have been more exemplary in their domestic habits, in the offices of private friendship, and the instant his prerogative was not menaced, or his bigotry interfered with, or his will thwarted, the most tyrannical, the most exhilarating kindness of heart, took possession of his breast and swayed it by turns." His disposition made him unpopular at times, and, but for a correcting providence—the chastisement of this painfully threatening affliction—might have lost him his throne. His own mental distresses made him humble, and kept his heart open to the unfortunate and the poor. Like Titus, he could look upon the dreams of his subjects and say:

"Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel."

The King was first attacked by insanity in 1764, when he was twenty-six years old. It was in the spring. As is usual with the first manifestations of disease of this kind, when constitutional, he soon recovered.

In the latter part of the autumn of 1788 the King appeared to be nervous, restless, unsettled in mind and impulsive. Returning from a long ride on the height October days he visited his apartment in the palace, and, entering his apartment with an anxious, distressed look upon his face, and, flinging himself into a chair, burst into tears, exclaiming: "I am going to be mad, and I am afraid that I might die!"

The apprehension of an attack of insanity is a most terrible thing; "worse than suffering to a sensitive mind and generous heart can ever be all the terrors of a man who is conscious that he is nothing to himself, not as well as losing the power to restrain his intellect. We have read of the poet Cowper's sufferings, imagining in the shadows about Westminster cathedral, while for the space of a year he resorted to seek for God in prayer and in the music of the organ; of Dr. Johnson trembling every day for nearly half a century at the bitterness of the melancholy that subdued in early manhood and returned in old age; of Charles Lamb and his poor insane sister going across the fields to the neighboring asylum, weeping and bitterly wringing their hands, because the distressed girl knew that the season of darkness was coming again; of the prayers of prayer and the softitudes of Christ on the banks of the Ouse, and the concealed anxieties of the overwrought brain of Southey amid the vision of Keswick. The most dangerous and distressing period of mental malady is that when the passions and emotions are partly unbalanced, and the consciousness of self remains, without the power to restrain it.

The King grew worse during the days of talk. On the twenty-fifth of November he was removed to Kew, where he was to experience most unspeakable horrors. Here he grew worse, his disease became violent, and these particulars of his confinement during the dreary months of December and January were given with commendable prudence, and withheld from the public eye.

The King's illness not yielding to the treatment of the court physicians, the Queen and other advisers thought proper to bring to their assistance a physician particularly skilled in diseases of the mind. Therefore there was sent for Dr. Francis Willis, a highly-educated minister, and by some it seemed to possess much natural power in influencing those whose reason was disordered, but who were yet capable of moral restraint. His advice in cases of this nature was sought by people of the highest rank, and he often had thirty patients under his charge. Miss Burney, who has left us many pleasing pictures of the domestic life of George the Third, describes Dr. Willis as a man of a thousand," open-hearted, fearless and high-minded. Soon after his arrival at the palace it was decided that he should have the general management of the King.

The first interview of Dr. Willis with the King was rather odd and surprising. The royal patient, like most insane people, could be very sarcastic, and he turned a sharp battle on his new medical adviser.

"Are you not a clergyman?" asked the King.

"Yes."

"And are you not ashamed to leave your calling and turn doctor?" "Our Savior himself went about doing good."

"Yes," answered the King, "but did not get seven hundred pounds a year for it."

It was decided that the management of the King required seclusion both from his family and from the ministers of State. He was also, when violent, subjected to mechanical restraint.

The King had some calm days in February, and his full recovery came with the singing of birds and the budding of flowers. Summer-time brought again the old tranquillity to the palace. One of the first excursions that the King made after his recovery was to an alms-house, where apartments for the insane were being provided.

The King's third attack of insanity began in February, 1801. He was put under restraint for only about a month, though his complete recovery did not take place till the following summer. Twenty-three years, not unclouded by apprehension, elapsed between the first and the second attack, and thirteen years, shadowed by continual anxiety, between the second and the third.

The recovery of the King from his second attack thrilled the nation with joy and awakened a spirit of loyalty from sea to sea. London, on the night following the day on which the King resumed his functions, was a blaze of light from the palaces of the West End to the humblest huts in the suburbs. But the great illumination was a rising splendor which only had its beginning here; it flashed like a spontaneous fire over all the cities of the realm. Gala days followed gala days; the nights were festive; the release of the King from his mental bondage seemed to lighten all hearts. On the twenty-third of April the royal family went to the old cathedral of St. Paul's in solemn state to return thanks to God. It was an imposing procession. The bells rang out, the boom of the cannon echoed through the mellowing air, and light strains of music arose on every hand. As the King entered the cathedral, between the Bishops of London and Lincoln, the voices of five thousand children burst forth in grand chorus: "God save the King."

At the sound of the jubilant strain the King's emotions overcame him. He covered his face and wept.

"I do now feel that I have been ill," he said to the Bishop of London as soon as he could restrain his tears.

The joy of the nation was sincere. As delightful to the King must have been the days that followed, when he set forth with the Queen and a part of the royal family for a long race to the west of England. The roads were lined with people, and streamed with arches of flowers; girls crowned with wreaths strewed flowers in the streets of the villages through which he passed; bells were ringing, the bands were out, all was activity from London to Weymouth. Wide must have been the contrast between this new regency and good Dr. Willis' strait-jacket.

Weymouth has also associated rare charms for the King. Unvexed by ministerial disputes and the cares of state, free from the last shadow of the clouds that had darkened his mind, with a humble heart, feeling that he was after all, but a mere fondling and among weak and dependent souls, he joined in the pastimes in their sports, he caressed their children, he gave prizes quick to old women, and wholesome counsel to ancestors; and Queen Charlotte, as she walked through the hay fields with the ladies, and was looked to the country people on the sunny waters of Portland Roads. His influence was the pleasantry at this period, and his popularity that he never realized.

The familiarity of notable monarchs with their poorer and meaner subjects has ever been an engaging theme with the historian and the poet. Thus we have the child-charming stories of Henry the Eighth and the Miller of Dee; of King John and the abbot; of Edward the Fourth and the taylor; of Philip the Burgundy and the tinker, which, with some variations, is told in the Induction to Shakespeare's Taming of the Shrew. Most few monarchs have so many pleasing anecdotes of this kind been related as about George the Third. This humility was a result of his great afflictions, and a most fortunate one for his popularity, since in the eyes of his people his charity covered a multitude of political errors.

After the first meeting of the storm of affliction upon his own head he had a sensitiveness that would never allow him to witness a scene of suffering without emotion, however humble might be the condition of the sufferer. A volume of anecdotes might be collected to illustrate this gentleness of character when want or woe was presented directly before him. He was walking one day, during the hard winter of 1788, unbending his mind from the cares of State, when he chanced to meet two little boys, who, not knowing whom they were addressing, fell upon their knees in the snow, and, wringing their hands, said:

"Help us! We are hungry; we have nothing to eat."

Their pinched faces were wet with tears.

"Get up," said the King. "Where do you live?"

"Our mother is dead," said one, "and our father has sick, and we have no money, food or fire."

"Come here," said the King, "and I will follow you."

They at last reached a wretched hovel, where the King found the mother dead, having perished for the want of the necessities of life, and the wretched father ready to perish, but still encircling with his bony arm the deceased partner of his woes. The King's eye moistened, and he hurried back to the Queen's lodge and related to the Queen what he had seen. He not only immediately relieved the present necessities of the family but gave orders that the boys should be supported and educated from the royal bounty.

The King surpassed all other monarchs in the whimsical play of "good Harun Alraschid." He loved nothing better than to meet his poorer and meaner subjects incognito, and learn their good opinion of him. He once played the part of Saxon Alfred as well as that of the Persian caliph, and turned a piece of meat in a cottage. When the old woman returned, what was her delight at finding a royal note, with an inclosure. It ran: "Five guineas to buy a jack."

On board the Southampton, a frigate of the olden time, he made himself as jolly as the sailors. One of the tars professed to be a poet, and composed an ode of voluntary laureateship on the occasion, which was sung in the presence of the King. Two of the stanzas run as follows:

"Portland Road,
The King aboard, the King aboard.
Portland Road,
The King aboard;
We weighed and sailed from Portland Road.

"The King, he sat
With a smile on his nose, a smile on his face;
The King, he sat
With a smile on his face
To see the aftergard splice the main brace."

The "splicing of the main brace" here referred to, which greatly pleased his majesty, consisted in serving out an extra dram to the sailors. The words were sung to the music of the bagpipe.

George the Third was fond of children. All crazy people are, in their better moods. Walking one day near Windsor, he met a stable-boy and asked: "Well, boy, what do you do, and what do they pay you?"

"I help in the stable, sir; but they only give me my victuals and clothes."

"Be content," said the King, in a philosophical mood; "I can have nothing more."

Miss Burney, Madame d'Arblay and others have left a few glimpses of the King's life at Kew during his periods of incapacity. These occasional views are often amusing, and it is for this reason that they were not allowed to fade away with the general history of the King's domestic life during those dark periods.

One day Miss Burney was walking in the garden at Kew, when she saw the King, whom she supposed to be very insane, coming toward her. To avoid meeting him she ran off at full speed. But the King was not to be disappointed in his chance of meeting a pretty woman, and so ran after her. The King's attendants were alarmed and ran after him. But the King proved the swiftest runner, and soon caught up with the alarming Queen's maid, and, throwing his arms around her, kissed her. He then informed her that he was as well as ever he had been in his life, and that he wished to talk with her on affairs of State. Miss Burney was at first terribly frightened, but soon gained her self-possession and enjoyed one of the most pleasant interviews with the King that she ever had while in the service of the royal household.

Another time, as the King was breakfasting at Kew, the great security of Ireland, which was then prevailing in England, became the subject of conversation.

"Why do not people plant more beet?" asked the King.

"Upon being told that beet could not be raised from the seed, he scratched still incredulous. He took some bits of beetroot, and went into the garden and planted them. The next morning he went to see if it had sprouted, and declared there were snails. The King then went to Kew, he was elected Queen: "Here she goes, the Queen, Charlotte, and all."

As the last of his fits of madness became more frequent, the twilight shadows began to fall. His sympathies seemed to take a wider range, and his charity was of a more sweet, as the evening of age came on. In 1788 a poor miscreant, named James Margaret Nicholson, attempted to assassinate him as he was in the act of stepping from his carriage. The King, on finding that she was insane, remembered his own frailty, spoke kindly with great pity, and tried to screen the poor creature from punishment. In 1790 John Frith, an assassin, upon attempting the King's life, and another lunatic shot at him in 1800 for which of whom the King was moved to extreme pity when he understood the nature of their malady.

George the Third had fifteen children. His favorite was the Princess Amelia. In her early days she was a lively, light-hearted [illegible] but as she grew older she became affectionate and reflective, yielding to the deeper sentiments of her emotional nature, and making herself the companion of the King in his decline. She once told the experience in life in two rare stanzas, that have been preserved:

[illegible]

[illegible]

In 1810 she was attacked with a lingering and fatal illness. Her sufferings at times were heart-rending to witness, but her singular confidence in God kept her mind serene, and brought the sweetest anticipations of another and a better world. The old King lingered by her bedside, her affectionate watcher and nurse. They talked together daily of Christ, of redemption, and of the joys of heaven. "The only hope of the sinner is in the blood and righteousness of Jesus Christ. Do you feel this hope, my dear child? Does it sustain you?"

"Nothing," says an English clergyman who witnessed these interviews, "can be more striking than the sight of the King, aged and nearly blind, bending over the couch on which the princess lies, and speaking to her of salvation through Christ as a matter far more interesting than the most significant points of royalty."

As she grew weaker he caused the physicians to make a statement of her condition every hour. When he found her sinking the old dejection and gloom began to overcast his mind again. He felt, like Lear, that he had one true heart to love him for himself alone. This love was more precious to him than crowns and thrones. The world offered nothing to him so sweet as her affection. She was his Cordelia. One gloomy day a messenger came to the King's room to announce that Amelia had breathed her last. It was too much for the King; reason began to waver, and soon took its flight. "This was caused by poor Amelia," he was heard saying, as the shadows deepened and the dreary winter of age came stealing on—

"Thought come no more, Never, never, never, never, never."

This was in 1810. The remaining ten years of his life were passed, with the exception of few brief intervals, in the long night of mindlessness, and the last eight years were still more deeply shadowed by the loss of sight. In May, 1811, he appeared once outside of the castle of Windsor, and henceforth the people saw him no more. Withdrawn from all eyes but those that watched his necessities in silence and in darkness, crownless, throneless, scepterless, there was for him neither sun, moon nor stars, empire, wife nor child. The seasons came and went; the spring-time lighted up the hills and autumn withered the leaves, the summer sunshine dreamed in the flowers and the snows of winter fell; battles were fought; Waterloo changed the front of the political world; Napoleon fell; the nation was filled with festive rejoicings over the battles of Victoria, the Pyrenees and Toulouse—but he was oblivious of all. His sister died, his beloved Queen died, his son, the Duke of Kent, died—but he knew it not. He was often confined in a padded room; his beard grew long; he seemed like a full personification of the character of Lear. Once he was heard repeating to himself the sad lines in Samson Agonistes:

"O dark, dark, dark! amid the blaze of noon,
Irrecoverably dark! Total eclipse,
Without all hope of day!"

Some incidents of this period are very touching. One day, while his attendants were leading him along one of the passages of the castle, he heard some one draw quickly aside.

"Who is there?" asked the King.

He was answered in a well-known voice.

"I am now blind," said the King, "I am very sorry, please your majesty."

"But," continued the King, "I am quite resigned, for what have we to do in this world but to suffer as well as to perform the will of the Almighty?"

He at one time supposed that George the Third was some other person than himself, who was now dead. He professed to feel great respect for the deceased monarch. He was once heard saying: "I must have a few suits of clothes, and I will have them black in memory of George the Third."

In the summer of 1811 he had some lucid intervals. In one of these he was visited by the Queen. On her entering the room she found him singing a hymn, and playing sweetly upon the harpsichord. When he had finished singing he knelt down and prayed. He invoked a blessing upon the Queen, his children and the nation, and concluded with a petition that God would avert his own dreadful calamity if it was the divine will; if not, that he would give him resignation to bear it. One morning he heard the bell tolling at Windsor.

"Who is dead?" he asked.

"Mrs. S——, your majesty."

"Mrs. S——? She was a linen draper. She was a good woman, and brought a cheerful face to the fair of God. She has gone to heaven, and I hope I shall soon follow her."

As the world receded, leaving him nothing but solitude, he fancied that the angels came to visit him and to minister unto him. Old friends long dead came back again; they wandered about his lonely rooms and sat down in the empty chairs. They clustered around him at the time of prayer. His heart was ever turning to the past, to the friends of more than a half century before. The following passage from Lord Eldon's speech upholds the intense spirituality that in his partly lucid intervals was ever present in his mind:

"The King had been allowed to preside over the State council. It was agreed that if any strong feeling of disorder should appear during the sitting, Sir Henry Halford should, on receiving a signal from me, withdraw. I recall him from his seat, and accordingly, when his mind appeared to be addressing itself to the settlement of a past expectation, when he had long survived, Sir Henry observed: 'Your majesty has, I believe, forgotten that' [illegible] he beheld many years ago.

"'True,' replied the King; 'there is a God to answer and to the world in general, let me not to live.'"

Music seemed to collect his thoughts and soothe his feelings, and the piano and harpsichord were his favorite instruments. In 1811 he for the last time made the selection of pieces for a grand sacred concert. It comprised Handel's tuneful passages descriptive of madness and blindness, the lamentation of Jephthah on the loss of his daughter, and the list ended with God Save the King. The performance of the last moistened all eyes, after what had gone before.

Thus passed the last ten years of the monarch's life, in a gradual decline, until an obscurity lighted by occasional gleams of reason and always full of the keenest pathos, until, in 1820, the great bell of St. Paul's announced his final release.

The popularity of George the Third was largely due to his humble piety, and to his familiarity with his poorer and meaner subjects. Each of these characteristics was the result, in a measure, of his mental misfortunes. It was because the King never dared to forget that he was a man that the people always loved to remember that he was a King. The Theatre.

It is related of Sydney Smith that once, on entering a drawing-room in a West End mansion, he found it lined with mirrors on all sides. Finding himself reflected in every direction, he said that he "supposed he was at a meeting of the clergy, and there seemed to be a very respectable attendance."

"Now, George, before you go and play," said his mother, "are you quite sure that you know the lesson Prof. Borax gave you to learn?"

"Oh, yes, mamma." "Well, now, tell me what causes heat without light?" "Pickled peppers!"

There are four good mothers who have four bad daughters: Truth hath hatred, prosperity hath pride, security hath peril, and familiarity hath contempt.

Our Young People.

THE WIND.

I glow, I blow,
By sands and snows
I rift the rocks asunder,
I scale the skies,
I beg the life,
And play with flash and peal

The organ's tone
It is mine own,
In all its varied diction
When creasy rest
Receives the chord
I exhaust the benediction.

And I salute
The lover's flute,
To flutter soft caresses
Then mild and meek
I coy his cheek,
And flutter in her tresses.

Where'er I trifle glow
I stir the rose
To sweet perfume and [illegible]
And when the bird
Am I more heard
Than when I listen in the leaves.

I fill the leaves,
I strike the spheres,
And move the mute to [illegible]
The waves I ripple,
Smite the tides,
And wrest new life in the ocean.

How to be Cheery.

I said if there were only a recipe, a sure and certain receipt for making a cheery person, we would all be glad to try it. There is no specific recipe, and perhaps if there were it is not quite certain that we would all try it. It would take time and trouble. Cheeriness cannot be taught, like writing, "in twenty lessons," nor analyzed and classified and set forth in a manual, such as "The Art of Polite Conversation," or "Etiquette Made Easy for Ladies and Gentlemen." It lies so deep that no surface rules of behavior, no observation even so minute of what it is or is not, does or does not do, can ever enable a person to "take it up" and "master" it, like a trade or a study. I believe that it is, in the case, a good gift from God to one's birth, very much dependent on one's body, and a thing to be more profoundly grateful for than all that genius ever accomplished. This is natural, spontaneous, inevitable cheeriness. This, if we were not born with it, we cannot have. But next best to this is deliberate, intended and persistent cheeriness which we can create, can cultivate and can so foster and cherish that after a few years the world will never suspect that it was not a hereditary gift, handed down to us from generations. To do this we have only to watch the cheeriest people we know and follow their example. We shall see, first, that the cheery person never frowns—or, if he minds, never says a word about small worries, vexations, perplexities. Second, that he is certain of sympathy in other people's gladness; he is heartily ready to be glad of every bit of good luck or joy which comes to his fellow-people. Thirdly, he has a keen sense of humor and never lets any droll thing escape him; he thinks it worth while to laugh, and to make everybody about him laugh; at every amusing thing no matter how small, he has the laugh and a good one ready to laugh too, and tries to make everybody share it. Patience, [illegible] hopefulness—these are the three most manifest traits in the cheery person. But there is something else which is more an emotion than a trait, more a state of feeling than a quality of mind. This is lovingness. This is the secret, so far as there is a secret, of real power to influence people, which does not consist in the mirth of the cheery person, which doth good like a medicine.

Someone once asked a group painters, whose pictures were remarkable for their exquisite and beautiful colorings: "Pray, Mr. ——, how do you mix your colors?"

"With brains, sir," growled the painter. His answer spoke a truth. All men [illegible] have the colors he uses, but no one produced the colors he produced."

So I would say of cheerfulness. Patience, sympathy and humor are the colors; but patience may be mere fidgetiness and reticence, sympathy may be wordy and shallow and selfish, and humor may be only a sharp perception of the ridiculous, only when they are mixed with love, three tuneful keys do we have the strong, good cheer of genuine cheery people. *H. The Heathen Boy.

Not many years ago, as a lady was living in the Vergede of her house in Bermuda, a single ray came through the opening in the hedge, which was overgrown with [illegible]

"Does Jesus Christ live here?"

It was a boy about twelve years of age, his hair matted with filth, and bristling in every direction like the quill of a porcupine, and a dirty cloth of cotton was wrapped in a most shrewdly manner around his person. "Does Jesus Christ live here?" he asked, as he leaned up the steps of the verandah.

"What do you want with Jesus Christ?" asked the lady.

"I want to see him and confess to him."

"Why, what have you been doing that you want to confess?"

"Does he love me?" he continued, with great emphasis. "I want to know that. 'Dongo!' Why, I tell lies, I steal, I do everything bad, I am afraid of going to hell, and I want to see Jesus Christ, for I heard one of the Longyees say that he came to save us from hell. Does he live here? Tell me where I can find him?"

"But he does not save people from hell if they continue to do wickedly."

"I want to stop doing wickedly," said the boy; "but I can't; I don't know how to stop. The evil thoughts are in me, and the bad deeds come of evil thoughts. What can I do?"

"Nothing but come to Christ, poor boy, like all the rest of us," the lady softly replied; but she spoke this last in English; so the boy only raised his head with a vacant look.

"You cannot see Jesus Christ now,"

she added, and was answered by a sharp, quick cry of disappointment. "But I am his friend and follower," said the lady, at which the face of the little listener brightened, and she continued: "He has told me in his word to teach all those who wish to escape from hell how to do so."

The joyful eagerness depicted in the boy's countenance was beyond description. "Tell me, O tell me! Only ask your Master to save me, and I will be your servant for life. Do not be angry. I want to be saved. Save me from hell!"

The next day the little boy was introduced to the little bamboo schoolhouse in the character of "the wild Kareen boy;" and such a greedy seeker after truth and holiness had been seldom seen. Every day he came to the white teachers to learn something more concerning the Lord Jesus and the way of salvation; and every day his eagerness increased, and his face gradually lost its indescribable look of stupidity. He was at length baptized, and commemorated the love of that Savior he had so earnestly sought. He lived awhile to testify his sincerity, and then died in joyful hope. He had confessed," and had found a Deliverer from those sins from which he could not free himself. The lady also has since died, and she and the wild Kareen boy have met in the presence of their common Redeemer.—Moravian.

The Refiner.

There was once a little piece of gold lying child in the earth. It had lain there so long that it thought it should never be used, and it said to itself: "Why do I lie here? Why am I not picked up that men may see me shine?"

One day a man dug it up and looked at it, and said: "There is some gold in this lump. I must take it to the refiner." When the refiner got it he threw it into a smelting-pot, and heated his fire to melt the gold. As soon as the little piece of gold felt the heat of the fire it began to tremble, and cried: "I wish I had lain quietly in the earth." But the fire grew hotter and hotter, till at last the gold melted, and left all the earth part of the lump by itself.

"Now," said the gold, "my troubles are over; now I shall shine." But its troubles were not over yet. The refiner took it once more, and began to hammer it into some shape. "Alas," said the gold, "what trouble it is to be ill! If I had been dross or common earth I should not have been put to all this pain." "That is true," replied the man; "if you had been dross you would not have had all this pain; but then you would not have become what you are now—a beautiful gold ring."

The piece of gold is a little child, the dross or common earth means the child's faults and weaknesses, and the Refiner—He sends trials and troubles to us to make us good and strong, and to take away our weaknesses and faults. Pain is one of the child's friends. If we bear it patiently these will make us better and gentler. Next time you have to bear pain say to yourself: "Jesus is taking away my faults; I must be patient."—Words for Children.

A Children's Parson—Birdie was only four years old, but she had already been taught that God loved her, and always took care of her. One day there was a very heavy thunder storm, and Birdie's sisters and mamma ever had by their sewing, and drew their chairs into the middle of the room, pale and trembling with fear. But Birdie stood, close by the window watching the storm with bright eyes.

"O mamma! aren't that [illegible]" cried, clapping her hands with delight as a vivid flash of lightning burst from the black clouds, and the thunder pealed and rattled over their heads.

"It is God's voice, Birdie," said mamma, and her own voice trembled.

"He talks very loud, don't he, mamma? Suppose it's so deaf Betsey can hear, and the other deaf folks?"

"O Birdie! dear, come straight away from that window," said one of her sisters, whose cheeks were blanched with fear.

"What for?" asked Birdie.

"Oh! because the lightning is so sharp and it thunders so loud."

But Birdie shook her head, and, looking over her shoulder with a happy smile on her face, lisped out: "If it hurted it wouldn't be lovely! 'Tis God makes it lighten, and he'll take care of me. I ain't a bit afraid, to hear God talk, Maizy."—Sunday School Times.

"What am I made of?" asked a little girl, fresh from her Sunday school lesson, as she essayed to show all her knowledge to a younger sister. "I don't know," was the honest answer. "What does mamma sweep up from the floor?" was the next speaker's next trial in the Socratic method. "Pins, needles and hairpins," was the prompt but unexpected response.

A Syrian convert to Christianity was urged by his employer to work on Sunday, but he declined. "But," said the master, "does not your Bible say that if a man has an ox or an ass that falls into the pit on the Sabbath day he may pull him out?" "Yes," answered Hayeb, "but if the ass has a habit of falling into the same pit every Sabbath day, then he may, should rather fill up the pit or sell the ass."

The London Academy announces that the American Palestine exploration which has charge of the survey of the country lying east of the Jordan has been broken up, and that its chief, Col. Lynch, has returned to New York. A large collection of photographs of portions of the country has been made, and some places heretofore very doubtful as to locality are said to have been identified.

Not Coming to the Help of the Lord.

The curse of Meroz was bitter because they came not to the help of the Lord against the mighty. The great conflict is going on now. The Lord is waging war against sin and against the powers of darkness. The agencies of evil were never more active, never more formidable than at this time. It is against the mighty that the forces of Christianity are directed. Not to come to the help of the Lord is to help the cause of his enemies. The sin of not doing, on the part of the professed friends of Christ, may be the greatest of all sins. They are in a position to know their duty, and their indifference and neglect dishearten and weaken the hands of those who are in the midst of the contest. To be mere spectators, where they ought to stand shoulder to shoulder with their hard-pressed brethren, is a crime.

And yet the attitude of thousands who profess to believe the gospel is like that of Meroz. While others, like Zebulon and Naphthali, jeopard "their lives unto death in the high places of the field," they remain, like Reuben, among the sheep folds, or, like Dan, in his ships. Like the inhabitants of Meroz who were content to share in the results without incurring the perils, they feel a certain interest in the progress of the gospel, while they shrink from the labor and sacrifices by which this progress is to be effected. When we count up those in any community or congregation who are at the front in working for Christ, the number is comparatively small. Write down the names of subscribers to a collection for missions, and not one-half of those on the church record will be found among the contributors. Large numbers stand aloof and willingly permit a devoted few to bear the burden, and to sustain the hand-to-hand conflict with sin. Against the blight of ignorance, intemperance, gambling institutions, and other forms of vice and covetousness, the church of God is arrayed, but there are thousands who are idle and unconcerned spectators. Professedly on the Lord's side, they do not come to his help. They leave the battle for others to fight. Well-wishers to the truth, they do nothing for its triumph.

This is a sad loss to Christianity—the not coming to the Lord's help of the vast company who might rapidly turn the tide of battle, and soon fill the earth with millennial peace and glory. If all who name the name of Christ could be brought into the field, with their influence, gifts and possessions, the wilderness and the solitary place would be made glad, and the desert would rejoice and blossom as the rose.

It was for a sin of omission that Deborah calls for a bitter curse upon Meroz. It is a fearful thing to be guilty of not doing our duty. Whether it be cowardice, love of ease, or a fancied inability, the sin remains. We have been called to the battle, the trumpet has given no uncertain sound, the hosts of good and evil are marshaled, the conflict rages, the world's salvation is at stake, and bitter is the curse that rests upon any who would shun the burden and peril of the fray.

The curse upon Meroz was denounced after the victory—it is in the song of triumph, and connected with the lofty and jubilant strains which celebrate a decisive victory. Although Israel was delivered, and the Lord's arm had wrought salvation for his people, the guilt of those who did not come to his help was not thereby lessened nor forgotten. Christ's gospel will triumph at last. The unfaithfulness of some may delay the conquest of the earth, and retard the grand consummation, but all enemies will be put under the Savior's feet, and finally vanquished. But those who came not up to the help of the Lord will have no share in the triumph. Their condemnation will be sounded along with the notes of joy which announce and commemorate the final victory of Christ and his gospel.

To the consecrated Christian it is a privilege to be permitted to help in the work of God, and to share in the results. That God should condescend to ask his aid, and to allow him to stand in his army against the mighty, is an honor, and not a hardship. Love makes the duty a pleasure and a constant delight, and gratitude makes it a path of brightness and joy. No real Christian will stand back where work is to be done for Christ. He will not draw back in the time of need, when he is wanted to oppose worldly vices, and to rise up against evil-doers. He will be on the Lord's side, so clearly and decidedly that there will be no question in the minds of any concerning the position that he occupies.

Letters to a Young Preacher.

MY DEAR NEPHEW: The spirit of vanity, which was said to be the besetting sin of the clergy, shows itself in other forms than those of boastfulness. And as preaching is a preacher's principal business, of course these other forms are connected with this main matter. I told you before that a sermon is in some very important respects unlike other public addresses. Consequently, while in some sense it is amenable to the ordinary rules of such addresses, yet it is not, like them, wholly fettered and bound down by those rules.

You must never forget that the Holy Ghost is a factor in the production of a sermon. Now in his action upon the soul or intellect the Holy Ghost is not a mechanical power come down upon the human spirit, and moving it, as a lever moves a block; or working with it, like a lever and a pulley work together to move a block. But the Holy Ghost is a living, dynamic force, which comes into the spirit of man like light and heat into a body of air; or rather the fresh, living blood of a healthy person is infused into the veins of another person, feeble and dying. Thus entering as a principle of life, the divine Spirit never acts contrary to the laws of man's mind, but always in harmony with them, quickening his perceptions, intensifying his sensibilities, vivifying and animating all the faculties and energies of his spiritual nature, refining, purifying and elevating them. Whether the intellect is in the habit of thinking in forms grammatical or ungrammatical, and of expressing itself in methods elegant or awkward, it matters not. The accidents of birth, rank, education, neither invite nor repel the Spirit of God. They neither arrest his work in the soul, nor prevent the effect of the combined energy of the workman and his Master upon the congregation of hearers. In his sovereignty he appoints to this office whom he will—sometimes the "weak," sometimes the "wise," but never destroys in that choice the free action of the mental laws of any. He never makes the "weak" a "wise" man, nor the "wise" a "weak" man. He neither adds nor subtracts a power, nor alters the constitutional arrangement of those he finds. Intending to make the most that can be made of his chosen agent, he prescribes as a condition of his co-operation that the man preserve his peculiar spiritual nature entire, and undisturbed in its natural and habitual modes of thought and expression, and submit that nature, thus preserved, to his inspiration and control.

Some churches, not understanding this matter, refuse to receive and ordain men not educated, as, for instance, your Cousin Theophilus, who, though very deficient in early literary training, can out-preach as the phrase goes nine-tenths of their ministers. The reason he can out-preach them is that, without knowing it, perhaps, at least in its deepest philosophy by yielding himself to the Holy Ghost, with his peculiarities of mind and heart—with his habits of thought and feeling undisturbed—he embodies in his spiritual life and ministry the very law without which there can be no success. I heard you once laugh about the way he "flings his adjectives, verbs and adverbs about;" but you know he can out-preach you. This you were just enough to acknowledge, and you thought it was a mystery. But it is no mystery at all. While you are in the pulpit the fear of Blair and Coppee are before your eyes, and you are selecting words and parsing sentences all the time, and are consequently hampered by a consciousness of self. Theophilus, however, never thinking of words, abandons himself to the inspiration of the Spirit of God, and in that act of abandonment conforms to the true condition of divine guidance and illumination. Judged by the rules of the art of public speaking, his discourses are inferior to yours; but judged by the law that governs preaching, they are grand and powerful sermons, notwithstanding the grammar is often wrong and the rhetoric at fault.

I have stated the manner of the Spirit's indwelling and the condition of his assistance, and brought up the case of Theophilus in order to show you that a preacher must be natural. Whether he is educated or not, he must be himself, and nobody else, or fail of the aid of the Holy Ghost, which is to fail of being a preacher at all of the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. And now, my dear boy, let me say that whoever deliberately purposes to plagiarize another man's sermon, in whole or in part, or to imitate his tone of voice or manner of gesticulation, by that purpose contravenes this law, and cuts himself off from all divine aid and support. He may read beautiful essays, or declaim fine orations, but preach the gospel he does not; nor can he so long as that purpose is unchanged.

I am not now speaking about the crime against the moral law involved in plagiarism. Nor am I speaking of the crime of imitating God's servant, which in this case adds to the sin of plagiarism the more awful sin of cowardly surrendering one's manhood, and of putting indelible contempt upon God's embassador by changing that embassador into a miserable ape. But I am speaking of a sin behind these—a sin against the person of the blessed Spirit—of an offense against the law which defines the condition upon which he gives and continues his aid. That condition is that you be yourself, and submit yourself to him. If plagiarism and aping did not involve the deepest degradation of your better nature, and were not sins against the moral law, you see there can be no possible place for them so long as the relations of the preacher are properly adjusted to the Holy Ghost. Now, my dear nephew, false views are slowly creeping into our church and ministry on the subject of preaching. A premium is everywhere put upon fine elocution and glittering rhetoric; and you are in danger. But, remember, the moment you buy "five hundred skeletons and sketches," and copy from this or that book, or intone and gesture like this or that famous man, that moment the Holy Ghost leaves you, and you are no longer a gospel preacher. Affectionately yours,

UNCLE JOHN.

Dean Stanley on the Wesleyans.

At the recent unveiling of the monument erected in Westminster Abbey to the Revs. John and Charles Wesley, Dean Stanley said, according to the report of the Watchman:

It would have been his desire that such an opportunity should have been marked in a more solemn and emphatic manner than under present circumstances he felt himself equal for. It had been his hope that on that day or on the following Sunday he should have expressed at length the obligation which the Church of England, which England itself, and which the church of Christ owed to the labors of John and Charles Wesley. That was, at the present, for him impossible; he felt that he could not now throw himself into the subject with that wholeness of heart which would be essential to do it justice. On some future occasion, perhaps, they would allow him to take the opportunity—it might be on the occasion of one of the anniversaries connected with the lives of the two brothers—to discharge the duty which it was still his hope and intention to fill. But he would briefly on that occasion say one or two words directly in connection with the erection of that monument. If he remembered rightly, Dr. Johnson's proposal was more modest than that which had actually taken place. On the occasion to which he referred, he thought all Dr. Johnson asked for was a monument of Charles Wesley, as having been connected in his earliest youth with Westminster School, and as one of England's sweet psalmists and poets. But he was met with the remark from himself: "If Charles, why not John?" and accordingly the two brothers were united together, and, if the poet had been somewhat overshadowed by the preacher, he trusted that neither in Westminster Abbey nor elsewhere would any English churchman, or any citizen or any Nonconformist, have cause to complain. As they would presently see, when the monument was uncovered, John Wesley was represented as preaching upon his father's tomb; and he (the dean) had always thought that that was the parable which represented his relation to their own national institutions. He took his stand upon his father's tomb—on the venerable and ancestral traditions of the country and the church. That was the stand from which he addressed the world; it was not from the points of disagreement, but from the points of agreement with them in the Christian religion that he produced those great effects which had never since illed out in English Christendom. It was because of his having been in that age which he was inclined to think had been unduly disparaged—because in the past century he had been the reviver of religious fervor among their churches—that they all felt they owed a debt of gratitude to him, and felt that he deserved to have his monument placed among those of the benefactors of England. Dr. Johnson had referred to those afflictive circumstances which made it impossible for him (the dean) to have spoken at greater length, or to have met them in a more hospitable spirit on that occasion; but he could truly say that one who had departed would indeed have rejoiced—as indeed he trusted she did rejoice—that such a tribute should be paid to the memory of two brothers whom she also with himself was desirous of seeing honored in the proper place. She would have rejoiced with himself that such a body of Wesleyan Methodists should have been brought into such close connection with that venerable building. Even during the suffering of that last illness she rejoiced in anything which removed the heartburnings and misunderstandings between the Church of England and the Wesleyan body. She rejoiced to mention by name those Nonconformist and Wesleyan ministers whom she always welcomed with all courtesy and charity under their roof and within those sacred walls. He must invoke their sympathy, and he would ask their co-operation in carrying on the work which was still left for him to do—the work of promoting charity and good feeling and generous appreciation among the different branches of their divided Christendom. He must entreat them to make allowance in the future for the absence of that which had given promise to all he did. If he might do so, he would conclude with words which were familiar to them all and which were now especially applicable to himself:

My company before is gone,
And I am left alone with thee;
With thee all night I mean to stay,
And wrestle till the break of day.

Victor Hugo's Estimate of Romish Education.

Every American should ponder the truthful, earnest words of the foremost intellect of France, the gifted and eloquent Victor Hugo. The following is an extract from his speech in relation to the effort made, a few years since, by the Romish priests to procure an act of the General Assembly of France, restoring to the clergy the entire instruction and control of the national schools. To understand his position, we would state that before the time of Napoleon Bonaparte every school, even the primaries, was instructed by a priest, and very little was taught in them except the creed and the elements of the papal faith. The Emperor changed the system entirely, and removed every priest from the schools. The Bourbons, at their restoration, restored the priests; but the last revolution set the schools free again. In relation to a renewed effort to bring the schools under subjection to the church, Victor Hugo said to the priests:

"Ah! we know you! We know the clerical party. It is an old party. This it is which has found for the truth those two marvelous supporters, Ignorance and Error! This it is which forbids to science and genius the going beyond the Missal, and which wishes to cloister thought in dogmas. Every step which the intelligence of Europe has taken has been in spite of it. Its history is written in the history of human progress, but it is written on the back of the leaf. It is opposil to it all. This it is, which caused Prinelli to be scourged for having said that the stars would not fall. This it is which put Campanella seven times to the torture for having affirmed that the number of worlds was infinite, and for having caught a glimpse of the secret of creation. This it is which persecuted Harvey for having proved the circulation of the blood. In the name of Jesus it shut up Galileo. In the name of St. Paul it imprisoned Christopher Columbus. To discover a law of the heavens was an impiety. To find a world was a heresy. This it is which anathematized Paschal in the name of religion, Montaigne in the name of morality, Moliere in the name of both morality and religion. For a long time already the human conscience has revolted against you, and now demands of you: What is it you wish of me? For a long time already you have tried to put a gag upon the human intellect. You wish to be the masters of education. And there is not a poet, not an author, not a philosopher, not a thinker, that you accept. All that has been written, found, dreamed, deduced, inspired, imagined, invented by genius, the treasure of civilization, the venerable inheritance of generations, the common patrimony of knowledge, you reject.

"There is a book—a book which is, from one end to the other, an emanation from above—a book which is for the whole world what the Koran is for Islamism, what the Vedas are for India—a book which contains all human wisdom, illuminated by all divine wisdom—a book which the veneration of the people call the book—the Bible! Well, your censure has reached even that. I heard of a thing! Popes have proscribed the Bible! How astonishing to wise spirits, how overpowering to simple hearts, to see the finger of Rome placed upon the book of God.

"And you claim the liberty of teaching. Stop; be sincere; let us understand the liberty which you claim. It is the liberty of not teaching. You wish us to give you the people to instruct. Very well. Let us see your pupils? Let us see those you have produced! What have you done for Italy? What have you done for Spain? For centuries you have kept in your hands, at your discretion, at your school, these two great nations, illustrious among the illustrious. What have you done for them? I am going to tell you. Thanks to you, Italy, whose name no man who thinks can any longer pronounce without an inexpressible filial emotion; Italy, mother of genius and of nations, which has spread over the universe all the most brilliant marvels of poetry and the arts; Italy, which has taught mankind to read, now knows not how to read! Yes, Italy is, of all the States of Europe, that where the smallest number of natives know how to read.

"Spain, magnificently endowed; Spain, which received from the Romans her first civilization, from the Arabs her second civilization, from Providence, and in spite of you, a world, America; Spain, thanks to you, to your yoke of stupor, which is a yoke of degradation and decay, Spain has lost this secret power, which it had from the Romans; this genius of art, which it had from the Arabs; this world, which it had from God; and in exchange for all that you have made it lose, it has received from you—the Inquisition.

"The Inquisition, which certain men of the party try to-day to re-establish, which has buried on the funeral pile millions of men; the Inquisition, which disinterred the dead to burn them as heretics; which declared the children of heretics, even to the second generation, infamous and incapable of any public honors, excepting only those who shall have denounced their fathers; the Inquisition, which, while I speak, still holds in the papal library the manuscripts of Galileo, sealed under the papal signet? These are your masterpieces."

How to Build.

The Rev. John A. Broaddus, writing from Philadelphia to the Religious Herald, speaking of a new church in that city, says:

We wish to express a hearty admiration of the plan on which the church just dedicated is built. It is a semi-circle, or rather a sector somewhat surpassing a semi-circle, with the pulpit in the geometrical center, and the floor gently sloping upward from the pulpit to the circumference. Behind the pulpit is the baptistery, and over this the organ. There is an ample gallery running around the circumference—that is to say, it has the shape of a Greek theater, as may be seen in the theater of Dionysus, on the slope of the Acropolis at Athens, or in the ruins of that theater at Ephesus, in which Demetrius and his silversmiths gathered the tumultuous assembly about Paul. Some modern theaters adopt the same shape as best for seeing and hearing, and therefore many excellent people shrink with horror from the idea of building a church in that shape. But because the wise Greeks found that to be the best shape for enabling a large audience to see and hear, since sound naturally rises somewhat, instead of maintaining its force in horizontal lines, must we insist on employing a shape that is less suitable? As well say that because actors pronounce English correctly we should pronounce incorrectly.

Luther Rice once objected to the anxious bench because the "Methodists used it." Afterward, becoming much interested on some occasion, he sagely remarked that he was not prevented from praying by the fact that Methodists pray—and made the obvious application. Why should we not "get the best" as to the shape of our large churches? Besides, whence came the shape with which we are all familiar? From the Roman Basilica or courthouse. We should be slow to contend that this is a much more sacred precedent than that Greek theater.

We have for some years held these views in theory, and were glad to have an opportunity of seeing a church built on this pattern. The result seems to us admirable. A congregation of fifteen hundred could be addressed without the slightest apparent difficulty in a purely conversational tone, no one of them being more than fifty-five feet, if we remember the figures correctly, from the preacher. In a church of the common shape, and holding so many, some would have been eighty feet distant, if not more. The room also makes a very elegant and pleasing appearance.

The Pay of Preachers.

An unmarried minister, writing to The Churchman, says the New York Observer, complains that the salary of a married man in the ministry is larger, as a general rule, than that of a single man. This he thinks is wrong. His argument is this:

"It must not be assumed that unmarried men do not need rectories, and that they can as well as not board with some tavern keeper, or almost anywhere. And, moreover, it is a business principle that a man is paid for what he can do, and not because of his personal incumbrances. No mechanic would ask a man to increase his wages on account of the size of his family. No clergyman should parade his family as a part of his eleemosynary stock in trade."

This reads precisely like the talk of a man who has a "living" as a matter of business, and who has for the sake of it gone into the sacred office. He wants so much for so much. He puts it on the same footing with the tradesman who earns his pay by giving his labor. This view is purely mercenary, mercantile and worldly, and omits the only point worth speaking of in the discussion.

If the mechanical or professional principle were introduced, the whole theory of the gospel ministry, as a calling, would be destroyed. It is right that they who preach the gospel should live of the gospel, and the laborer is worthy of his hire. But to teach, as this writer does, that a minister's salary is in any proper sense "pay" for his services is a monstrous perversion of the fact and the principle. Thousands of men spend eight or ten years in study, to be qualified for this work. With such preparation, going into any secular calling, they would expect to make money. Many of them would become rich. They would be paid what they earn, and so acquire wealth. But they become pastors, missionaries perhaps. They are supported by the people to and for whom they minister. They have voluntarily renounced the pursuit of gain and now live to preach; they do not preach to live. Therefore they are willing that their temporal support should be graduated by the circumstances in which they are placed. A man with a large family needs more than a man with no family, and all right-thinking people have regard to his wants. To say that a bachelor earns just as much as John Rogers may be a matter of fact, but it is no fact which has no bearing on the subject, for neither the bachelor nor the man with a wife and nine small children is paid according to what he earns, but solely and entirely on the ground of his wants as one who is not his own, but the Lord's.

The plan proposed by Rev. J. Kern, says the Western Christian Advocate, in the article headed "Cheap Papers," on the first page of having a smaller paper made up of selections from a larger one, and issued by the same publishers at a lower price, has been successfully tried by the English Methodists. The London Watchman is a large paper issued at three pennies per number, while the Methodist Recorder is published in the same office, much smaller in size, and containing the same matter, omitting a part, at one penny per week. The subscribers can take their choice between the one-penny or the three-penny paper. Both papers are first class. There is nothing second-rate in the smaller paper except the size and price. The larger paper is issued on Wednesday, and the smaller on Thursday. This subject is worthy of the consideration of the General Conference.

A Work of Genius.

For several days past there have been crowds of people gathered in front of one of the show-windows on the Depot-story. The object of interest is a large and handsomely-framed design, in paper cutting, by Miss Mary Fechter Wilkinson, and intended for the Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. The entire piece of black paper, on a white ground, and represents Louisiana as a female form holding forth a dove. The dismantled State-house at Baton Rouge, the Mississippi river with steamboats plying on its broad surface, New Orleans and Lake Pontchartrain, and above all, the rising sun, are portrayed with wonderful beauty and power. It is, indeed, a rare work of art, entirely unique and original in conception, and executed with surpassing skill. The entire scene is cut from a single piece of black glazed paper, about eighteen inches square, with no guide but the eye, with no pattern-sketch, and with no other instrument than a pair of scissors. The cutting is laid upon heavy white Bristol board, protected by glass, and in a rich and substantial frame about two feet square. The following legend in the ornamental letter explains the picture: "Louisiana sends a dove."

BULLION AS A DOLLAR.—We have seen no silver dollars as yet, but dimes, quarters and halves occasionally flit before our eyes. It is so long since we saw them that they appeared very strange, but if they stay awhile we may get used to them. The jingle and ring of silver brings back the memories of other days. The general impression is that the silver will be hoarded, and that unless Congress hurries up the bill to issue silver dollars there will be a famine of small change soon. The only argument against a specie currency would seem to be that it fosters avarice. Paper may be just as good as silver and gold, but people instinctively cleave to the precious metals. They spend the paper money freely, while they hide away the shining coin. It is an intuition of covetousness, perhaps, and the miser must have the coin to give rest to his worship.

The Northern General Conference is getting under way. Our telegraphic news gives items. There is a strong flavor of political bias already in the body. The Indian policy of the government must be considered. Mr. Grant is a Methodist, and a distinguished layman thinks that things can be managed through her influence. It seems that some people have not had enough of this womanly influence in affairs at Washington. For the credit of the connection, we are glad to see that Gen. Fiske and others denounced this sort of meddling. Our Northern brethren would do well to attend to the business of the church, and leave the government and its treatment of negroes, Indians and Chinese to the powers that be.

Dr. Marshall, of Vicksburg, preached at the Carondelet Street church, of this city, on Sunday last. We are glad to know that he is in fine health, and abundant in labors. He is soon to visit Natchez on a preaching expedition.

Prayer is the opposite of anxious care, because in the prayer man commits the care to God.—Olshausen.

Rev. R. C. Oliver writes to the Southern Christian Advocate, about the revival at Spartanburg, South Carolina. We rejoice to learn that the students of Wofford are sharing in the outpouring of the Spirit. Bro. Oliver says:
